"...It is a singular anxiety which some people have that we should all think alike. Would the world be more beautiful were all our faces alike? were our tempers, our talents, our tastes, our forms, our wishes, aversions and pursuits cast exactly in the same mould? If no varieties existed in the animal, vegetable or mineral creation, but all move strictly uniform, catholic and orthodox, what a world of physical and moral monotony it would be.'"

Jefferson to Monsieur A. Coray, Oct 31, 1823.

"And true it is that the people, especially when moderately instructed, are the only safe, bexause the only honest, depositaries of the public rights, and should therefore be introduced into the administration of them in every function to which they are sufficient; they will err sometimes and accidentally, but never designedly,..."

Jefferson to Henry Lee, Aug 10, 1824.

"Men by their constitutions are naturally divided into two parties: 1. Those who fear and distrust the people, and wish to draw all powers from them into the hands of the higher classes. 2. Those who identify themselves with the people, have confidence in them, cherish and consider them as the most honest and safe, although not the most wise depository of the public interests."

Jefferson to Roger C. Weightman, the last letter Jefferson wrote, June 24, 1826.

"May it be to the world, what I believe it will be (to some parts sooner, to othere later, but finally to all) the signal of arousing men to burst the chains under which monkish ignorance and supprstition had permitted them to bind themselves, and to assume the blessings and security of self-government. That form which we have substituted, restores the free right to the unbounded exercise of reason and freedom of opinion. All eyes are opened, or opening to the rights of man. [The general spread of the light of science has already laid open to every view the palpable truth, that the mass of mankind has not been born with saddles on their backs, nor a favored few booted and spurred, ready to ride them legitimately, by the grace of God. These are grounds of hope for others. For ourselves, let the annual return of this day forever refresh our recollections of these rights, and an undiminished devotion to them." (The "day" meant July 4, 1826.)

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am enclosing a copy of the April issue of The Progressive and the news release based on it. I hope very much you will find it possible to make mention of this issue on your radio and television programs. This study of McCarthy in action represents a year of painstaking work, and is certainly the most comprehensive and carefully documented study of the man and the ism yet published.

I shall be glad to answer any questions that might come up in connection with this issue.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Morris H. Rubin

For Release at 11 A.M. Monday, Mar. 29

Madison, Wis.--A comprehensive, carefully documented study of the public record of Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy, Republican, published today by The Progressive magazine in his home state of Wisconsin, concluded that "this man who has made anti-Communism his political career has contributed dangerously to strengthening the Communist cause. If the Kremlin could succeed in planting one of its own agents in the Senate of the United States, it could hardly hope for greater results in creating doubt, disunity, and fear in America than it has gained from McCarthy's operations."

The Progressive's study of McCarthy, more than a year in preparation, said it was noteworthy that although he now has full investigative powers, which he did not have when he made his original charges in 1950, a $200,000-a-year budget, and a tremendous staff of investigators, "McCarthy has made no effort to prove his original charges that there were 205 Communists in the State Department, or 81, or 57. He has, in fact, made no references whatever to the original accusations which first vaulted him into national prominence."

The Progressive, which fought Communism under two generations of LaFollettes and continues on that course today under its present management, is a nationally circulated magazine published in Madison, Wisconsin. All 96 pages of its April number, which is its 45th Anniversary Issue, are devoted entirely to an examination of McCarthy's career. This special issue includes 60,000 words of documented text and scores of photostats, cartoons, and other illustrations.

The Progressive was founded in 1909 by the late Sen. Robert M. LaFollette, Sr., and was subsequently published under the direction of his two sons, the late Sen. Robert M. LaFollette, Jr., and former Gov. Philip F. LaFollette. It is now published by The Progressive, Inc., a non-profit foundation, under the editorship of Morris H. Rubin, who was formerly associated as aide to Sen. LaFollette, Jr., and the then Gov. LaFollette. Among recent contributors to The Progressive are Ralph J. Bunche, Chester Bowles, Stuart Chase, Elmer Davis, Justice William O. Douglas, Judge Learned Hand, Sen. Wayne Morse, Sen. Paul Douglas, Sen. Estes Kefauver, Sen. Hubert Humphrey, and Walter White.

Copies of this Anniversary Issue of The Progressive are available at many of the nation's newsstands or can be secured directly from The Progressive, Madison, Wis. The single copy price is 75 cents. Reduced rates are available for quantity orders.

The April issue of The Progressive, entitled "McCarthy: A Documented Record," carries on its cover this dedication: "Dedicated to the People of the United States of America Who Share Our Determination to Make the Principles of Democracy Prevail Over Communism and McCarthyism."

The 45th Anniversary Issue of The Progressive deals with every phase of McCarthy's public career, and documents its material with citations from official records, public documents, and scores of leading American, European, and Asian publications.

Separate chapters deal with McCarthy's record while a judge in Wisconsin, when he was severely censured by the Wisconsin Supreme Court and the State Board of Bar Commissioners; his wartime record as a Marine, a record which The Progressive charges was greatly distorted by McCarthy for political purposes; the curious story of McCarthy's complex financial transactions and tax troubles; a documented study of his original charges of Communism in the State Department under the Truman-Acheson regime--charges which, The Progressive demonstrates, "exploded" when the facts became available.

The longest chapter in The Progressive's April issue is a comprehensive study of McCarthy's operations as chairman of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. This chapter examines critically and in considerable detail most of the major cases brought before the McCarthy Subcommittee.

The Progressive's study records the fact that McCarthy, who brands those who refuse to answer questions by invoking their Constitutional protection as "Fifth Amendment Communists," refused repeatedly himself to testify before the Senate Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections regarding his strange financial operations, and declined the suggestion that he tell all regarding his stockmarket deals and special accounts in a lie-detector test.

Other chapters in this 45th Anniversary Issue of The Progressive include, "McCarthyism in Action--Case Studies of the Major Ingredients of McCarthyism, including Smearing the Innocent, the Big Lie, and 'Shoot First, Ask Later;'" "Striking at Freedom of the Press," an analysis of the extent to which McCarthy has sought to intimidate the nation's press by smearing his critics as local editions of the Daily Worker; "Win At Any Cost," a detailed, chapter-and-verse study of McCarthy's political activities, including documentation of the fact that when he first ran successfully for U.S. Senator he had the support of Communists, and the extent to which he now has the support of the Far Right, including Texas oil millionaires, merchants of racist hate, and especially individuals and groups who are avowedly identified with anti-semitism in the United States.

One of the most significant chapters in The Progressive's special issue on McCarthy is entitled "Sowing Seeds of Disunity." This chapter quotes President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles to show that the unity of the Western world, in the face of the Communist strategy to divide the West, is more imperative than ever. The Progressive then goes on to demonstrate by quoting from a multitude of domestic and foreign sources that McCarthy has done more than anyone else to drive a wedge between the United States and our allies.

In preparing this chapter The Progressive had special correspondents in London, Paris, Rome, Vienna, Frankfurt, Berlin, Oslo, Stockholm, Copenhagen, and Madrid compile a cross-section of reaction to McCarthy's operations among our friends abroad.

The results of the survey show that the overwhelming majority of non-Communist and anti-Communist newspapers has characterized McCarthy as a menace to Western unity and an effective instrument for the advancement of Communist propaganda.

One striking report on press reaction, prepared by Lionel Durand of Paris, former foreign editor of Paris-Presse, one of the major dailies in the French capital and more recently editor of the official organ of the World Veterans Federation, showed that "over a sample period of two months in 1953 papers of all but one political and religious complexion--conservative, middle-of-the-road, Catholic, Protestant, and independent--expressed alarm and disgust over McCarthy's operations. The one exception was the French Communist daily, L'Humanite, which alone made no direct attack on McCarthyism."

Typical of the quotations in this chapter of The Progressive's special issue is this quotation from La Croix, the French Catholic daily: "Far from being a formidable foe of Communism, McCarthy is fast becoming the precious ally of Communism.... Led by another man than McCarthy, the Committee to investigate the danger of Communism would certainly have appreciable results. Unfortunately that is not the case...it cannot be said too often how much that war (between McCarthy and the whole Democratic Party, half the Republican Party, the State Department, and perhaps even the White House) has done to America and the whole world; that war of lies, of groundless attacks, slander, and pompous declarations that McCarthy has waged with pitiless violence...McCarthy doesn't care a bit about results. What interests him is the publicity these affairs bring him."

In its concluding chapter, entitled "The Big Truth," The Progressive emphasizes the extent to which McCarthy has aided the Communist cause. The Progressive maintains that its documented material shows that:

"McCarthy has struck violently at the very principles of freedom and fair play which distinguish democratic self-government from Communist regimentation.

"McCarthy has sown seeds of suspicion and disunity among the nations of the free world at the very moment they most need unity against the threat of Communist aggression.

"McCarthy has flagrantly demoralized the civil and military establishments of our government at a time of unparalleled world crisis."

The Progressive finds in McCarthy's techniques a "successful harnessing of Hitler's concept of 'The Big Lie' to his own purposes." So successful has McCarthy been that many Americans feel that, however much they despise his methods, "we need someone to do 'the dirty work' of exposing the subversives in our midst.

"This widely held feeling might be more understandable if McCarthy were in fact exposing Communists in government and saving us from a Red plot. But fact piled relentlessly on fact in this issue of The Progressive shows that the evidence does not in any way support such a conclusion.

"In the pitifully rare cases that he has focused his sights on what may have seemed like a worthwhile target, McCarthy has so totally distorted the evidence and overplayed his hand as to render his 'revelations' less than useless. In his eyes honest mistakes, misjudgments, or misunderstandings become part of a sinister pattern of conspiracy.

"The evidence seems to us overwhelming that if we overlook methods because it is results we say we want, McCarthy has not in any measurable way contributed to strengthening the security of our country against spies and saboteurs. More than four years of hit-and-run accusations have yet to produce a single conviction of a Communist in government on evidence uncovered by McCarthy."

Said The Progressive in conclusion:

"We live in a dangerous age, and surely one of the greatest dangers that confronts us is the counterfeit philosophy of Communism and its appeal to the underprivileged of humanity. But we do not begin to meet that menace by burning books, by crushing dissent, and by creating an atmosphere of hysteria."

The Progressive quotes President Eisenhower's Dartmouth College speech of last year, "We have got to fight it (Communism) with something better," and then goes on to say: "Here is the heart of our problem in this dangerous age--the challenge to oppose Communism with something better. This we can never hope to do if we abandon our most cherished democratic principles and embrace the very methods we abhor in Communism.

"This process of diluting precisely those qualities which distinguish us from those we oppose is dangerously far advanced in McCarthyism. McCarthy's daily activities carry us perilously close to the Kremlin concepts that trial by jury must be replaced with trial by mere accusation; that honest, human error of judgment is equivalent to criminal offense; that dissenters are traitors, and that every friendly foreign nation must become our regimented satellite or suffer our wrath and reprisals.

"If we are to be true to ourselves and effective in action with others, ours must be more than a mere negative adherence to anti-Communism. A fighting faith in freedom, not cringing fear of Communism, alone will qualify the United States of America to lead the free world in the historic clash of ideologies that is the dominant fact of life in our time.

"We of The Progressive are convinced that our best chance to keep the lamps of hope and liberty burning brightly in a world hungry for light and leadership is to deal head-on with the conditions which create the doubts and fears on which McCarthy and Malenkov thrive. The first great stride down that road of hope must be to replace 'The Big Lie' of Communism and McCarthyism with 'The Big Truth' of a working democracy."

The Immorality Of McCarthyism

Bernard J. Sheil

The article below was adapted from the celebrated address by the Most Reverend Bernard J. Sheil, Auxiliary Bishop of Chicago, before the International Education Conference of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, in Chicago last month. Bishop Sheil is the founder and international director-general of the Catholic Youth Organization.—THE EDITORS

MY SUBJECT is one of which we hear a lot these days—anti-Communism. Note that I used anti-Communism. I think it is necessary that we give a little thought to just what form anti-Communism should take at this point in America's history. That all decent Americans are against Communism, I should think, would go without saying. That we are opposed to Communism, both as individuals and as a nation—and why—hardly needs an explanation.

I could tell you that Communism is morally evil because it is militantly, viciously, one might even say diabolically set against God and man. I could tell you that Communism deprives men and women of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. I could detail the bloody history of Communism as it operates in every land where it has taken hold. I could repeat the story of Communist treason in the United States. I could outline the well known attempts of the Communists to infiltrate into our great national institutions. But what purpose would be served in going over all that we know to be so bitterly true?

The problem is no longer one of alerting people to the danger of Communism. We are all aware of that danger. The problem we are facing is what do we do about it. The unsolved problem, in other words, is what constitutes effective anti-Communism. More than that, what kind of anti-Communism is moral? What kind of anti-Communism is proper in a freedom-loving country like ours? The three go together, in my mind. If anti-Communism is immoral, it is not effective. You cannot effectively fight immorality with more immorality. If anti-Communism flouts the principles of democracy and freedom, it is not in the long run effective. You cannot effectively fight tyranny with tyranny. And if anti-Communism is not effective, it is so much sound and fury, signifying nothing.

It is not enough to say that someone is anti-Communist to win my support. It has been said that patriotism is the scoundrel's last refuge. In this day and age, anti-Communism is sometimes the scoundrel's first defense. One of the noisiest anti-Communists of recent history was a man named Adolf Hitler. He was not wrong because he was anti-Communist. He was wrong because he was immorally anti-Communist; he countered Communist tyranny with a tyranny of his own. And inevitably, Herr Hitler was a dismal failure as an anti-Communist. Half of his own Germany now lives under Communism and half of Europe lives in Communist slavery. Would this be true, I wonder, if Hitler had been morally anti-Communist? If Hitler had fought Communist tyranny with democratic freedom, the world we live in—I am persuaded—would be quite different today. And I venture to say there would be less, not more, Communism in it than there is.

No Hitler has risen in America, and I think it is nonsense when foreign reporters and journalists describe us as living in a kind of Hitlerian reign of terror. We are still free, and we will remain free—let us have no doubts about that. But, it seems to me that now, while we are free, is the time to cry out against the phoney anti-Communism that mocks our way of life, flouts our traditions and democratic procedures and our sense of fair play, feeds on the meat of suspicion, and grows great on the dissension among Americans which it cynically creates and keeps alive by a mad pursuit of headlines.

How much more of this are we going to tolerate before we remember that we are proud Americans, with values of our own? If we throw away values like our tradition that a man is innocent until proved guilty, our concern for means as well as ends, our trust in our basic institutions—then we will be left with our anti-Communism, but very little else.

An America where the accused is guilty until he is proved innocent; where means don't matter, only ends; an America which has lost faith in the integrity of the government, the Army, the schools, the churches, the labor unions, the press, and most of all an America whose citizens have lost faith in each other—such an America would not need to bother about being anti-Communist; it would have nothing to lose. Such an America would have nothing to recommend it to freedom-loving men—nothing at all, not even the shining image of its victorious junior Senator from Wisconsin.

In my view, we have been victims in the last few years of a kind of shell game. We have been treated like country rubes to be taken in by a city slicker from Appleton, Wis. "Now you see it, now you don't"—the government is full of Communists; we are all in mortal danger. We hear there are 205—now we hear 81—now the voice says 57 card-carrying Communists in the State Department. We hear that Gen. Marshall is a traitor, a leader of a black conspiracy that dwarfs every other conspiracy in history. This charge is never proved, and now, a few years later, in a recent book has been gently explained away as an "exaggeration" by the carnival man's intellectual shills. Who cares about the good name of the venerable General who has given a lifetime of service to his country? The game must go on.

The Army is "soft on Communism"; another heroic general is told that he is not fit to wear the uniform. Hubbub, commotion, everybody suspecting everybody else. Our colleges are called hotbeds of subversion. Then a Communist is found decoding secret messages (only she doesn't decode messages and she isn't a Communist). Excitement galore there is, but precious few results while Communists, supposed Communists, phantom traitors, and innocent people are alike pursued from headline to headline, from edition to edition. What kind of a spectacle are we becoming anyway? What has happened to our sense of balance, our sanity—our sense of humor?

If we Americans could stand off in space and look at this foolishness—the mad, merry search for the spotlight that has been going on for the past two or three years in the name of anti-Communism, I think our native sense of humor, our ability to laugh at ourselves, to recognize that we had been taken in, would save us, if nothing else.

Anti-Communism is a serious business. It is not a game to be played so publicity-mad politicos can build fame for themselves. If someone were to tell me that the masters of the Kremlin inspired this burlesque to distract us from our real dangers and keep us from taking effective anti-Communist measures, I would have half a mind to believe him. I can't imagine what would please the Kremlin more than to turn America

Report Card

into a frantic, hysteria-ridden place, full of suspicion of an American for an American.

If the Kremlin masters wanted to weaken us—and they do—I suppose that they would be delighted to see Americans lose confidence in the integrity of their political leaders, lose confidence in the stability of their army, suspect clergymen and teachers. I imagine they would delight in seeing us lose faith in our Constitutional privileges, in seeing us ape their courtroom procedures and hound innocent little government clerks who are blown up to seem like important spies and saboteurs as long as it is good for a front-page story. Congressional committees have done good work, are doing good work, and will do more. But when they are cynically used to trap headlines rather than spies, they mock themselves—and they mock us, too.

Aside from the actual undermining of democracy that such procedures entail and the harm done to the individuals involved—and is there anyone who will deny that Gen. Marshall, to name only one, was truly injured, or is to be accounted as nothing that an honorable soldier is berated as a traitor to his duty and his country?—there is the fundamental problem that these shenanigans distract us from our real problems, including the problem of Communism. They distract us from pursuing a truly effective program of anti-Communism.

Are we any safer, for instance, because Gen. Marshall was branded as a traitor? No, we aren't. But we are a little less honorable. We have taken what a devoted public servant gave us and offered him abuse and calumny as our gratitude in his years of retirement. Are we any safer because the line between a liberal or a nonconformist and a Communist or subversive is hopelessly blurred? I doubt it. Are we any safer because nonconformity has been practically identified with treason? I think not. Do we have anything less to fear because people have been bullied by the chairman of an investigating committee and his council? I doubt it. Is America a safer place for ourselves and our children because the morale of our State Department has been blitzkrieged? Or because our fine officer corps has been insulted? Or because political controversy has sunk to a new low of name-calling? Again, I would say no.

Are we any more to be feared by the Communists because of all the hundreds of headlines the Senator from Wisconsin has piled up? I don't believe so. Just what has been accomplished? I wonder. The large-type charges almost always peter out to a back-page item after they have served their purpose: to gain a headline. But by then, our Man on Horseback is charging off in another direction—tomorrow is another day, another edition, there is need for another headline.

This kind of ridiculous goings-on is seriously described as anti-Communism. If you will pardon a very lowbrow comment, I say, "Phooey!" America today is faced with a world challenge—military, political, social, religious, the protection of its own institutions from subversion within and aggression from without. It's about time we start taking that challenge seriously and drop the cops-and-robbers game that has been going on.

In my book, if a man is truly anti-Communist, he is concerned with meeting the challenge of Communism on every level:

- He is interested, first of all, in seeing to it that conditions here and abroad are such that they don't provide a fertile breeding ground for Communism.

- He is interested in such matters as seeing to it that people get enough to eat, have decent homes, are able to raise their children in dignity.

- He is interested in measures to share the wealth of "have" nations with the have-nots.

- He is interested in breaking down the barriers that separate people—national barriers, religious barriers, class barriers.

- He is interested in making a better place of his own little corner of the world and of doing all he can to see that others are not in want.

I judge an anti-Communist—the real thing, not the cops-and-robbers version—by how well he does these things. If he happens to be a legislator, I look at his record. I see how he voted on measures, to make freedom a reality and not merely an aspiration in the lives of his own fellow citizens and of the poor of the world. By this standard, a number of famous anti-Communists, I'm sorry to say, simply don't measure up.

Communism is a military problem. I judge an anti-Communist according to his record of supporting military measures taken to hold back the Communist forces. I judge him according to how much he helped the Army do its work and not according to how much harm he did to Army morale or how many generals he has insulted.

On the question of internal subversion, I judge an anti-Communist according to how well he does the very difficult job of seeking out subversives, clearly identifying them and removing them from critical positions. I take it that a genuine anti-Communist is one who despises the court methods of the Communists. I take it he hates the Communist idea that one is guilty until proved innocent. I take it that the genuine anti-Communist is one who above all believes in the democratic procedures and is willing to stand by them, even in the face of great temptations to lose one's temper and to lose one's faith in the method of free men. I judge an anti-Communist by how well he fulfills all these responsibilties in a difficult, delicate job.

I judge an anti-Communist according to how well he succeeds in doing what he is supposed to be doing—not according to how many headlines he makes. I judge him according to how well he clarifies the difference between treason and non-conformity—not according to how well he blurs the distinction. I judge him according to how many innocent people he has helped prove inocent and how many guilty people he has proved guilty. I do not admire him as an anti-Communist according to how many guilty and innocent both leave his courtroom without his having made clear and convincing just what their status is but only fogging the issues and the reputation of innocent and guilty alike.

McCarthy's Rules of Order

Fitzpatrick in The St. Louis Post-Dispatch

II

As you can see, I take a pretty dim view of some noisy anti-Communists—one in particular, the junior Senator from Wisconsin. I do not take a dim view of them because they are anti-Communists, but because they are such pitifully ineffective anti-Communists. I hate to see anti-Communism identified with this kind of playing-for-the-grandstand.

Now I want to make clear that what I have said is my personal opinion. I am not speaking for the Catholic Church but only for myself, a citizen. Other Catholics may take a more kindly view of the public career of the junior Senator from Wisconsin and of the effect he is having on the nation. That certainly is their privilege, as it is my privilege to speak as I have.

Other Catholics may agree or disagree with the judgment I have reached. On political matters such as these, a Catholic's statement—even a bishop's—bears no more authority than whatever he can bring to it as a citizen and public figure. I know that there are many in my Church who do not agree with me on this. So be it. Time will tell which of us is right.

But although the Church takes no position, and will not, on such a matter of public controversy, the Church does take a position on lies, calumny, the absence of charity, and calculated deceit. These things are wrong—even if they are mistakenly thought of as means to a good end. They are morally evil and to call them good or to act as if they were permissible under certain circumstances is itself a monstrous perversion of morality. They are not justified by any cause—least of all by the cause of anti-Communism, which should unite rather than divide all of us in these difficult times.

The Bishop and The Senator

Saul D. Alinsky

THE EARLY Chicago traffic rush was beginning to ease as delegates filed into the Civic Opera House that morning of Friday, April 9, 1954. They came for the first session of the International Educational Conference of the CIO's United Automobile Workers. An invocational address was scheduled by Chicago's Senior Auxiliary Catholic Bishop, Bernard J. Sheil. Here and there sleepy-eyed delegates yawned as they settled into their seats for the opening. Everyone, including the UAW's officials, expected some words on the morality of the living wage; that is not what they got.

The delegates did not notice the hint of things to come in the imposing battery of photographers, motion picture cameras, and reporters overflowing the section reserved for the press. Invocational speeches are not usually hot copy, but the word had gone out over the press grapevine that something quite different was to come. What Bishop Sheil said sent newspaper editors ripping open their front pages for new headlines that were to make Bishop Sheil's name the most celebrated among the clerics of the nation. For the Bishop spoke with righteous wrath as he fired searing, specific charges which quickly moved into the headlines:

BISHOP SHEIL CALLS MCCARTHY PHONY!

MCCARTHY PHONY CITY SLICKER, SAYS SHEIL

MCCARTHY MAN ON HORSEBACK AFTER HEADLINES

MCCARTHY CALCULATED DECEIT, SAYS BISHOP

Many leading newspapers printed the full text of the Bishop's speech. Radio stations everywhere joined in carrying his views on McCarthy to millions of Americans. Almost overnight the Bishop's words became the most discussed speech of the year. Countless Americans began to ask:

Who is this Bishop Sheil?
Why did he decide to speak out on McCarthy when he did?
What was the reaction to his speech?

The Bishop is no stranger to battle. During depression days of the early thirties he saw juvenile delinquency and Communism rise because democracy was not meeting its responsibilities.

Recognizing the futility of name-calling and the general negativism of the opposition to Communism, the Bishop boldly struck out into the field of community organization. He founded the Catholic Youth Organization of America, of which he is now director-general. He knew that Communism thrived on apathy, fear, and insecurity. He struck at causes with results that are now a matter of record.

Watching the rise of fascism abroad, Bishop Sheil was quick to act at home when Detroit's Father Coughlin began to play little Caesar. On two different occasions Bishop Sheil, speaking over a national radio network, denounced Father Coughlin, saying, "He does not speak for the Catholic Church." For the Bishop hates totalitarianism of the right as well as of the left.

In 1939 he was the first Catholic prelate to appear publicly with John L. Lewis, then head of the CIO. The occasion was a white-hot crisis in the CIO's drive to organize the meat packers against the bitter opposition of the packers and other vested interests of Chicago.

The battle was rough. The Bishop's life was threatened. A bullet shattered the window of a restaurant where he was having lunch. Chicago police had to clear eight blocks between his office and the Coliseum the night of the meeting, and they assigned him a private bodyguard of 50 policemen.

Bishop Sheil doesn't care whose toes he steps on, including those of dignitaries of his church, so long as he

SAUL D. ALINSKY, sociologist and author, is an intimate associate of Bishop Sheil and had complete access to the mail received by the Bishop in response to his speech on McCarthy.

is convinced his cause is just. He has fought for organized labor. He has fought against racial discrimination. On anti-Semitism his curt comment has been, "The only Jew the Gentile has to fear is the imaginary one he has created in his own mind."

When Upton Close attacked Bishop Sheil as an apologist for Communism, he made the mistake of assuming that a Catholic Bishop would not reply to so scurrilous an attack. Bishop Sheil promptly asked for and got equal radio time. On the way to the broadcasting station he told his intimates, "When a skunk cometh into the house someone must kick it out. It is my house and I go forth to kick it out."

Close wired the Bishop in a desperate effort to make peace. But again he didn't know the Bishop. What he said on that broadcast might well have served to warn the junior Senator from Wisconsin that his chicanery and "calculated deceit" would sooner or later bring public denunciation in words every American could understand. Said the Bishop then:

"No, Mr. Close, I defy you to prove that I have at any time made any statement that could possibly be interpreted by honest, objective observers as favorable to either communism or socialism. You can make such a statement, Mr. Close, only by a nauseating disregard for fact, and a revolting violation of justice. I have never hesitated to condemn, with all the power at my command, every form of totalitarian government. And by totalitarian government I mean Fascism and Nazism as well as communism. I do not think you can truthfully say the same, Mr. Close . . ."

But most meaningful was the episode I first reported in The Progressive three years ago.

Just before Pearl Harbor the Bishop, overriding the protests of associates, went unannounced and uninvited to a mass meeting sponsored by a number of groups like the Christian Front. Many of those present were Catholics, and many of them followers of Father Coughlin, Elizabeth Dilling, and others of that breed.

Here, in a hall full of hate, Bishop Bernard Sheil rose, and for 15 tense minutes denounced anti-Semitism, white supremacy, and every other doctrine of intolerance shouted by the demagogues on the platform. The audience listened restlessly, seething with hostility.

A Torch Without Light

When he had finished, the Bishop turned and began slowly to walk out down the center aisle. Suddenly the silence was shattered by a scream of anger. It came from a fanatical old woman who stepped out and blocked the Bishop's way just as he was passing her row.

When the Clouds Roll Away

Burck in Chicago Sun-Times

"I'm a Catholic," she shrieked, "but you, you're not a Catholic Bishop. God damn you! Nigger lover. Jew lover! A Bishop! Ha! Ha! Rabbi Sheil!"

Now completely hysterical, she deliberately cleared her throat and with all her strength spat over one side of the Bishop's face. The Bishop did not raise his hand to wipe it off. By this time, most of the people were standing on their chairs. A mad roar began and as quickly died. For the Bishop, with the dignity of immortality, had turned the other cheek! He waited. The old woman froze, as did hundreds about her. Then, as though a sudden chill had gripped her, she began to shake violently. What had been a mob of snarling faces an instant before became a mass of lowered heads.

The Bishop waited another moment, then spoke softly. "Rabbi? That is what they called our Lord." He walked out in a silence of Judgement Day.

This, perhaps, may help answer the question, "Who is this Bishop Sheil?"

II

Now, why did the Bishop decide to speak up on McCarthy when he did?

The Bishop has kept a thoughtful eye on McCarthy for a long time—ever since the latter, running without repudiating the support of Communists in Wisconsin, defeated the late Bob LaFollette for the Senate in 1946. It was the conduct of the Communists that provided the margin of McCarthy's victory. The Bishop knew that the Communists, then in control of that state's CIO, were enraged at LaFollette's public warning of the aggressive intentions of the Soviet Union.

Over the years the Bishop watched McCarthy's campaign of national demoralization; his vicious attempt to destroy the reputation of Gen. George C. Marshall; his denunciation of the Democratic Party as "the party of treason," his behavior toward President Eisenhower which undermined the President's world prestige. The Bishop watched with mounting suspicion McCarthy's first attack against the U.S. Army in the case of the Malmedy massacre by Nazis of unarmed American prisoners. He noted how McCarthy's position was giving aid and comfort to Soviet propagandists abroad. He saw McCarthy antagonizing the nations of the free world whose support is so essential to our world policy. And to all this was now added the demoralizing harassment of the U. S. Army during a time of acute military emergency. All of these acts of McCarthy seemed to parallel the strategy of the Kremlin. Certainly, no top Communist agent could have done a more effective job.

The Bishop knew that in many non-Catholic quarters suspicion was hardening into conviction that the Catholic Church supported McCarthy. Bishop Sheil became deeply concerned about this issue when he saw McCarthy hire J. B. Matthews, who had publicly stated: "The largest single group supporting the Communist apparatus in the United States today is composed of Protestant clergymen . . . "

The Bishop was painfully aware of the storm clouds of anti-Catholicism gathering above America as the result of McCarthy's irresponsible operations. Bishop Sheil commented to his intimates, "Religious divisions and hatreds would also be what the Kremlin wants. What a perfect Kremlin record that man is establishing."

The Bishop watched McCarthy travel the country spreading discord. Like thousands of Americans of Irish background he flushed with anger and shame when Chicago's Irish Fellowship Club invited the Senator to address its last St. Patrick's Day dinner.

The Bishop saw much more that sickened him to his soul, until finally he decided to do what he could to rouse the American people to the danger of McCarthyism. This was the reason for the Bishop's speech—a speech whose purpose was to enlist all freedom-loving Americans to stand up and say, "So far and no further!"

III

Why did the Bishop word the charges as strongly as he did?

Because he was fed up with pontifical platitudes aimed at sin in general. He wanted this speech to be a declaration of war—couched in the specific, simple language which every American could understand. He was shocked at the popular identification of his Church and McCarthy.

What was the reaction to his speech?

Within fifteen minutes the switchboards of his Catholic Youth Organization were jammed with calls. The first deluge came in organized fashion from McCarthy's supporters. Angry denunciations included: "Bishop Sheil is a Red," "Judas Iscariot Sheil," and "He's a disgrace not only to the Catholic Church but to Ireland."

Abuse trickled away until by mid-afternoon the hostile call had become the unusual. By then a wave of approval and applause came rolling in from all over the nation.

Altogether Bishop Sheil has received 21,763 letters and telegrams, of which 409 were almost hysterical in their condemnation. Three others expressed the opinion, "McCarthy is unfortunate, but it was undignified for a Catholic Bishop to speak out as Bishop Sheil did," and 21,351 unreservedly acclaimed the Bishop's action.

Of the 21,351 letters and wires, 738 were from Catholic priests or nuns, 329 from dignitaries and ministers of the various Protestant denominations, 14 from Jewish rabbis, 14,836 from Catholic laymen, 297 from college professors in both secular and religious institutions, 78 from Army and Navy officers, 59 from newspaper men, and the balance from just about every segment of American society.

From many leading Americans came words of praise. Former President Harry S. Truman wrote: "I can't tell you how much I enjoyed the privilege of reading that speech . . . It is a dangerous situation; there is only one source from which that situation can be met at the present time, and you represent the Catholic hierarchy in this country in the best way that I know."

From Adlai Stevenson: "Bravo! My esteemed and honored friend."

From Washington the mail was heavy with the letterhead of the U. S. Senate. New York's Sen. Herbert Lehman wrote, "As always in the past you have unfailingly lifted the beacon of reason and hope for the American people. You are truly the Bishop of all America."

Arkansas's Sen. William Fulbright wrote, "Permit me to congratulate you on the finest speech I have heard about in many a day! Your speech will give many who agree with you the courage to speak up."

Montana's Sen. James E. Murray wrote, "Many Catholics in the Congress have been highly embarrassed by the methods pursued by our so-called 'anti-Red' colleagues in Congressional committees. We have been fearful that it might eventually develop into religious warfare . . . I wish to express my deep appreciation of the great service you have rendered to the nation and particularly to the Catholic people of our country . . . "

Francis B. Sayre, Jr., dean of Washington Cathedral of the District of Columbia, wrote:

"May I add my voice to the great many raised in acclamation for your statement on McCarthy. Your recent pronouncement was exactly to the point, and expressed the moral indignation that a great many American Christians feel at the unscrupulous methods used by the junior Senator from Wisconsin."

From Phillip L. Graham, publisher of the Washington Post and Times Herald: "The Bishop's greatest service was to remind us that there are forms of anti-Communism which defy God just as much as Communism defies God. Hitler, as he said, was one example. The Bishop has pointed to the central issue of today—we can fight evil without adopting evil methods."

National leaders of labor, Walter Reuther, president of the CIO, and David Beck, president of the AFL's International Brotherhood of Teamsters, sent enthusiastic congratulations.

IV

All of the 738 letters received from Catholic priests and nuns were in full support of the Bishop.

From a well-known Catholic priest who had suffered greatly under the Communists in China:

"We have waited a long time for someone like you to make such a needed, practical, unequivocal application of the principles of morality to the problems of our day . . . We are all indebted to you. Again we can hold our heads high and look our fellow Americans in the eye. The McCarthy technique is the very same technique which I saw operating in Communist China."

From a New York City Catholic priest who is loved by vast numbers of Catholics and non-Catholics for his Christianity and intellect:

"If the cool breeze of your notable address had not come from high places, we would all have died from the unrelieved humidity. Congratulations. You are saving our souls before the American public."

A well-known priest from the Middle West wrote:

"To me it has always been a cause of sad wonder that our Catholic leadership confines its efforts to administration and routine, while so many opportunities go begging for initiative and outspoken guidance, at least in recent years. For this reason it was a thrill and an inspiration to hear that you were so brave as to touch a subject thoroughly distorted just now."

'Amending' the Constitution

Justus in The Minneapolis Star

The state chaplain of the Knights of Columbus of a northeastern state wrote:

"Sincere congratulations on your wonderful, forthright talk on the extremes and the excesses of some investigators! Of course you will pay for being so honest. You will be blasted for it. But it is wonderful and refreshing to hear a Bishop speak out unafraid. I am astounded at the almost universal notion among the laymen that every Catholic priest must approve of everything Sen. McCarthy does and says."

From a priest in another state:

"Just a word of deep, personal gratitude for your intrepid re-statement of our Catholic position on the validity of the Eighth Commandment in political affairs. Surely it was imperative that a member of the hierarchy make it clear that the fair Bride of Christ has no need for scandal-mongering guttersnipes to defend her now or ever. St. Thomas Moore and Bishop Fisher must certainly take time to smile their approval and applaud your courageous pronouncement."

A well known Catholic nun, beloved for her work in education, wrote:

"Your statement will help. There is a healthy sanity about it that lifts the spirit from the fog of unreason. I trust that you may continue to offer this type of encouragement to those Catholics, and indeed non-Catholics, who need support in the stand they have taken against this un-American hoax being foisted upon our country in the name of Americanism."

Eleven nuns signed a letter which said in part, "We take new heart from your address. A statement like yours has been needed and earnestly desired for many months."

Letters and wires from both secular and Catholic institutions of higher learning totaling 297 were, with but one exception, high in their praise of the Bishop's stand. The following excerpts are representative.

From the junior Senator's home town of Appleton, Wis., came a letter from a professor at Lawrence College: "One such lucid, principled, and courageous act as yours does a great deal to redress the balance and to allow us non-Catholics to be as tolerant as we would wish to be."

From Beloit College in Beloit, Wis., a professor wrote: "We sincerely hope that there will be thousands who will take courage and join in the movement to put an end to intolerant and prejudiced and un-American activities in these times, when all the world stands in need of courageous and spiritual help."

A professor at Cornell University wrote: "As a college teacher I have seen shocking and dangerous effects upon students (because of the trends of the times and McCarthy), and as an educator and a scholar I have been confronted with numerous examples of the very harmful effects upon non-Catholic intellectuals. I do not know of anything that has so hurt Catholicism in these spheres in recent years, and that is in itself so morally wrong. Everything that you said, it seems to me, was urgently needed to be said, and was magnificently said."

From a leading Eastern Catholic college: "As a Roman Catholic I wish to express my appreciation . . . Many of us have been waiting for some member of the Catholic hierarchy to come out as you did. Many of us with children are particularly grateful."

The dean of a leading Catholic university wrote: "Your recent criticism of the methods and results . . . of the junior Senator from Wisconsin came as a most needed revelation."

From the superintendent of public schools of one of the most thickly populated counties in America and one of the largest Catholic archdioceses in the world: "My respect for you was greatly increased because of your recent speech on the conduct of the junior Senator from Wisconsin, whose un-American methods of investigation jeopardize our precious civil liberties . . . "

A Catholic woman active in the field of education in a secular school wrote: "My own Catholicism had been regarded with suspicion by some of my Catholic brethren because I did not approve of the 'methods' of the junior Senator from Wisconsin. You have clarified the moral issue and I am grateful."

V

The 329 letters from Protestant ministers and the 14 from Jewish rabbis made the Bishop tremble as he realized how the widespread identification of the Catholic Church and McCarthy had begun to fan hatred against his Church. Implicit in almost every letter was the idea that if Bishop Sheil had not spoken out as he did, many leaders in the Protestant faith would have become convinced of an unholy alliance between McCarthy and the Catholic Church. Excerpts from the following letters are characteristic of the tone of practically all of the letters in this category.

From the director of the Christ Episcopal Church of a city in Michigan: "The junior Senator from Wisconsin has been guilty of stirring up strife between Roman Catholics and Protestants in this country and I do not know of anything that would advance the cause of Communism more than that. I can't tell you what your message means to many Protestants."

From the First Congregational Church of a city in Massachusetts a minister wrote: "Frankly, Bishop Sheil, I was prepared to write off the Catholic Church as a fascist front until I and my associates read your inspiring address."

From a leading rabbi in Chicago: "McCarthy has not hesitated to use the cloak offered him by mistaken leaders, and it was extremely important for you to make clear, as you did, that Catholics, like other people, are of many minds on this or any political issue. Bless you for disengaging the moral issue from the political."

VI

The largest share of the mail, by far, came from Catholic laymen in all walks of life.

G. Howland Shaw, retired diplomat with a distinguished career of 28 years in the U.S. State Department and outstanding Catholic layman who was three times president of the National Conference of Catholic Charities and recipient of the Laetare Medal of Notre Dame University, wrote: "It is a very great pronouncement expressed with a sincerity, a force, and a clarity which put it in a special category of significance."

William P. Mahoney, Jr., district attorney of Maricopa County, Arizona, who led the successful fight to eradicate racial segregation in the schools of that state (prior to the Supreme Court decision) and a devout Catholic, wrote, "Yours is indeed a voice in the wilderness. . . Thank God, you spoke out and condemned him so devastatingly on moral grounds."

Mistaking the Witness Chair for a Pedestal

The Milwaukee Journal

Otto Spaeth, prominent civic leader in New York City and a Catholic, wrote, "Opinion among Catholics on Sen. McCarthy of course has been sharply divided from the first, but unfortunately . . . there was a false impression that American Catholicism formed a solid phalanx behind the Senator. Bishop Sheil's clearly reasoned analysis of McCarthy and his 'ism' has demonstrated not a break in the ranks but that the ranks were never there."

Charles S. Dougherty, chief justice of the Criminal Court of Cook County, Illinois, and chairman of the Americanism Committee of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, wrote: "I am thoroughly convinced that the right-thinking people of America feel as you do on this subject, and only a small fringe support McCarthy's views."

A man of the Catholic faith who is a prominent member of an American Embassy in a foreign nation wrote: "Now Americans, and particularly American Catholics abroad, can hold their heads a little higher. You did a very decent and helpful thing, and we are grateful."

A banker of a Northeastern State wrote: "It is about time some of the higher Catholic clergy took a stand on this matter instead of letting this man run wild as he has been doing without somebody coming out in a strong way, as you did . . . I have been a member of the Knights of Columbus for 38 years, and when they got Sen. McCarthy as a principal speaker last fall I refused to come. I noticed too that the Bishop of this state was not present, and the person he designated to come in his place did not show up."

There were many letters from students in Catholic universities. In one, a graduate student at the University of Notre Dame wrote:

"I have long shared views similar to those which you so cogently expressed. However, I only awaited the day when a prominent Catholic prelate would publicly proclaim that the American Church is far from unanimous in supporting the junior Senator from Wisconsin . . . "

From thousands of Catholics who sent telegrams there were two statements common to most of the wires:

"We have always believed that the prelate who would tell the truth on McCarthy would be you, and you have done it magnificently."

"Many Catholics like myself have been praying for someone like you to speak the truth on McCarthy."

Then there were many letters like this one from a retired Army general: "What you said about that city slicker from Appleton, Wis., will prove more effective and stimulating than the salvos of an entire division of howitzers; and so we thank God for having you and your quality of American patriotism."

From a retired rear admiral of the United States Navy came: "I never write letters to the editor and I am not a Catholic. But I can't help writing to tell you how wonderful your message of real Americanism was."

In the face of mounting national approval of the Bishop's speech, some of McCarthy's Eastern supporters in high places began a false rumor that Bishop Sheil was seriously ill. The idea was to cast a shadow over the Bishop's attack on McCarthy by connecting it with personal illness. The rumor reached Drew Pearson who wrote me to ask about the Bishop's health. My answer was this:

"I have just spoken to the Bishop and read your letter to him, and he has authorized me to tell you that 'I have never felt better in my life and I intend to keep my health and my profound indignation against all actions of deceit and bigotry.' "

The letters and postcards attacking the Bishop's position were characterized for the most part by anger, bigotry, hysteria, or all three. Here are some samples.

From the president of a major railroad: "With due respect to the Holy Office that Bishop Sheil holds, I think that as a Catholic, I have a right to expect that a Bishop conduct himself with the dignity befitting his high office . . . When he, a member of the hierarchy of our Church, allies himself with those who are arch enemies of the Church and therefore gives aid and comfort to those who would destroy our religion, he is a traitor to Christ. The only ones that will approve the action of Bishop Sheil in full are the publishers of the Daily Worker, Communists, atheists, and anti-Catholics, including Mrs. Roosevelt . . ."

"As for Gen. Marshall, for whom the Bishop's heart bleeds, one has only to remember the part the General played in working with the Hiss, White, Remington et al group in turning over China to the Reds, and the part the General played in the Pearl Harbor fiasco, to know that the General's hands are dripping with the blood of thousands of American youths lost in the Pacific in Korea."

"Certainly Mr. McCarthy is fighting Communism, and even though he might be reaping some personal benefits from it, he is still fighting the Church's battle in arousing the American people to the dangers of Communism in government." [Author's emphasis]

"Bishop Sheil accuses McCarthy of being a phony. I think that the Bishop in his relationships with labor leaders (including the ones to whom he spoke) has been dealing with so many phonies that he has lost his perspective and cannot recognize the true phony."

There were those who wrote:

"It was men of your type and your kind that crucified Christ—alone you are trying to do the same thing to Sen. Joe McCarthy—a great American."

"God help protect the Catholic souls under your direction. They will need it."

Then there were many who used a form postal card with red print reading:

"Destroy all Communists in America—it's either them or us!"

There were about two dozen of these cards which carried handwritten inscriptions reading: "Say! Whose side are you on anyway?" All of the inscriptions were in the same handwriting.

A scattering of letters from rural areas of Wisconsin was significant for the violent hysteria of some of McCarthy's supporters. Discussing a group of these letters, the Bishop sadly commented:

"This is madness. These words are madness. This is the stuff of the support of that demagogue!"

The words of madness were letters of this sort from a Catholic woman in Sturgeon Bay, Wis.:

"Please stick to your own profession and say a few prayers for our 'Beloved Savior,' our Joe McCarthy. God and Joe will save us from having the hammer and sickle flying over us because of the kind of destructive criticism of yours."

This is the story of a Bishop, a speech he gave, and the response it evoked. He is saddened by the knowledge that most of the violent criticism comes from fearful people. He is greatly cheered by the overwhelmingly warm response of Americans—Catholics and non-Catholics alike. He is confident of the outcome in the struggle ahead to revive America's courage and rekindle the faith of Americans in themselves and their democratic institutions.

Freedom's Most Effective Weapon

THIS ISSUE of The Progressive is devoted entirely to presenting a documented report of the public record of Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy.

Our purpose is two-fold: 1) to provide the people of the United States with the factual background to help them evaluate the public statements and actions of the junior Senator from Wisconsin; and 2) to make available to our friends of the free world authentic materials which will enable them to gain a clearer perspective of the meaning of McCarthyism and the extent to which it is at war with the finest traditions of Americanism.

The urgent need for a solid study of McCarthy's record has never been greater:

- The activities of the Senate Committee over which he presides command front-page headlines throughout the world and provide much of the material by which the world judges American policy and purpose.

- The Senator himself has become the symbol of a state of mind which has lowered our stature and dignity as a nation and reduced measurably our capacity for leadership in the struggle against Communism.

- McCarthy has struck repeatedly at the letter and the spirit of our Bill of Rights by using methods of intolerance and intimidation in an effort to create a national climate of hysteria, fear, and suppression.

- The "ism" added to his name has become a generic symbol of guilt by accusation, character assassination, the big lie, and the repudiation of our country's traditional devotion to fair play and a fair trial.

• He has impaired the functioning of some of our most important defense laboratories, and he has battered at the morale of those who administer our country's program of military defense.

• He has exercised a decisive influence, for the worse, on our civil service and our foreign service.

• He has left his mark of intolerance on the government, the churches, the schools and colleges, the literature and the press of our country.

• He has appointed himself a one-man purge squad committed to smearing and destroying those who disagree with him, and he has proclaimed to the country that he and his methods are to be the dominant issue in the political campaign of 1954.

It is in this last field of political action that the problem is most immediate, because Sen. McCarthy has announced that he plans to campaign in a number of states this year for the purpose of defeating Senators who have refused to embrace his policies. This, of course, is his privilege, just as it is the privilege of those who find his ways repugnant to fight back by exposing his record.

II

The purpose of this issue of The Progressive is to do just that by providing an arsenal of facts for those who share our abhorrence of McCarthy's political morals and methods.

We don't pretend to present McCarthy's story; he has published books on it, filled countless pages of the Congressional Record and his Committee Reports with his own views, and has had access to the press, platform, radio, and television facilities of this country to a degree unmatched by any other member of the Senate. This, unashamedly, is a reply to McCarthy—a documented reply whose every fact has been checked and double-checked, and is backed by the official records.

Readers of this special issue of The Progressive may be interested in the background of the project. In the summer of 1952, when McCarthy was running for reelection to the Senate, a non-partisan group, the Wisconsin Citizens' Committee on McCarthy's Record, published The McCarthy Record for use in that campaign.

Based on 18 months of exhaustive research, The McCarthy Record bore the sponsorship of a group of distinguished citizens—Republicans, Democrats, and Independents alike—farmers, workers, educators, industrialists, merchants, doctors, lawyers, clergymen, editors, bankers, and housewives, who were drawn together by their "deep concern for the consequences of McCarthy's conduct" and their determination "to make the truth available to the people."

The response to their efforts was an extraordinary demand for copies at $1 each. The McCarthy Record ran through three printings in a few months. The demand for copies came from every state and a score of foreign countries. A year and a half after the 1952 election, orders continue to pour in from every area of our country and from England, Sweden, Germany, France, Italy, Egypt, Israel, India, Japan, New Zealand, Australia, the Philippine Islands, and many another country.

But this demand, growing apace with the world headlines made by McCarthy's sensational charges, could not be met. The supply was exhausted long ago. The Committee that produced The McCarthy Record, formed to serve only during the 1952 campaign, has dissolved. But before it disbanded, it assigned the copyright to its Editor, who is also Editor of The Progressive.

Much of the material in The McCarthy Record—whose accuracy, by the way, was never challenged by McCarthy—appears in condensed form in this issue. It was condensed to make room for the vast amount of new material which has become available since The McCarthy Record went to press in June, 1952. Although this issue of The Progressive thus represents an up-dated version of The McCarthy Record and contains some of the original material, the sponsors of that study bear no responsibility for the contents of this issue of The Progressive.

III

We believe it is especially timely to publish this study of McCarthy's record in this year of our 45th Anniversary. Founded in 1909 by the late Robert Marion LaFollette, Sr., this magazine was dedicated from the first issue to the Biblical principle that "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." (See cut.) It has a long record of exposing and combating political doctrines and demagogues bent on diluting or destroying the great American ideals of freedom and tolerance. This has been true for four and a half decades, whether the un-Americanism were Kluxism, Communism, or McCarthyism.

Thirty years ago, in his Presidential campaign of 1924, "Fighting Bob" LaFollette repudiated Communist support in language that left no doubt of his position. Writing in this magazine, he denounced the Communists for seeking to "divide and confuse the Progressive Movement and create a condition of chaos favorable to their ends. . . . To pretend that Communists can work with progressives who believe in democracy is deliberately to deceive the public. The Communists are antagonistic to the progressive cause and their only purpose in joining such a movement is to disrupt it."

Twenty-two years later the Communists again sought to attach themselves to a Wisconsin political figure, this time with greater success. It was the campaign year of 1946; Joseph R. McCarthy was running against the incumbent U.S. Senator, "Fighting Bob's" son, Bob, Jr. The Communists, furious at LaFollette because he was even then warning his countrymen of the expansionist ambitions of Soviet imperialism, threw their support to McCarthy. Unlike the elder LaFollette under comparable conditions, McCarthy made no effort to repudiate Communist help in his campaign.

The Communists have had little to regret since they embraced McCarthy eight years ago. The factual record shows that in his hunger for headlines, the junior Senator from Wisconsin has actually strengthened the Communist cause by exploiting and magnifying tensions at home and sowing the seeds of doubt and disunity among our friends and allies abroad.

Similarly, contrast the political practices of a LaFollette and McCarthy in dealing with support from racists and merchants of hate. In the campaign of 1946, Gerald L. K. Smith, one of the country's most notorious racists, sought to attach himself to the candidacy of Robert M. LaFollette, Jr. But Bob LaFollette repudiated that support in unmistakable terms July 5, 1946:

"I want to make it as emphatically clear as I can that I absolutely and without reservation of any kind whatsoever repudiate the support of Gerald L. K. Smith and any others who preach a gospel of hate and intolerance."

In contrast, McCarthy has made no public statement repudiating the support of Smith and his breed.

In publishing this special issue of The Progressive on McCarthy's record, we are mindful of the fact that we shall be criticized by sincere and thoughtful Americans who share our repugnance for McCarthy. Their position, we suspect, will be based on their genuine conviction that we are aiding and abetting him by "giving him more publicity" and "building him up by taking him so seriously."

We can respect and sympathize with this point of view because we held it once ourselves. We abandoned it, however, when the facts proved us wrong. It is a dangerous error, we are convinced, for the forces of decency in America to fail to regard the man and his "ism" with deep seriousness. His power today comes in great measure from our failure to fight back earlier. The evidence is overwhelming that McCarthyism cannot long survive where the people are given the truth about the character of his "crusade."

The most convincing proof was the 1952 election in Wisconsin. McCarthy carried every county in the state where all or a majority of the newspapers supported him, or refused to expose his contemptible conduct, or stood silent. But he lost every county in the state in which either a daily paper or a labor weekly fought him with the facts.

Milwaukee County, by far the largest in the state, is a good example. Although it had tipped the election to McCarthy in 1946, Milwaukee turned against him by nearly 100,000 votes in 1952—mainly because the Milwaukee Journal had conducted a crusading campaign against the man and his methods. Dane County (Madison) rejected McCarthy 48,000 to 29,000, largely because of the superb exposure of McCarthyism by the Madison Capital Times.

The great hope of the professional demagogue is to avoid public exposure while he plies his trade of creating hysteria, capitalizing on people's fears, and diverting public attention from basic problems with side-show stunts. We are convinced —and the events of the recent past strengthen that conviction—that the most effective weapon against McCarthyism, as, indeed, against Communism, or any other counterfeit philosophy, is the truth.

The Judge On Trial

Wisconsin Supreme Court Accuses McCarthy of Violating State's Constitution and Laws

IN ANY great controversy the character and credibility of the principal antagonists play a decisive part. The first portion of this study is devoted to an examination of McCarthy's beginnings in public life. It is a story in which documented evidence shows that even in his first years in politics he was accused of unethical conduct, ran afoul of the highest legal and judicial agencies of his state, and was condemned by the Wisconsin Board of Bar Commissioners for a characteristic which was to become even more dominant in his career in the years to follow:

> "Knowingly and willfully placing the gratification of his personal ambition above the interests of the public and the rights of litigants."

Following his graduation from the law school of Marquette University, Milwaukee, McCarthy began his legal career in Waupaca, Wis., in 1935. Less than a year later he left Waupaca to become associated in Shawano, Wis., with Mike Eberlein, a prominent Republican lawyer, although McCarthy had already identified himself as a Democrat.

This was the year the Democrats were riding high with the New Deal. McCarthy decided to cling to his Democratic Party affiliations for a while. In August, 1936, he was elected president of the Young Democratic Clubs of Wisconsin's Seventh District, which includes eleven counties. Shortly afterward he announced his candidacy for district attorney of Shawano County on the Democratic ticket. McCarthy was defeated, and thereafter never ran as a Democrat.

In 1939 McCarthy, aged 29, announced his candidacy for judge of the Tenth Judicial Circuit, which includes Shawano, Outagamie, and Langlade Counties. The announcement of his candidacy came as a staggering blow to his senior partner and benefactor, Mike Eberlein, who had had his heart set on running for the circuit judgeship in that district. Greatly saddened by the experience, Eberlein decided against running but announced that the young McCarthy and he were no longer associated in the practice of law.

McCarthy won the election. He received 15,165 votes. The incumbent, Judge Edgar V. Werner, received 11,219 votes, and the third candidate got 9,949. Here is a description of McCarthy's first successful race, published in Time magazine, Oct. 22, 1951:

"He made few speeches, but he met every farmer in the district. His specialty was sick cows. He would get the cow's symptoms, drive on to the next farm and ask the farmer what he would do for a cow with those symptoms. He kept a dictaphone in his car, and as he drove away he would dictate a letter to the first farmer, giving the second farmer's advice as Joe's own. Both farmers would be flattered by this attention."

McCarthy served about four years altogether as a Wisconsin circuit judge. In 1941 he gained considerable state-wide attention when the Wisconsin Supreme Court sharply rebuked him for improper conduct on the bench. Marvin B. Rosenberry, highly respected Chief Justice of the Wisconsin Supreme Court, on June 18, 1941, wrote the sharp criticism of McCarthy for the Court.

Justice Rosenberry said that McCarthy had committed an "abuse of judicial power," had been "highly improper" in ordering the destruction of a portion of the record, and had, in general, created a "regrettable state of affairs."

State ex rel Department of Agriculture, Petitioner v. McCarthy, Circuit Judge, Respondent. 238 Wis. 258

This sharp denunciation of Judge

McCarthy resulted from a case in which the State Department of Agriculture had asked the court Nov. 4, 1940, to force the Quaker Dairy of Appleton to obey the state marketing law. Although the law was not to expire until Dec. 31, 1941, Judge McCarthy dismissed the case in June, 1941, after a number of postponements.

The State appealed to the Supreme Court, where it was quickly discovered that an important statement made by McCarthy in dismissing the action was missing. Judge McCarthy explained he had ordered the statements destroyed by the court reporter.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court unanimously found McCarthy's actions an abuse of judicial power.

"We are cited no authority and we find none which justifies a court in suspending the operation of a statute on the ground that it will work a hardship if it is enforced," the Court said.

"It must be concluded that the grounds upon which the trial court [McCarthy] acted did not constitute a sufficient or proper legal reason therefor and that this action constituted an abuse of judicial power."

Moreover, the Court found, "a judicial officer is required to administer the law without respect to persons so long as it is enforced. Any other course would constitute an infringement upon the powers and functions of the legislature, interfere with the operation of agencies . . . and result in advantage to persons who disobey the law."

The Court sharply criticized McCarthy for having ordered the destruction of notes he had dictated during the case—notes on which he had based his "improper" ruling.

"Ordering destruction of these notes was highly improper," the Court said. ". . . We can only say that if, it were necessary to a decision, the destruction of evidence under these circumstances could only be open to the inference that the evidence destroyed contained statements of fact contrary to the position taken by the person [McCarthy] destroying the evidence." 238 Wis. 258

The Supreme Court's shocked response to Judge McCarthy's destruction of trial records and his flouting of the law was not to be its only public denunciation of McCarthy during his career as a judge, as the report below of the case State of Wisconsin v. Joseph R. McCarthy makes clear.

Meanwhile, when McCarthy returned from his wartime service (See Pages 9-11) he early decided to build a political machine around the Young Republicans of the state. At about this time, McCarthy, the judicial records of Wisconsin show, began to grant "quickie" divorces to couples not resident in his judicial district. The records show that in several cases one of the principals, or the attorney, or both were active in supporting McCarthy's political ambitions, sometimes with cash.

McCarthy's granting of "quickie" divorces to political friends and supporters created a considerable stir in the state. Said the independent Milwaukee Journal, largest daily in Wisconsin:

"Is Wisconsin justice to be used to accommodate political supporters of a presiding judge? Are Wisconsin courts the place in which to settle political debts?"

The editorial concluded that "Judge McCarthy, whose burning ambition for political advancement is accompanied by an astonishing disregard for things ethical and traditional, is doing serious injury to the judiciary of this state."

But the most severe attack on McCarthy's legal and judicial ethics came as a result of his decision to run for the U.S. Senate in 1946 while still sitting as a circuit judge.

The basic law of Wisconsin, the State Constitution, which McCarthy swore to support, is clear in its attempt to keep judges out of partisan politics. Section 10, Article VII, of the Wisconsin Constitution reads:

"Each of the judges of the Supreme and Circuit Courts . . . shall hold no office of public trust, except a judicial office, during the term for which they are respectively elected,

Here is a facsimile of the 1936 Wisconsin election notice showing that Joseph R. McCarthy, then a young attorney in Shawano, ran on the Democratic ticket the first time he sought public office.

and all votes for either of them for any office, except a judicial office, given by the legislature or the people, shall be void." (Italics ours.)

McCarthy's term as Circuit Judge did not end until December, 1951. He ran for Senator in 1946—five years before his judicial term was to expire.

McCarthy defeated Robert M. La-Follette, Jr., for the Republican nomination by a vote of 207,935 to 202,557—a margin of 5,378 votes.

While the campaign was in progress, the Wisconsin Supreme Court was asked to bar McCarthy from the ballot because of the Wisconsin constitutional ban on judges running for political office during their term on the bench.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court concluded, however, that it had no jurisdiction in this case because it was a federal office that McCarthy was seeking in running for U.S. Senator. The Supreme Court made it clear, however, that if McCarthy were running for governor or another state office, his votes would have been thrown out and his candidacy disqualified.

In 1949 the State Board of Bar Commissioners, the official state body governing the conduct of lawyers, asked the Wisconsin Supreme Court to take disciplinary action against McCarthy for "violating the public policy of the State of Wisconsin, the Code of Judicial Ethics, his Oath of Office as Judge, and his Oath of Office as a Member of the Bar."

The unprecedented petition by the official state agency in this case which became known as State of Wisconsin v. Joseph R. McCarthy, had this to say:

"It is difficult to conceive of any conduct upon the part of a presiding judge which would bring judges into greater disrepute and contempt than the conduct of the defendant [McCarthy] challenged in this proceeding.

"The defendant [McCarthy], by his conduct, chose to defy the rules of ethical conduct prescribed by the Constitution, the laws of the State of Wisconsin, and the members of the profession in order to attain a selfish personal advantage. (Italics ours.)

"The gratification of his ambition was in defiance of the declared policy and laws of Wisconsin . . ."

Continuing, the State Board of Bar Commissioners said:

"The breach of official trust and obligation is as great when applied to a candidate for the office of United States Senator as it would be if applied to one for governor of the state.

"In either situation, to have a judge passing upon the rights of litigants appearing before him and using his judicial position and power to influence votes for his candidacy and others of his political party, constituted a violation of the State Constitution and state laws and was in direct conflict with the duties and obligations of the trust which he assumed by his Oath of Office." (Italics ours.)

After studying the petition of the State Board of Bar Commissioners and McCarthy's reply, the Wisconsin Supreme Court, although deciding against disciplinary action, made this judgment of McCarthy's conduct:

"Under the facts of this case we can reach no other conclusion than that the defendant [McCarthy], by accepting and holding the office of United States Senator during the term for which he was elected Circuit Judge, did so in violation of the terms of the Constitution and laws of the State of Wisconsin, and in so doing violated his oath as a Circuit Judge and as an attorney of law."

255 Wis. 234

STATE OF WISCONSIN

IN SUPREME COURT

August Term, 1948 State No. 17

STATE OF WISCONSIN Plaintiff,

JOSEPH R. McCARTHY, Defendant.

Brief of Plaintiff

HARLAN B. ROGERS
Counsel for the Board of State Bar Commissioners and Attorney for the Plaintiff.

12] AUGUST TERM, 1948. 243
State v. McCarthy, 255 Wis. 234.

in no way limits or affects the application of the constitution and the statutes so far as state control over its officers is concerned.

While a circuit judge may become a candidate under the laws of the United States for the office of United States senator at an election held and supervised under state law, he nevertheless does so in defiance of the laws of the state, which are not effective to prevent his candidacy, but his conduct is nevertheless a clear violation of provisions of the constitution and the statute. As pointed out in State ex rel. Wettengel v. Zimmermann, supra, those who opposed the candidacy of the defendant did not give full weight to the fact that citizens of this country are subject to two governments. It is apparent that the defendant fell into the same error.[9]

We again call attention to the fact that the constitution, sec. 10, art. VII, provides that a circuit judge shall hold no office of public trust except a judicial office "during the term for which they are respectively elected." Sec. 256.02 (2), Stats., is to the same effect.

In this [illegible] not a holder of the office of circuit judge and United States senator contemporaneously.

Under the facts of this case we can reach no other conclusion than that the defendant by accepting and holding the office of United States senator during the term for which he was elected circuit judge did so in violation of the terms of the constitution and laws of the state of Wisconsin, and in so doing violated his oath as a circuit judge and as an attorney at law.

In this connection the case of McDonald v. Carey [illegible] a place upon an official ballot. So far as we are able to see it has no bearing upon the present controversy.

Shown at the left is the brief filed against McCarthy by the State Board of Bar Commissioners asking the Wisconsin Supreme Court to take disciplinary action against McCarthy. Right above is an excerpt from the Supreme Court decision in State of Wisconsin v. McCarthy finding that McCarthy violated the constitution, the law, and his oath as a circuit judge and attorney.

McCarthy angrily demanded the resignation of the entire Board of Bar Commissioners because it dared to petition the Supreme Court for disciplinary action, but no one took this seriously. The branding of McCarthy as a lawbreaker and mocker of the Constitution he had sworn to uphold was the last official mark on McCarthy's career in Wisconsin as he moved on to the U.S. Senate. Before we turn to a study of McCarthy's career in the Senate we pause to examine briefly the story of his wartime service in the Marines.

Off to War

Some Notes on the Conflicting Stories of McCarthy's Service and the Decorations He Has Been Awarded

ONE OF McCarthy's favorite flourishes in winding up a speech is to recite an incident which he claims was a wartime experience in the Southwest Pacific. The point is never quite clear, but the story carries a powerful emotional impact for thousands whose lives have been touched by the tragedy of war.

As McCarthy tells it, it was his "task at night after we had lost a number of our boys in raids on enemy installations to sit in my dugout and write home to the young wives, the young mothers with the hope that the blow could be made to fall less heavily." The picture of McCarthy struggling over these letters in his shell-scarred dugout is an heroic one— but, like so much of the widely publicized McCarthy war record, there is considerable debate over whether the incident ever actually occurred.

For example, the official records of the U.S. Marines show that McCarthy's outfit, VMSB-235, lost altogether five officers and two men in its entire military tour in the South Pacific from January, 1943, to September, 1944. It hardly seems plausible that McCarthy could have written very many letters to young wives "at night after we had lost a number of our boys."

Much has been written and said about McCarthy's service record. McCarthy and his friends have one version. His opponents have another.

The facts are difficult to establish because many of the official records are not available to the public. As a matter of fact, McCarthy threatened the then Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Air, John F. Floberg, with drastic reprisals early in 1953 when he thought Floberg had made some of the official data available. (See Page 57).

Perhaps no Wisconsin citizen entered military service in World War II with more press fanfare than McCarthy received. On June 6, 1942, McCarthy, then a circuit judge, showed up in Milwaukee and announced to the press that he wanted to join up as "a private, an officer, or anything else in the Marines." (Milwaukee Journal.) Even some of his friends say that he selected the Marine Corps as the branch of service offering the most political advantage. In a friendly appraisal of McCarthy in the Saturday Evening Post of Aug. 9, 1947, Jack Alexander said, "It was in the cards, too, that a young public official with a good war record would have a distinct edge with the voters . . . McCarthy asked his close political friends what branch of the service they thought had more political appeal . . . The unanimous answer was the Marine Corps."

McCarthy's story of his military exploits has undergone several curious changes in the past eight years. Thus, after the war and his election to the Senate, McCarthy's biographical data in the Congressional Directory for the 80th Congress, his first term, stated that "in June of 1942 McCarthy enlisted in the Marine Corps as a buck private and was later commissioned." (Senators have an opportunity to write or approve the Directory's biographical data.)

Biographies in Who's Who In America are also presumed to have the approval of the individuals listed. McCarthy's biography in Who's Who says that he "served as Pvt., U.S. Marine Corps, 1942."

Actually, when McCarthy appeared in Milwaukee that June day of 1942 and told the newspapers he wanted to get into the Marines as a private or in any way he could be of use, he had two days earlier made formal application for an officer's commission. (Cited in Milwaukee Journal, June 8, 1952.) Official records show that he got his lieutenant's commission on July 29, 1942.

Of this much of his service record

there is little dispute: He was in training at Quantico from August to December, 1942. He spent three months on the Pacific coast and then shipped out for the Southwest Pacific. From here on the reports conflict.

'This Is Worth 50,000 Votes to Me'

The official records show that he was an intelligence officer. His campaign literature in 1946 hailed him as a "tail gunner." A public relations officer in McCarthy's squadron, Lt. P. T. Kimball, now of New York, told the Milwaukee Journal of one incident that helped in spreading the story back home that he was a "tail gunner."

"I remember a day when we were both at Munda," Kimball said, "when Joe's squadron was flying a 'milk run' to Bougainville. The job was bombing runways on old airfields to make sure the Japs didn't try to come back. It was dull duty, and the bored fliers decided to see how many flights they could make in a day. McCarthy, like other ground officers, joined in the fun to ride as tail gunner.

"As public relations officer, I wrote a form story about the 'record breaking day of bombing,' filled in the names of the men involved and sent them along slugged 'from an advance Marine base.' I forgot the whole thing till McCarthy came around with a handful of clippings from Wisconsin papers.

" 'This is worth 50,000 votes to me,' McCarthy said. 'Come, have a drink on it.' "

The conservative Washington Evening Star, in a detailed story of his war record, said on Nov. 14, 1951, that McCarthy's "Pentagon record of Marine Corps service shows no notation of his having qualified for an aerial gunner's wings or being credited with combat missions."

McCarthy has clung stoutly to his claim that he flew many missions as a tail-gunner. In his unsuccessful campaign for the Republican nomination for the U.S. Senate in 1944, a campaign pamphlet claimed "14 dive-bombing missions over Japanese positions." In his autobiographical sketch in the Congressional Directory of 1948 McCarthy claimed "17 official missions," but testifying in a legal proceeding in 1951, he said, "I was on 30 dive-bombing missions, plus liaison missions."

The "mission" question came up again in 1952 when McCarthy was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross and the Air Medal with four stars by the Navy. These are the medals furnished at the request of the applicant on a showing that he participated in a sufficient number of missions. The Air Medal is awarded for five missions and the DFC for 25.

According to Doris Fleeson, columnist for the Washington Evening Star, the armed services have handed out 1,310,422 Air Medals since World War II began and 157,974 DFCs.

McCarthy has denied that he had made application for the medals, but Miss Fleeson reported in 1952, after investigation in the Pentagon, that on Sept. 27, 1951, McCarthy supported "his request [for the awards] by what are said to be 'certified copies from his flight log book.' "

An interesting aftermath of the announcement of McCarthy's medals was the declaration of Leonard Burns, Milwaukee, who described himself as a "staunch Republican," that he was mailing his Distinguished Flying Cross and four air medals to McCarthy. Burns told the Milwaukee Journal that he was "disgusted" that McCarthy received the same awards that he had received for 30 torpedo bombing missions flown from the carrier Hornet in the Pacific.

In his letter to McCarthy, Burns asked if the Senator had threatened to expose someone in the Marine Corps "as being a Communist" in order to obtain the awards. "Joe," asked Burns, "was it necessary for you to apply for the medals? I never heard of anyone having to remind one of the various branches of the service that he was a hero and deserving of medals." Burns added that if McCarthy had really seen combat service he wouldn't "brag" about it. In replying to Burns, McCarthy seemed to concede he had applied for the medals when he said: "The rules provide how such awards shall be made, and there isn't any other way to do it." (Associated Press dispatch in Wisconsin State Journal)

Perhaps the most disputed part of McCarthy's service record is the "wound" he is supposed to have suffered during his tour of the Southwest Pacific. Some of his supporters adamantly insist that he was wounded and was awarded the Purple Heart. On Nov. 15, 1943, the Appleton Post-Crescent reported McCarthy "was wounded in one of the actions." The fact is he does not hold the Purple Heart. There is nothing in his record to show that he was wounded in action, according to information given the Milwaukee Journal by former Secretary of the Navy Dan Kimball who reviewed McCarthy's personnel file.

McCarthy denies a much publicized incident at Badger Village in Wisconsin when he was asked by some University veterans and their wives why he wore built-up shoes, which served to give him greater height. McCarthy is reported to have said that he wore the shoes because he was carrying "shrapnel in my leg." (Quoted in Anderson and May's McCarthy, p. 65.)

There is a disagreement among those who heard him about whether he said "10 pounds of shrapnel" or some other amount. There is no disagreement, however, that he attempted to create the impression that he had been wounded and that he specifically referred to the shrapnel in his leg. (Milwaukee Journal, June 8, 1952.)

On a TV program in May of 1952 in which he was interviewed by Jack Steele of the New York Herald Tribune this exchange took place:

STEELE: Were you wounded or weren't you?

MCCARTHY: Oh, yes. I had a leg badly smashed up, burned and broken. In fact, I got a citation from Nimitz based on that. Do I have shrapnel in my leg? No. I wasn't shot. It was an airplane accident.

'Liar'

"In the other corner is the Junior Senator from Wisconsin, the spy-catcher, who has yet to catch a spy, the 'warrior' given to boasting about non-existent shrapnel in his leg, the only major politician in the country who can be labeled 'liar' without fear of libel."

THE ALSOPS
New York Herald-Tribune
Dec. 3, 1953

STUART SHAFTEL (program moderator): Your file doesn't show a Purple Heart.

MCCARTHY: Now, just a second, my good friend. The files show—my file shows the complete record of McCarthy. It shows that I got a citation from Adm. Nimitz in connection with a badly injured leg. Now I don't claim that I'm a hero, you understand. I think there's nothing wonderful about being injured.

McCarthy offered to accompany Steele to the Marine Corps headquarters and go through the file with him. He never made good on that offer. Instead, McCarthy sent Steele photostatic copies of the Nimitz citation. The citation says that "although suffering from a severe leg injury, he [McCarthy] refused to be hospitalized and continued to carry out his duties as an intelligence officer in a highly efficient manner." It also commended him for "meritorious and efficient performance of duty as observer and rear gunner of a dive bomber attached to a Marine scout bombing squadron operating in the Solomon islands area from Sept. 1 to Dec. 31, 1943."

One of the Most Debated Wounds of World War II

The letter requesting this citation originated in McCarthy's outfit and was dated Feb. 11, 1944. It is signed by McCarthy's commanding officer, Maj. E. E. Munn, though, according to the records, Maj. Munn had finished his duty as commanding officer of the outfit on Feb. 10, 1944. Maj. Munn's letter contained this language:

"On 22 June 1943 Capt. McCarthy suffered a broken and burned foot and leg. He, however, refused to be hospitalized and continued doing an excellent job as intelligence officer, working on crutches. (Cited in the Milwaukee Journal, June 8, 1952.)

An examination of McCarthy's service records reveals that on June 22, 1943, the day he received the "wound," McCarthy was a great many miles away from any area in which the enemy was firing guns in anger. He was aboard the Navy's seaplane tender Chandeleur as an "officer passenger" along with the rest of his outfit being transported to the war area.

On that day the Chandeleur crossed the equator, and the usual shipboard hi-jinks marking the event occurred. One of McCarthy's shipmates, who kept a diary of the trip, was interviewed by the Milwaukee Journal. He requested that his name not be used, saying, "I'm not in favor of four-flushing, but I still like McCarthy."

"Things were so quiet [on the trip]," he said, "that the skipper, Commander Albert K. Norehouse, gave the enlisted men permission to have a mild 'shellback' ceremony on June 22, the day we crossed the equator. . .

"McCarthy was nearly through his initiation when he was hurt. He was going down a ladder with a bucket fastened to his foot when he slipped. His other foot caught on a lower rung—an iron pipe a few inches from the steel bulkhead—and he fell backward, injuring his foot."

McCarthy's friend went to the sick bay to see how "Joe was getting along."

"They had decided that three bones were broken," he said, "and I watched them put a cast on his foot. It was either then, or that night when we were drinking together, that Joe said to me, 'Don't tell Maybelle [McCarthy's girl] I broke my foot in this silly way.'

"Joe kept going despite the cast, too. My diary shows we were quite drunk together three nights later and he did what work there was for him to do. But an intelligence officer in a squadron like his was mainly concerned with talking to pilots back from strikes, so Joe had little to do until his outfit began action against the enemy. And that was ten weeks after he was hurt."

This version of McCarthy's "war wound" was checked by the then Secretary of the Navy Dan Kimball with official records in the Pentagon. McCarthy's personnel file shows no evidence of any wound—only the prank injury of June 22, 1943, which occurred ten weeks before his squadron went into action.

In August of 1944, McCarthy returned to Wisconsin, where he was a candidate for the Republican nomination for U. S. Senator while still in military service.

After his defeat in the primary, he went back to the Marine base at El Centro, Calif., and alternated his duty between there and the base at El Toro. On Oct. 19, 1944, he asked for a four months' leave of absence to return to Wisconsin and his judicial duties. The request was rejected, but he was told he could resign. On Dec. 11, 1944, the man who had told the Milwaukee Journal on June 4, 1942, "I want to join for the duration," handed in his resignation.

Still ahead of American forces in the Pacific were these bloody dates:

Feb. 19, 1945: The Marines suffered 3,650 casualties in the first 48 hours as the struggle for Iwo Jima got underway.

April 1, 1945: The battle of Okinawa began.

Back in Wisconsin, McCarthy launched a different kind of battle. More than a year before the election in which the people of Wisconsin would pick a U.S. Senator, a "Fighting Marine" and "Marine Tail Gunner" had already started the campaign against Sen. Robert M. LaFollette, Jr.—a campaign which was to exploit his career as a wounded Marine for all it was worth. Actually, McCarthy's record in military service was neither more nor less heroic than that of countless other Americans; it was the exaggerations and distortions, for political purposes, which drew widespread criticism and resulted in a variety of conflicting stories.

Seeing through McCarthy

"In the long run, the American people can be trusted to see through a man like McCarthy, and they will not entrust great responsibilities to those who identify themselves with him. Once upon a time a great American said, 'You can fool all of the people some of the time, and some of the people all of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time.' We have sufficient confidence in American democracy to believe that is still so."

The Strange Story of McCarthy's Complex Financial Transactions and Tax Troubles

NEXT to his sensational charges of Communist influence in government (analyzed in subsequent chapters), the phase of McCarthy's public career which has attracted most attention is the singular story of his financial operations. It is a story of tax troubles, market speculation, over-extended bank loans, investigations by the Senate, the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice, and the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and a curious capacity of the Senator's for making thousands of dollars quickly in fields in which he was active as a Senator.

The quest for the documented facts leads the investigator over many trails, but perhaps the simplest starting point is the celebrated Lustron case. This case, along with other aspects of McCarthy's conduct, was thoroughly investigated by the Senate Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections of the Committee on Rules and Administration, which encountered but could not solve six riddles in McCarthy's hectic financial operations.

The Subcommittee conducted its inquiry pursuant to a resolution introduced Aug. 6, 1951, by the then Sen. William Benton, Connecticut Democrat. The resolution called for an investigation "to determine whether expulsion proceedings should be instituted against Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy." Its final report was signed by two Democrats, Sens. Thomas C. Hennings, Jr., Missouri, chairman, and Carl Hayden, Arizona, and one Republican, Sen. Robert C. Hendrickson, New Jersey. Much of the material in this and the succeeding chapters is based on that report, which will be referred to as the Hennings Report.

It was Feb. 28, 1949, that McCarthy held a press conference in his Senate office and distributed a 94-page booklet entitled How to Own Your Own Home Now. The publisher was the Lustron Corp. of Columbus, O., and some 40 pages in the middle of the book comprised an article by McCarthy.

McCarthy said he had written that article and edited the rest of the booklet. He declined to tell what his fee had been.

"It's embarrassingly small," he said. "Besides, I have to split it with 10 people who helped me."

Mar. 1, 1949

But what McCarthy said that day did not agree with what he said later. When he filed his 1948 Wisconsin income tax return, he showed that he had received $10,000 from the Lustron Corp. in royalties for the booklet.

All this could seem a simple matter: a Senator wrote an article and received $10,000 for it. But the official records show it was not that simple.

Consider first the Lustron Corp. It was a manufacturer of prefabricated steel houses, located in Columbus, O., and headed by Carl Strandlund. Lustron was financed largely by the government's Reconstruction Finance Corp., which made seven loans totalling $37,500,000 to Lustron between June 30, 1947, and August 29, 1949. In the period of the 80th Congress (1947 and 1948) "McCarthy was a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, which had jurisdiction over both the RFC and the housing agencies, as well as the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which Committee was also interested in some of the Lustron operations."

The Wisconsin Senator had maneuvered his way into control of a joint Congressional committee on housing that conducted extensive hearings in 1947, and he had announced that he would produce a book on that work. Thus far, we have a housing firm operating on huge government loans and a Senator studying housing and anxious to produce a book about it.

Out of McCarthy's study came suggestions for the Housing Act of 1948 that gave the RFC $50,000,000 for loans to manufacturers of prefabricated houses like Lustron. "This provision," Senate investigators found, "gave the RFC additional funds and authority to make its third Lustron loan of $7,000,000 on Feb. 14, 1949, as well as the subsequent loans. The Act also provided for an increase in the salary of the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Administration."

A few days after the bill became law, McCarthy asked Raymond Foley, the Administrator whose salary was increased under the new law, to help Miss Jean Kerr, then a member of the Senator's staff and now his wife, with research on a housing manuscript. Foley and his staff cooperated, and the article that was to become part of the Lustron booklet began to take form.

Meanwhile Lustron's president, Carl Strandlund, had been trying to win friends and influence Congressmen to think well of Lustron. He had first met McCarthy at a race track, Strandlund told the Senate investigators May 14, 1952. McCarthy, he swore, was "a complete stranger" to him when the Senator came over to his box at the Laurel race track in September or October, 1948. Strandlund cashed a check "in the hundreds" for McCarthy that day. It was shortly afterward, in October, 1948, according to Strandlund, that McCarthy proposed to sell Lustron a manuscript on housing. The paper was "not yet in publishable form," Strandlund was told, but nevertheless McCarthy put the price at $10,000. Without consulting his public relations advisors and other officers of his firm, Strandlund agreed to the price.

He wasn't happy about the transaction, he told Senate investigators. "It scared me some," he testified. "I made it a point never to confer, to discuss, to contact or concern myself with Sen. McCarthy from that point on."

The Senators pressed Strandlund about his purpose, and the Lustron promoter told them that "it was a 50-50 deal" involving purchase of material on housing and McCarthy's name as the author.

But Clyde M. Foraker, of Columbus, O., who later became receiver for the defunct Lustron firm, bluntly called the deal "unethical," and added:

"I'll bet he wouldn't have gotten the $10,000 if he hadn't been a Senator."

Baltimore Sun
June 16, 1950

Sworn testimony placed before the Senate investigators showed that McCarthy desperately needed Lustron's $10,000 because Matt Schuh, head of the Appleton (Wis.) State Bank, had written McCarthy that state bank examiners were demanding his loan account be cleared up. Said the Senate Committee:

"To appreciate the urgency of the hasty negotiations with Lustron to obtain a $10,000 fee on Nov. 12, 1948, it is essential that we consider Sen. McCarthy's over-extended debt position at the Appleton State Bank, which became quite desperate during September through November of 1948. Although the Bank had notified him that it was essential that his total bank debt of $72,943.96 be reduced, or his collateral liquidated, Sen. McCarthy did not use the Lustron fee for this purpose but bought stock with it which he pledged as additional collateral for the loan. The Lustron check for $10,000, dated Nov. 12, 1948, issued to 'Joseph R. McCarthy,' was endorsed in blank over to Wayne Hummer & Co., the Senator's broker, to purchase additional stock of the Seaboard Airlines Railroad.

"It may or may not be significant that the Seaboard Airlines Railroad was also financed by the RFC and at the time indebted to RFC in excess of $15,000,000. Our inquiry developed that during October of 1948, Sen. McCarthy purchased 1,500 shares of Seaboard common stock at an average price of $22 per share; that this railroad had been in receivership since 1930, came out of reorganization in 1946 to be operated under a voting trust arrangement through April 1, 1951, and that the Lustron fee was used to increase McCarthy's holdings to 1,950 shares . . . While it is not known whether Sen. McCarthy's information with respect to this stock had anything to do with his position as a United States Senator, it is interesting to note that Senator McCarthy suggested speculation in Seaboard stock to others."

The reference was to a letter of Mar. 10, 1949, in which McCarthy wrote John Price, a California broker, telling of his own investments in Seaboard and stating "I am enclosing herewith letter which I today received from the president of the Seaboard Air Line (sic) Railroad," which appeared to indicate some special relationship with that official.

In 1951, McCarthy sold 1,000 shares of Seaboard for a net profit of $35,614.75. The Appleton Bank returned 700 shares which it no longer required as collateral when he paid up his loan.

In concluding its report on the Lustron deal, the Senate Committee asked these questions in its Report:

"Are there other instances where Sen. McCarthy received some consideration from persons or agencies that he was in a position to assist or hurt in his official position as a U. S. Senator?

"How can Sen. McCarthy justify acceptance of a $10,000 fee from Lustron which, in effect, was a fee being paid out of public funds at a time when Lustron's continued operations and financing depended entirely upon the RFC, and which agency, in turn, was dependent upon the Congress and, more particularly, the Banking and Currency Committee, of which he was a member, for its continued authority and operation?

"Did Sen. McCarthy take advanage of Lustron's sensitive position and its need for continued government financing to induce its president, Carl Strandlund, to pay a fee, set by him at $10,000, for a manuscript which was neither finished or in publishable form?

"Was there any connection between Sen. McCarthy's recommendations of government aid for pre-fab manufacturers and his subsequent contacts with Lustron, which culminated in his receiving $10,000 for the sale of his manuscript?

"Was there any relationship between Sen. McCarthy's position as a member of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee and his receipt of confidential information relating to the stock of the Seaboard Airlines Railroad, which was indebted to the RFC for sums in excess of $15,000,000?

"Does Sen. McCarthy consider that his requests for the active assistance of Housing and Home Finance Administration in the preparation of a housing manuscript which he intended to sell, after he had recommended legislation to increase the salary of its administrator, to be ethical?"

Hennings Report
Pages 18-19

Sen. McCarthy declined to answer the Senate Committee's questions or to discuss these transactions in any way. He refused to testify before the Senate Committee investigating his fitness to serve in the Senate, although he has contended on scores of occasions that witnesses summoned before his own Committee must be presumed to be guilty if they refuse to testify on the ground that their evidence might incriminate them.

The 'Pepsi-Cola Line'

The $10,000 fee from the Lustron Corp. and the extremely profitable transaction in Seaboard Airlines were not the only help that McCarthy received from men whose business affairs involved his official duties. A Pepsi-Cola official also helped McCarthy financially at the time when the Appleton State Bank, prodded by Wisconsin examiners, was worrying him about his bank debts.

Herblock in The Washington Post

"I Have Here in My Hand—Oops"

McCarthy was a member of a sugar subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee early in 1947. He insisted that sugar rationing be ended. Washington newsmen took to calling the new Senator "the Pepsi-Cola kid." The Pepsi-Cola firm, seeking to expand against big competitors, wanted a lot more sugar than it was being allowed. McCarthy's claim that there was no shortage of sugar didn't square with official reports of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, which advocated retention of controls. But that didn't deter the Senator.

While McCarthy was taking that tack on sugar controls, he was also facing the problem that his Appleton bank was pressing him for money. On Nov. 28, 1947, the bank president wrote him. Instead of the usual "Dear Joe," this letter began "Dear Senator." It said:

"I am again compelled to write you with reference to your $53,000 loan which is held by the bank, secured by collateral. You no doubt are familiar with the quotations on this collateral and that the margin is under 20%, which you will recall was the margin agreed upon when we made the loan.

"The directors have suggested that I take steps to sell the collateral and pay the loan, but before taking such steps, I thought because of past relationships I would write you first and see if there were any suggestions you might have. If you could arrange to have this loan reduced by between $15,000 and $20,000, I am quite sure that I could convince the directors to continue to carry the loan. I thought possibly with your contacts it might be possible for you to make such arrangements. . ." (Italics ours)

Hennings Report,
Exhibit 94, p. 245

The Senator had "contacts," and it was "possible to make such arrangements." Within a week he had discussed the matter with Russell M. Arundel, Pepsi-Cola lobbyist, and Arundel had endorsed McCarthy's note for $20,000; that note was forwarded to the Appleton bank. The transaction led the Senate Committee to ask:

The exhibits on this page indicate the range of McCarthy's financial operations. The letter above authorizes Jean F. Kerr, then his secretary and now his wife, to withdraw $10,000 from his savings account at her pleasure. The two exhibits on the right show the wide-ranging character of McCarthy's bank deposits, the one at upper right showing small deposits from a variety of individuals deposited to McCarthy's special account, while the item below shows the deposit of $10,500 to McCarthy's savings account. Both accounts were studied by the Hennings Committee. See Page 17.

"Was it proper for Sen. McCarthy, while serving on the Banking and Currency Committee and its Subcommittee on Sugar, to seek and accept the endorsement on his Bank Note for $20,000 by a person vitally interested in sugar legislation?

"Was there any relationship between Arundel's endorsement of Sen. McCarthy's $20,000 note on or about Dec. 8, 1947, and Sen. Dear Matt:

I have just received your notation to the effect that my two notes are due. I wonder if you would make out renewal notes for me to sign, as well as notes for the interest. I would very much prefer paying the interest by note if this isn't too objectionable to you. I have two reasons for wanting to pay by note instead of cash — one of which is that I don't want to use this interest as an income tax deduction this year, and if I pay by cash I can't hold it over until next year as a deduction.

I wonder if you might have any idea as to what the second and even more important reason is.

Sincerely yours,

In conclusion the Senate Committee said:

"Sen. McCarthy's acceptance of a $20,000 favor from the Washington representative of the Pepsi-Cola Co. at the very time he was attacking the government for its manner of handling sugar control makes it difficult to determine whether Sen. United States Senate COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Matt Schuh
President, Appleton State Bank
Appleton, Wisconsin

Dear Matt:

I have just received your letter of June 2.

I note that the notes held by the bank are for a total of $59,000 and the collateral $61,000. As you know, the $59,000 includes the note upon which I have been paying $200 per month. I shall be able to continue paying at least that much until this obligation is taken care of.

I wonder, Matt, if under the circumstances it would be possible to have this note, which I believe still totals around $6,000, transferred to one of the other banks without collateral in view of the payments being made thereon. This, of course, would still run us slightly short of 20% on the balance, but I can make that up somehow.

I know it is asking a hell of a lot of you to try to arrange this matter, but you as you know it is of unlimited importance to me, and if you can possibly work this so as to remove the $6,000 note from the obligation, it would ease the situation tremendously. I could, of course, give whatever bank is holding the $6,000 note an insurance policy assigned to it as collateral in case I should get killed. In view of the fact that I have at least 3½ more years in the Senate, this obligation at $200 per month should be taken care of before the end of this term.

Now, damn it, Matt, don't just decide it is a lot easier to call out my collateral and get rid of your ulcers, but extend yourself and see if you can't do something about this smaller note. I don't know how I shall be able to return the favor, except perhaps by waiting until you retire and then get a Republican President to appoint you a Special Advisor to the Senate - on financial matters.

I wonder if you would also have Larry send me a list of the collateral so I can see how he arrives at the figure of $61,000.

Sincerely, (and hopefully)

JOE McCARTHY

The letters above and left show how McCarthy's wide-ranging financial operations, involving a number of stock market deals, kept him peppering the president of his home town bank for extension and transfer of his loans. The Hennings Committee, in its Report, raised the question, among others, "Whether loan or other transactions Sen. McCarthy had with the Appleton State Bank or others involved violations of the tax and banking laws?"

McCarthy had diverted to his personal use funds given to him for his public efforts.

The Senator solicited money from industrialists and others who told him they believed in what he was doing and would like to help. Some or all of such contributions, according to the Senate inquiry, appeared to have been deposited in a special account which McCarthy opened May 5, 1950, in the Riggs National Bank of Washington. (See photostat, p. 15.)

On Sept. 7, 1950, he opened another account in the National Savings and Trust Co. of Washington. His first deposit was $10,500. It included $500 in currency, a $7,000 check on another District of Columbia bank, and a $3,000 check on a Michigan bank. Senate investigators established that the two checks came from Mr. and Mrs. Alvin M. Bentley. Bentley was a former foreign service officer who is now a Michigan Congressman. He told Senate investigators that he lent the $3,000 to McCarthy on a five year note, expecting that the money would be used for McCarthy's efforts to show that there were Communists in the Truman Administration. The investigators did not learn whether Mrs. Bentley's check was a loan to McCarthy.

Three weeks after McCarthy opened the account with the Bentley checks, he authorized withdrawal of $10,000 by Miss Jean Kerr, who used the money to buy a draft to Henry J. Van Straten. Van Straten was an old friend of McCarthy and former county superintendent of schools at Appleton, with an office in the courthouse where McCarthy had sat as a judge. Van Straten deposited the check at Wayne Hummer & Co., the Appleton broker that handled McCarthy's security dealings, and proceeded to use it to buy soy beans for future delivery.

Within several months, the transaction had produced a $17,500 profit. Wayne Hummer & Co. paid Van Straten $10,000 from the account. That check was endorsed to McCarthy, and in turn was deposited in his personal account at the Riggs bank in Washington.

The Senate Committee couldn't decide whether McCarthy had been a partner of Van Straten or whether the school administrator, in a burst of good fortune, had been a successful buyer of soy beans when his previous record in stock purchases had shown frequent losses. Nor was there any explanation of why McCarthy opened a special account, let Van Straten use $10,000 for a month, and then put the money in his personal checking account.

Van Straten repeatedly declined to give the Committee information needed to provide an accurate picture of the transactions, and McCarthy, of course, refused to discuss this or any of the other of his stock-market deals. The Committee could not refrain from pointing out that Van Straten, trading on his own, lost heavily in 1949 and 1950. "In contrast to these losses totaling $7,043.27, a profit of $17,354.50 was made between Oct. 3, 1950, and Jan. 2, 1951, on the transactions financed by Sen. McCarthy with money obtained from the Bentleys."

The Committee raised these basic questions:

"Why would Senator McCarthy borrow money for his fight against communism, as indicated by Mr. Alvin Bentley, the source of $3,000 of the $10,000 involved, for the purpose of depositing it in a savings account?

"Was the $7,000 obtained from Mrs. Bentley on the same date also to aid Sen. McCarthy in his alleged anti-communistic fight?

"Was the $3,657.00 obtained from Mrs. Bentley in March 1951, and deposited by Sen. McCarthy in his general account on Mar. 28, 1951, for the same purpose and, if so, why was it deposited in his general account?

"Did Sen. McCarthy give Mrs. Bentley notes for the monies obtained?

"Why did Sen. McCarthy give Mr. Alvin Bentley a five-year non-interest-bearing note for $3,000, when Mr. Bentley was willing to donate that amount and did it have any bearing with respect to the payment of future income taxes?

"If Sen. McCarthy obtained at least $3,000 of the $10,000 involved, as reported by Mr. Bentley, for his anti-communistic fight, was not this money, in a sense, a trust fund?

"Was the $10,000 Van Straten commodity speculation actually for the benefit of Sen. McCarthy, or a partnership account?

"Why would Sen. McCarthy speculate with funds advanced to him for his anti-communistic drive, or loan such funds to a friend for speculative purposes, particularly when the friend's only experience in the commodity market was limited and unsuccessful?

"Did Sen. McCarthy have confidential information with respect to the trend of the soybean future market? (Just prior to the transaction in question, the Commodity Exchange Authority of the Department of Agriculture conducted an investigation of alleged soybean market manipulation involving, among others, a number of Chinese traders.)

"Was the $10,000 Wayne Hummer & Co. check, dated Nov. 27, 1950, which Van Straten endorsed over to Sen. McCarthy a return of the original investment and, if so, why was it deposited in Sen. McCarthy's general account?"

McCarthy resolved none of these questions. There were unanswered questions about the special account at the Riggs bank, too. Deposits in it consisted largely of stacks of checks or money orders. There were 62 checks totalling $1,692.20 in a deposit of May 11, 1950, for example, and 63 more checks totalling $1,312 five days later.

A Threat to Sue—And Then Silence

Investigators learned that there were also major increases in the bank deposits of Ray Kiermas, McCarthy's administrative assistant, that appear to coincide with contributions to the McCarthy effort. The Senate Committee Report said:

"Even though Sen. McCarthy has refused to cooperate with the Subcommittee, the list of the payees of these checks is not being included in this report—lest it be said that an attempt was being made to expose Sen. McCarthy's method of operations and his informants. However, at least without explanation, no connection could be established between many of the disbursements from this account and any possible anti-communist campaign, including, for example, a check to the Collector of Internal Revenue for $73.80 on Oct. 2, 1950, at a time when Sen. McCarthy's Riggs general account appears to have been overdrawn. . .

"It is of possible significance that the deposits to Sen. McCarthy's general account at the Riggs National Bank and the deposits to the account of his Administrative Assistant, Ray Kiermas, at the same Bank, increased contemporaneously with the advent of the 'public phase' of Sen. McCarthy's 'fight' to expose communists and communist treason in government."

Kiermas has been with McCarthy ever since the Senator went to Washington, and until he was married the Senator lived in Kiermas' home.

Mrs. Kiermas was on McCarthy's payroll, too. The Senate investigators reported that they would have liked to ask whether Mr. and Mrs. Kiermas had independence of action when they provided security for some of McCarthy's loans, and whether their employment was in return for political and financial support.

For a time it appeared that Kiermas might act on the implications of the Senate Committee's comments. When the Committee Report was issued, there were not sufficient copies to meet the public demand. As Republican associates of McCarthy took over control of the Senate, there was no authorization of an additional printing. Americans for Democratic Action, an independent organization, reprinted the Report. Kiermas promptly indicated he might sue the organization.

With McCarthy at his side, he announced that he would hold ADA responsible for "false and libelous material." ADA officials announced that they would welcome a suit by McCarthy, and that they would waive the defense that the Senate Report was a privileged document. Kiermas had seemed so confident, and McCarthy so eager to support his aide, that a court action seemed probable. But Kiermas went back into McCarthy's inner office, and McCarthy went off in another direction, and they said no more about suing ADA.

On another occasion Kiermas flatly refused to answer questions regarding the special bank accounts. On Apr. 7, 1953, McCarthy's aide was summoned to give a deposition in Drew Pearson's $5,100,000 damage action against McCarthy and eight other persons. As the Baltimore Sun reported Apr. 8, 1953, Kiermas said "he had no knowledge of what was done with contributions McCarthy received from various sources after he had charged in 1950 that the government was heavily infested with Communists." Questioned "at length about his own purported financial transactions, Kiermas on advice of counsel refused to answer."

Once again McCarthy had avoided official examination just as completely as other men use the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution to avoid answering questions they prefer not to answer.

McCarthy's Brushes With The Tax Collector

Sen. McCarthy began his stock market adventures four years before he went to the Senate, while he was a young circuit judge in Appleton. He went into the market with $2,200 in 1942, using a 40% margin account with Wayne Hummer & Co. in his home town. The Senate investigation found that "supported by sensational advances in security prices, he was enabled to build up his initial investment to such substantial proportions that in 1943 he realized a net profit of $40,561.67."

Almost no one knew of that profit at the time. When McCarthy filed his state income tax return for 1943, he didn't mention it. Instead, from the Marine Air Station at El Toro, Calif., where he was then on active duty, he submitted a statement stapled to a tax form. The statement read:

"During the entire year of 1943 I was serving in the armed forces of the United States, during which time I spent no time in Wisconsin. I had no property in the state and received no income from within the state (having waived collection of my salary as Circuit Judge). Therefore, I assume it is unnecessary under the present laws to file a return. If you do not so understand the law I shall be glad to file a return."

A local tax collector, knowing that the young judge had gone into the Marine Corps and that his service pay was tax exempt, could understandably believe that McCarthy had no other income. Most men in service had none. But McCarthy knew that he had netted $40,561.67 on the sales of stocks, and had received dividends of $1,293 for a total taxable income of $41,854.67. Not only did he know about that money, but he used much of it for further stock deals after he returned to the West Coast from his Pacific service with the Marines.

McCarthy didn't mention the matter to tax authorities then, or after coming back to his seat as a judge and going on to win the 1946 Senate election in Wisconsin. It was not until Feb. 20, 1947, that the Wisconsin tax assessor began action to collect McCarthy's 1943 taxes.

On Oct. 3, 1944, McCarthy had written J. L. Tibbetts, Assessor of Incomes at Appleton, concluding: "Will you please send the necessary blanks so that I may file my state income tax return for 1943?" This seemed to indicate that he intended to report the 1943 income, but the record shows no further correspondence until 1947, after the federal government announced on Feb. 13 that it had assessed him an additional $3,500 on his income for 1943.

On Feb. 20, 1947, Tibbetts wrote McCarthy, who was now in the U.S. Senate, "The Department now has knowledge that you had income for the year 1943 other than pay for military service." The tax official instructed McCarthy to file a return for that year.

McCarthy replied Mar. 13, 1947, asserting that it was his understanding of the law that he need not file, but that he would do so if the Department did not agree. "I am forwarding you a brief on what I consider the law," he said.

On Apr. 8, Tibbetts replied, saying the brief had not been received. McCarthy's retort was that the brief must have been lost in the mails. In its place he sent a memorandum claiming that though he was a Wisconsin circuit judge on leave in 1943, he was not a resident of the state that year.

On Apr. 24, Tibbetts wrote McCarthy: "I am advised by the legal division that it is of the opinion that you were a resident of Wisconsin in the year 1943 and therefore required to file a return of your income for that year with the Wisconsin Department of Taxation."

McCarthy was given a 30-day deadline to file and pay. On May 5 he objected to the 30-day deadline, calling it "arbitrary in the extreme." Finally, however, he paid a tax of $2,459.54 and $218.32 interest.

It is a curious fact that although he was out of the state and the country a large part of 1942 and 1944, McCarthy did not claim nonresidence for those years, but only for 1943—the year he made his $40,561 killing in the stock market. In 1944, when he was a candidate for U.S. Senator while still in military service, McCarthy was most anxious to claim Wisconsin residence.

McCarthy was back in the states late in 1944, and soon was playing the market again. He deposited $11,250 with a California broker in October and his 1944 tax returns show that as a returned Marine, he was a busy investor. And when he left the Marine Corps in January, 1945—seven months before the war ended—he went back to Appleton for a new round of market deals.

On Feb. 13, 1945, the Appleton State Bank loaned McCarthy, again a judge, $1,800 with which he opened a checking account. On July 13, it loaned him $50,086 and five days later there was still another loan of $23,876. McCarthy also withdrew $15,960 from his account with his broker, Wayne Hummer & Co., and this went with the bank's $73,962 into big security purchases.

By December, McCarthy had cut his bank loan down to $20,364, but on December 21, 1945, the Appleton State Bank loaned him $149,176.06 to buy 5,000 shares of Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific Railroad common stock that were pledged as security. On that day, McCarthy's debt to the bank became $169,540.70.

The bank, under Wisconsin law, could legally lend no more than $100,000 to any one individual. On Dec. 26, the Appleton bank transferred $69,540.70 to a loan ledger sheet in the name of H. F. McCarthy, a brother.

Wisconsin income tax returns, open to public inspection until last year, showed that McCarthy paid $620.22 interest to the Appleton State Bank in 1945. His salary as a judge was $7,397 and his income from interest and dividends was $1,834. But his net taxable income, according to his return, was $6,951. He paid state taxes of $151.44.

That sum was not large, but it was $151.44 greater than his total state taxes for the next four years. His income for those years was $66,938.59, but he wrote this all off in losses and interest payments. He reported no taxable income at all in 1946, 1947, 1948, and 1949. Yet at the same time—his last year as a judge and his first three years as a Senator—the Appleton State Bank carried him on its loan accounts for sums ranging from $50,000 to $70,000.

When interest was due, McCarthy's payments were often credited against principal and new notes were issued in the amount of the interest. Funds in the names of his brothers or Ray Kiermas, a Washington assistant, were often used for security.

"The overall picture," according to the Senate Committee Report, "shows that he was loaned a total of approximately $248,000 during the period Feb. 13, 1945, to Sept. 14, 1951." Some of his transactions were termed "flagrant disregard for the state banking laws and the Federal Reserve Board regulation."

McCarthy 'Deliberately' Tried To 'Thwart' the Inquiry

Although the Hennings Report, unanimously approved by its three members, raised serious questions about McCarthy's fitness to serve in the U.S. Senate, no action of any kind has been taken on the report. The parent Senate Committee, the Committee on Rules and Administration, came under the chairmanship of Sen. William Jenner, Indiana, when the Republicans assumed control of Congress in January of 1953. Jenner, a close friend of McCarthy's, saw to it that, despite considerable demand, no additional copies were ordered. He also fired virtually the entire staff of the Hennings Subcommittee.

McCarthy himself made no effort to have his name cleared. One of his Senate colleagues, the late Sen. Charles W. Tobey, New Hampshire Republican, after referring in an NBC radio talk March 23, 1953, to McCarthy's methods as "wrong, and un-American," declared that the Report, which attacked "McCarthy's integrity and honor, lies in a Senate pigeonhole and you can't get a copy to save your soul." Tobey challenged McCarthy to speak up on the serious questions raised by the Hennings Committee.

"If McCarthy were a man," Sen. Tobey said, "he would have demanded an open investigation. We in the Senate ought to be above reproach."

But McCarthy had refused on six separate occasions to appear before the Hennings Committee to discuss the charges made against him.

"For reasons known only to Sen. McCarthy," the Hennings Committee said, "he chose not to accept this course, but to charge that the allegations were a smear and that the Committee was doing the work of Communists."

"Such action on the part of Sen. McCarthy might appear to reflect a disdain and contempt for the rules and wishes of the entire Senate body, as well as the membership of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections."

"The record . . . leaves the inescapable conclusion that Sen. McCarthy deliberately set out to thwart any investigation of him by obscuring the real issue and the responsibility of the Subcommittee by charges of lack of jurisdiction, smear, and Communist-inspired persecution."

At one point during the Committee's investigation, McCarthy had attacked the Committee's work with such violence that the group asked the entire Senate to decide whether the investigation should continue. The Senate voted 60-0 in favor of a resolution which, in effect, expressed confidence in the investigating committee and gave it the green light to continue in its inquiry.

The Hennings Committee filed its findings with the Justice Department and the Treasury Department for possible legal action on McCarthy's financial operations and his tax troubles. On Oct. 16, 1953, Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell, Jr., announced that the Criminal Division of the Justice Department could find no basis for legal action in the areas under its jurisdiction, but that the Treasury Department still had under investigation possible violations of the income tax law. Brownell said he did not know the status of the Treasury investigation.

In his statement announcing that no action would be taken against McCarthy, Brownell said:

"It is our conclusion that the evidence fails to establish the commission of any public offense defined by federal statute."

The Baltimore Sun reported on Oct. 17, 1953, that Asst. Atty. Gen. Warren Olney told a press conference that "McCarthy himself had not been questioned by Justice Department investigators, including FBI agents who were assigned to the case." Thus, McCarthy, who refused six times to go before the investigating subcommittee to answer questions concerning these financial deals, was again spared the responsibility of explaining his activities. Actually, Justice Department investigators gave the object of their inquiries such a wide berth that he didn't, he said, know he was being investigated.

Commenting on Brownell's statement announcing dismissal of charges by the Criminal Division, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch said editorially:

"Mr. Brownell may have washed his hands of the detailed report of the factual statements, documents, and photostats submitted to him by [the Senators who investigated the charges]. He has not heard the last of it. One of the things he has not heard the last of is the fact that Sen. McCarthy, who was always questioning other people, would not appear before the subcommittee and answer questions about himself. No one, in effect, ever hid more slickly behind the Fifth Amendment."

Collier's magazine editorially urged that McCarthy take a lie-detector test on the unanswered questions raised by the Hennings Committee. "The volume of evidence presented certainly suggests that Sen. McCarthy is a person more earthy and devious than the Shining Knight who has appointed himself to be the St. George who will slay the dragon of unrighteousness single-handedly. We think the questions which this evidence presents urgently require answers. It seems only right that McCarthy, as an advocate of lie-detecting, should set an example by letting the man wrap the blood pressure recorder around his arm, and telling all." (Collier's, May 9, 1953.)

McCarthy refused to tell all, or any of the story, with or without a lie-detector. The man who has accused so many of guilt if they refuse, under the Fifth Amendment, to testify, remained silent on the charges.

THE SIX UNRESOLVED QUESTIONS

These are the six questions raised by Sens. Hennings, Hendrickson, and Hayden during their investigation of McCarthy's financial affairs—questions which except for a blanket, unsupported "no" were left unresolved by McCarthy's refusal to accept the Committee's invitation to testify.

HENNINGS

- Whether under the circumstances it was proper for Sen. McCarthy to receive $10,000 from the Lustron Corporation?
- Whether funds supplied to Sen. McCarthy to fight Communists or for other specific purposes were diverted to his own use?
- Whether Sen. McCarthy used close associates and members of his family to secrete receipts, income, commodity, and stock speculation and other financial transactions for ulterior motives?
- Whether Sen. McCarthy's activities on behalf of certain special interest groups, such as housing, sugar, and China, were motivated by self-interest?

HENDRICKSON

HAYDEN

- Whether loan or other transactions Sen. McCarthy had with the Appleton State Bank or others involved violations of the tax and banking laws?
- Whether Sen. McCarthy violated federal and state corrupt practices acts in connection with his 1944-46 Senatorial campaigns or in connection with his dealings with Ray Kiermas?

THE NUMBERS GAME

The Original Charges of Communism and How The Facts Exploded Them

FOR three years after taking his oath of office as U.S. Senator in January, 1947, McCarthy tried fitfully, and in a variety of fields, to become better known. But half way through his term of office he was still one of the least publicized members of the Senate. It was not until he decided to try out "Communism in the State Department" as an issue that McCarthy shot into national prominence. He launched this campaign for headlines in February, 1950.

As the Saturday Evening Post (Aug. 19, 1950) told the story:

"On last Feb. 9, Sen. McCarthy traveled to Wheeling, W. Va., to repeat a well-tested anti-Communist speech. But on this occasion the Senator inserted into his talk the following addition: 'I hold here in my hand a list of 205 persons who are known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party, and who nevertheless are still working and shaping the policy of the State Department.' "

The very next day after making this sensational charge, McCarthy was in Salt Lake City, Utah, where he repeated the charge, but reduced the number from 205 to 57 Communists.

"Last night," he told a radio audience, "I discussed the Communists in the State Department. I stated that I had the names of 57 card-carrying members of the Communist Party."

Radio interview permanently recorded over Salt Lake City radio station

But still another figure was soon to emerge. The official Congressional Record of Feb. 20, 1950, shows that McCarthy, in a Senate speech, said there were 81 employees of the State Department who ranged from "persons whom I consider to be Communists" (p. 2063) down to individuals who were "bad risks" (p. 2069).

But a month later, McCarthy had reduced the grand total even further. At a press conference in Washington, D.C., Sen. McCarthy announced that he would "stand or fall" on his ability to prove that there was just one Communist in the State Department —"the top espionage agent" in the United States.

"I am willing to stand or fall on this one," he said. "If I am wrong on this I think the Subcommittee would be justified in not taking any other cases too seriously."

New York Times
Mar. 24, 1950

Thus, his own words record the extent to which McCarthy changed his story in those days when his headline-creating charges vaulted him to a position of great prominence in the nation. Suppose we have a look at the various charges and then examine the official records to observe how they stood up.

205 Communists

Faced with a demand for evidence, Sen. McCarthy quickly backed away from his charge that there were 205 Communists in the State Department. Eleven days after he had given his Wheeling speech he read to the Senate what he now claimed was the speech he had given Feb. 9. Here is what he claimed in the Senate he had said at Wheeling:

"I have in my hand 57 cases of individuals who would appear to be either card-carrying members or certainly loyal to the Communist Party, but who nevertheless are still helping to shape our foreign policy."

Congressional Record
Feb. 20, 1950, p. 2044

But James E. Whitaker, news editor of Radio Station WWVA of Wheeling, W. Va., and Paul A. Myers, program director of the same station, signed and swore to statements that McCarthy had actually said the following:

". . . I have here in my hand a list of 205—a list of names that were made known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who nevertheless are still working and shaping policy in the State Department."

Note the significant differences between the two versions. In McCarthy's Senate speech, he failed to include the material printed in boldface in the paragraph above. In the Senate speech the number is reduced to "57"; individuals "would appear to be" Communists, and there is no mention of the significant charge that the Secretary of State knew all about the presence of many Communists in influential positions in his department.

Now, what was the origin of the "205" figure? It goes back to July 26, 1946, when James F. Byrnes, now governor of South Carolina, was Secretary of State.

Byrnes wrote a letter to Congressman Sabath of Illinois, in which he pointed out that at the end of World War II, 12,797 government employees who had worked for emergency war agencies were temporarily transferred to the State Department. This group was reduced to about 4,000 individuals, and the Department started screening them to see who would be permitted to hold peacetime jobs in the Department.

Byrnes explained that "preliminary examination" had been made of 3,000 cases and "a recommendation against permanent employment had been made in 284 cases." Of these, 79 had been actually removed from the service.

Note that simple subtraction of 79 cases from 284 leaves exactly 205. Sen. McCarthy later admitted, in an interview in the U.S. News and World Report for Sept. 7, 1951, that the "205" came from the Byrnes letter. Note, too, that Byrnes' language—a "recommendation against permanent employment"—became "members of the Communist Party" in the McCarthy treatment. Equally interesting was McCarthy's failure to point out that of 205, only 64 were still on the payroll when he spoke, and that all of these had been subjected to a full loyalty investigation, including FBI field study where the FBI felt such a process necessary.

Since the figure "205" was quickly shown to have come from a letter written four years before by Secretary Byrnes, McCarthy subsequently preferred to use other figures. Suppose we look now at some of the other ingredients in what McCarthy himself was soon to call "the numbers racket."

The "Numbers Racket"

If the "numbers racket" seems a tricky and confusing story, it is solely because McCarthy's repeated change of numbers made it hard to follow his charges from day to day, week to week, and month to month during the period when his sensational allegations were winning him headlines throughout the world. It is worth noting here how guesswork played a part in McCarthy's charges in so grave a field as treason and espionage. In his book McCarthy wrote: "I have been able to dig out the facts to show that 57 are either Communists or doing the work of the Communist Party. Therefore, it is safe to assume that there are many more about whom I have no information." (Italics ours.)

McCarthyism: The Fight for America By Joseph R. McCarthy. The Devin-Adair Co. 1952. Page 10

Some indication of how the McCarthy story changed even within the same speech is available in the Congressional Record for Feb. 20, 1950.

In this speech he talked of "a very sizeable group of active Communists in the State Department," later referred to "vast numbers of other Communists" [in the State Department], recalled the origin of the figure 205, then went on to say "I do not believe I mentioned the figure 205 [at Wheeling]; I believe I said over 200," then hastened to claim that "I have in my possession the names of 57 Communists who are in the State Department at present," then changed the story by saying "the cases number 81," and capped it all by saying: "I know absolutely of one group of approximately 300 certified to the

McCarthy Charges 57 In State Department Hold Red Party Cards

By the Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY, Feb. 11.—Senator McCarthy, Republican, of Wisconsin hopped across the Nation by air yesterday, leaving a trail of accusations that the State Department is employing Communists, many of whom hold influential positions.

He refused to reveal any names to newsmen, but said under certain conditions he would give Secretary of State Acheson the names of "57 card-carrying Communists" in the State Department.

In Washington the Senator's charges brought from Lincoln White, State Department press officer, the assertion, "We know of no Communist member in the department and if we find any they will be summarily discharged."

Senator McCarthy continued his trip today to Reno, Nev., where he will address a Lincoln Day banquet tonight.

Started Attack Thursday.

The Wisconsin Senator fired his first blast Thursday night in a Republican Lincoln Day dinner in Wheeling, W. Va. He waved a paper and said:

"I have here in my hand a list of 205 that were known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party, and who nevertheless are still working and shaping the policy in the State Department."

Newsmen missed the Senator as his plane stopped in Milw[illegible] but they found him [illegible] where he scoff[illegible]

This Associated Press dispatch from Salt Lake City, Feb. 11, 1950, quotes McCarthy using the figure of "57 card-carrying Communists" in the second paragraph and refers in the fifth and sixth paragraphs to the charge of 205 Communists in the State Department he made the day before in Wheeling, W. Va.

Secretary [of State] were discharged because of Communism. He actually only discharged approximately 80" —thus apparently introducing a brand new figure of 220.

The vital figures—by McCarthy's own presentation—are the 205 (see preceding page) and the figures 81 and 57.

McCarthy first used the figure "81" on the Senate floor Feb. 20, 1950. But in the same speech he soon claimed that he was not accusing all 81 individuals of being Communists, although at one point he said:

". . . I am only giving the Senate cases in which it appears that there is a definite Communist connection."

But he himself qualified this serious charge several times. For example:

"Case No. 62: This file is not important insofar as Communistic activities are concerned . . ."

Where did McCarthy get the material on which to base his charge that "there are 81 cases [in the State Department] with a definite Communist connection?" The official records provide the answer.

The origin goes back to 1947 and 1948 when the Republican majority of the Senate and the House of Representatives ran the committees in both houses of Congress. Between Sept. 18 and Nov. 3, 1947, a team of investigators from the House Committee on Appropriations made a careful study of the State Department's Division of Security.

A list of 108 cases in the files was drawn up. The cases were identified only by number and a special key with the correct names was prepared. However, when the "108 cases" were discussed at the hearings, no names were used. This was also true when the "108 cases" were discussed on the floor of the House of Representatives Mar. 3, 4, 5, and 11, 1948.

The details of these "108 cases" were available to members of Congress two years before Sen. McCarthy made his speech on the "81 cases" on Feb. 20, 1950. That McCarthy's "81 cases" were lifted almost bodily from the two-year-old report of Congressional investigators is clear from the fact that McCarthy used identical language in describing many of the cases cited in his speech before the Senate.

The Tydings unit of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee which was set up to investigate McCarthy's charges reached these conclusions after a careful analysis of the "81 cases":

"1. There is not one of the cases discussed [by Sen. McCarthy] on Feb. 20, 1950, on the Senate floor which is not to be found among the '108 list' (compiled two years earlier).

"2. There is no factual information relative to any of the Feb. 20 [McCarthy] cases which does not have its identifiable counterpart among the '108 list.'

"3. Apart from characterizations and immaterial interpolations, the language employed by Sen. McCarthy is case for case similar textually to the language in their counterparts among the '108 list'. Where variations in the case descriptions employed by Sen. McCarthy occurred, the language had been changed to create a more sinister impression."

Official Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, 81st Congress, 2nd Session, Senate Report 2108

When McCarthy presented his "81 cases" Feb. 20, 1950, he promised one Senator that he could "come to my office as soon as I finish and receive the names."

Under oath, however, McCarthy admitted: "At this particular moment I could not give you the names of half these persons."

Tydings Subcommittee Hearings, p. 6

The evidence makes it clear that the impression that a fresh investigation had uncovered new material was false. McCarthy used information presented to the public two years before.

The reader may wonder just why this is important. If there were Communists in the government, what difference does it make if McCarthy used "old" material? The answer is this:

Leading Republican Congressmen had carefully investigated every one of the cases that McCarthy presented —two years before. These Republican-controlled committees considered the disposition of the "108" and other security cases: the House Committee on Appropriations, the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department, the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

These Republican Congressmen had no desire to "protect" the Truman Administration when they worked over the "108" cases. They analyzed the same material presented by McCarthy—two years before. Not a single one of these 80th Congress committees, all having Republican majorities, reported that the State Department contained any Communists.

The final word on the material McCarthy was to use two years later

McCarthy Gives 'Aid to Enemies of Democracy'

Three leading spokesmen for American veterans' organizations have recorded the extent to which McCarthy has damaged the legitimate cause of safeguarding the nation against Communist subversion and espionage.

- CHARLES C. RALLS, while national commander-in-chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, put it this way: "I am for any Congressman or Senator who is carrying on a fight against Communism, but I want that fight to be sensible. McCarthy should forget about the publicity. He has hurt the work of those who are fighting Communists by making unfounded charges . . . I love the idea of what McCarthy is trying to do, but his methods hurt those of us who are sincerely fighting the Communists."

- WILLIAM EXLINE, while senior vice commander of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, wrote in the Purple Heart magazine that McCarthy "gave aid and comfort to the enemies of democracy by his unproved charges concerning U.S. governmental agencies . . . His complete disregard of [American] principle makes him potentially far more dangerous than those he accuses."

- WALTER E. ALESSANDRONI, while chairman of the American Legion's Committee on Un-American Activities, asserted in a letter to McCarthy that failure to make the meaning of our words and actions clear in a period like this "is in itself a contribution to undermining national unity, and could therefore be justifiably classed as an un-American act."

'Joe—Yoo Hoo—Joe'

'Stop Ganging Up on Me'

was given by a Republican member of the House of Representatives. He was Congressman Bartel Jonkman of Michigan, who had investigated Communism in the State Department as a one-man investigating subcommittee for the House Foreign Affairs Committee. He said on Aug. 2, 1948:

"But before the 80th Congress adjourns, I want the members to know that there is one department in which the known or reasonably suspected subversives, Communists, fellow-travelers, sympathizers, and persons whose services are not for the best interests of the United States, have been swept out. That is the Department of State."

As McCarthy himself admitted, he occasionally used the figure "57" in referring to Communists in the State Department.

The first recorded use of "57" was at Salt Lake City the day after the Wheeling speech. McCarthy was interviewed in the Utah capital by a local radio personality, Dan Valentine. His words were recorded, and the record was subsequently sent to the Senate Committee which investigated his charges of Communism in the State Department. Part of the interview went as follows:

McCarthy: Last night I discussed the Communists in the State Department. I stated that I had the names of 57 card-carrying members of the Communist Party. . . Now, I want to tell [Acheson] this: If he wants to call me tonight at the Utah Hotel, I will be glad to give him the names of those 57 card-carrying Communists. . .

Valentine: In other words, Senator, if Secretary of State Dean Acheson would call you at the Hotel Utah tonight in Salt Lake City you could give him 57 names of actual card-carrying Communists in the State Department of the United States—actual card-carrying Communists.

McCarthy: Not only can, Dan, but will. . . .

Valentine: Well, I am just a common man out here in Salt Lake City, a man who's got a family and a son and a job. You mean to say there's 57 Communists in our State Department that direct or control our State Department policy or help direct it?

McCarthy: Well, Dan, I don't want to indicate there are only 57, I say I have the names of 57.

Now what was the origin of the figure "57"?

The Investigating Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee reported that it came from the same two-year-old "108 cases" and in the same way.

In March, 1948, John E. Peurifoy, then Deputy Under-Secretary of State for Administration, testified before the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department. He was asked about the "108 cases."

At that time only 57 of the 108 were still employed, and of these 22 were being investigated by the FBI as of March, 1948, according to Peurifoy's testimony.

Subsequently, official records in Report No. 2108 of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations July 20, 1950, based on evidence taken by the Tydings Subcommittee, showed that 41 of the 108 had been cleared and 67 were not employed by the State Department as a result of resignation, death, completion of assignment, or dismissal.

Thus, when McCarthy spoke, only one-third of those against whom he had brought charges were still in the State Department, and all of these had been considered in 1948, as Republican Congressman Jonkman pointed out, and all had been "fully processed under the President's Loyalty Program and the State Department's Security Program," according to the findings of the Senate investigators in the Report cited above.

The Big One

McCarthy admitted to his complete incapacity to document and prove his charges. Testifying Mar. 8, 1950, before the Senate Committee authorized to investigate his claims of Communists in the State Department, McCarthy said: "I am not in a position to file any formal charges."

This was still true more than three years later. In June, 1953, Rep. Brownson, Indiana Republican and a member of the House Government Operations Committee, wrote Scott McLeod, security administrator of the State Department, asking if any of the "57 persons referred to as Communists by Sen. McCarthy on the floor of the Senate Feb. 20, 1950 [are] still in the employ of the Department." McLeod replied that a search of Department files "failed to disclose such a list."

When it became clear that he could not make any of his numbers stick, McCarthy switched his attack again.

He dramatically announced he would prove that a single employee of the State Department was the "top Russian espionage agent" in the United States.

Mar. 22, 1950

"I am willing to stand or fall on this one," McCarthy said. "If I am wrong on this, I think the Subcommittee would be justified in not taking my other cases too seriously."

Let the strongly anti-Communist Time magazine, a critic of the Truman Administration, tell the story as of Oct. 22, 1951 (20 months after McCarthy made his original charges):

"He [McCarthy] bored in, hitting low blow after low blow. He set up a barrage of new accusations which caught the headlines, drawing attention away from the fact that he had not made good on his original charge. He even began to produce some names. But his most sensational charge was that he knew the name of 'the top Soviet espionage agent' in the U.S. The man so accused turned out to be Owen Lattimore, a Johns Hopkins professor and writer on Far Eastern affairs. Lattimore in fact had great influence in U.S. academic and journalistic circles dealing with the Far East. He was an important factor in leading U.S. toward policies which many Americans regard as tragically wrong.

"But that was not what McCarthy said about Lattimore. He said that Lattimore was 'the top Soviet espion-

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR

Federal Bureau of Investigation
United States Department of Justice
Washington 25, D. C.

September 8, 1950

Honorable Millard E. Tydings
United States Senate
Washington, D. C.

My dear Senator:

In response to your inquiry as to whether the FBI reviewed the State Department personnel files that were under consideration by your Committee for the purpose of ascertaining whether reports submitted by the FBI to the State Department were incorporated therein, this is to advise you that at the request of the Attorney General, we did make such a check on July 13, 1950 and found that the State Department files were intact, as indicated in the letter from the Attorney General to you dated July 17, 1950.

With best wishes and kind regards,

Sincerely yours,

J. Edgar Hoover

BY SPECIAL MESSENGER

Above is a photostatic copy of the letter written by FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover making it clear that the files McCarthy claimed had been "raped" were in fact "intact." (See Page 27.)

age agent'—and to this day McCarthy has not produced a scrap of evidence indicating that Lattimore was a spy or in any way disloyal."

Lattimore was subsequently subjected to relentless examination by the McCarran Committee of the Senate. As a result of that inquiry, he was indicted on seven counts of perjury by a federal grand jury. However, Federal Judge Luther W. Youngdahl, formerly Republican Governor of Minnesota, promptly dismissed four of the seven counts.

The counts dismissed were the most important of the seven, especially Count 1 of the indictment which charged that Lattimore swore falsely when he testified that "I am not and never have been a Communist, a Soviet agent, a sympathizer, or any other kind of a promoter of Communism or Communist interests." In dismissing this count, Judge Youngdahl called it "so nebulous and indefinite that a jury would have to indulge in speculation in order to arrive at a verdict." He said that it was "fundamental that a jury should not be asked to determine an issue which can be decided only on conjecture."

And yet as a self-appointed, one-man jury, McCarthy had not only conjectured but had flatly charged that Lattimore was not only a Communist but the "top Russian espionage agent" in the United States.

The Department of Justice has appealed Judge Youngdahl's dismissal of the four counts. That is where the Lattimore case stands now.

Files and the FBI

Repeatedly, as he bounced from one figure to another and one charge to another in the "numbers racket," McCarthy had not only claimed he was disclosing fresh, new information that he felt it his duty to present to the public, but insisted that his information came from the highly secret loyalty files of the State Department.

"All the information I have given the Senate is in the State Department files." (Congressional Record, 1950, p. 2063.)

"Mr. President, I have before me information from the State Department files, information which the President says the Senate did not have. (Congressional Record, 1950, p. 2048.)

"You can be sure of this: if those files would prove that McCarthy was a liar, they would damn well be opened at sunrise tomorrow morning."

McCarthy Speech before the American Society of Newspaper Editors, Apr. 20, 1950

Two weeks later, President Truman let the Senate Investigating Committee look at the files. McCarthy's reaction was reported by Time magazine Oct. 22, 1951:

"Before McCarthy even saw what the State Department turned over to the Committee, he pronounced it 'a phony offer of phony files.' The files have been 'raped,' he cried."

It was after Mr. Truman had made the files available, in response to McCarthy's repeated demand, that McCarthy broadened his demand for additional files. Although he had claimed repeatedly up to then that the State Department files would confirm his accusations, McCarthy now demanded that the following files would also have to be opened:

"The FBI files, the Civil Service Commission files, and where individuals have been investigated by the Army, Navy, or secret service, we should also obtain those files."

Congressional Record July 12, 1950, p. 10139

When President Truman did make the State Department files available to the Senate Investigating Committee, McCarthy shouted at once that the files did not contain all of the FBI reports.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover put the lie to this one in no uncertain terms. In a letter to the chairman of the Senate Investigating Committee, Sen. Millard E. Tydings, Hoover wrote Sept. 8, 1950, that all the information sent over by the FBI was contained in the State Department loyalty files. (See photostat, p. 26.)

The legal protection of legislators for what they say during debate on the floor is supported by a long and honorable tradition.

This protection enables a member of Congress to make sweeping charges against individuals during debate and he can not be sued in a court for slander or libel. Newspapers also can print the accusations, even if they are false, because the speeches in the Congress are privileged and protected from libel charges.

When Sen. McCarthy began his attacks, he promised Congress and the country he would not hide behind his Congressional immunity:

"On the day when I take advantage of the security we have on the Senate floor, on that day I will resign from the Senate. Anything I say on the floor of the Senate at any time will be repeated off the floor."

Congressional Record Feb. 20, 1950, p. 2043

But McCarthy did not step out from behind his legal shield and repeat the same charges off the floor. He also did not resign.

The Christian Science Monitor, one of the most distinguished and universally respected of American newspapers, commented editorially on April 11, 1950:

"Never were pretzel-shaped thought processes more ingeniously bent than in the address delivered to the Marine Corps League at Passaic, N. J., at the weekend. Pronouncing his own speech 'libelous if untrue' he proceeded to hurl at Owen Lattimore charges which can neither be proved true or untrue.

"This was Sen. McCarthy's way of pretending to come out from behind the Congressional immunity under which he previously charged Mr. Lattimore with being Russia's 'top espionage agent' in the United States. Sen. McCarthy, however, refrained from repeating this specific charge, perhaps because to do so would permit other opinions than his own to determine whether the charge is libelous."

Later, McCarthy shifted his position.

"When they make those files available so they can be used, those statements will be made in public," he told the American Society of Newspaper Editors, Apr. 20, 1950.

Official Transcript of Speech and Questions, Master Reporting Co., Washington, D. C.

As we have seen above, the files were opened for the Senate investigators two weeks later (May 4, 1950), but Sen. McCarthy refused to deliver on his promise to the newspaper editors. Finally, on Aug. 9, 1951, Sen. McCarthy admitted openly in a speech that he was not going to shed his Senatorial immunity.

Congressional Record Aug. 9, 1951, p. 9915-26

In the years that have followed, years of countless charges against countless individuals, McCarthy has carefully avoided saying off the floor of the Senate many of the statements he has made on the floor or in the equally privileged sessions of his investigating committee.

McCarthy's original charges of Communists in the State Department, made first at Wheeling, W. Va., and repeated in various forms in the months that followed, resulted in a Senate investigation which produced 3,000,000 words of testimony. The inquiry was conducted by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations headed by then Sen. Millard Tydings. The majority of the subcommittee (all Democrats) reached these conclusions July 17, 1950:

"Sen. McCarthy and McCarthyism have been exposed for what they are and the sight is not a pretty one." McCarthy's "charges and methods are a fraud and a hoax," and constituted "perhaps the most nefarious campaign of untruth in the history of our republic."

"We have seen the technique of the 'Big Lie' elsewhere employed by the totalitarian dictator with devastating success, utilized here for the first time on a sustained basis in our history. We have seen how, through repetition and shifting untruths it is possible to delude great numbers of people."

"We sincerely believe that charges of the character which have been made in this case seriously impair the efforts of our agencies of government to combat the problem of subversion. Furthermore, extravagant allegations, which cannot be proved and are not subject to proof, have the inevitable effect of dulling the awareness of all Americans to the true menace of Communism."

Official Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, 81st Congress, 2nd Session, Senate Report 2108

Although Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, Republican of Massachusetts, one of the two Republican members of the committee, declined to sign the majority report, he did agree that the investigation had failed to produce a single Communist in the State Department.

On the floor of the Senate, Sen. Warren Magnuson of Washington asked Sen. Lodge this question:

"Did the Senator from Massachusetts in his investigation find any Communists in the State Department?"

"No; I did not," replied Sen. Lodge.

Congressional Record July 21, 1950, p. 10933

This single-sentence conclusion by a member of McCarthy's own party summarizes the outcome of an investigation which took four months and assembled 3,000,000 words.

Four years to the month after McCarthy's original charges of rampant Communism in the State Department under Dean Acheson, the Christian Science Monitor (Feb. 16, 1954) reported that two top Republican spokesmen for the State Department, Undersecretary Walter Bedell Smith and Security Chief Scott McLeod, testified before a House Appropriations subcommittee that "no active Communist has been uncovered in the State Department in the year or more of Republican control."

Balance Sheet

Although Sen. McCarthy's reckless charges were disproved by Republican and Democratic investigators alike, the Wisconsin Senator soon began to make claims of specific gains from his "crusade against Communism in government." Suppose we have a look at the "achievements" as he himself spelled them out for the period between February, 1950, when he made his original charges, and January, 1953, when he became chairman of the Permanent Senate Subcommittee on Investigations. (This latter phase of his career is covered on Pages 33 to 50.)

Precisely what did McCarthy claim for this first phase of headline-hunting?

"We got Alger Hiss out, we got Marzani out, Wadleigh, George Shaw Wheeler, and a few others."

McCarthy Interview, U.S. News and World Report, Sept. 7, 1951

The official records show how totally false these claims were, and they show too why Time magazine, a strong critic of the Democratic Administration, concluded that McCarthy had made a "miserable showing as an exposer of Reds."

McCarthy did not get Alger Hiss. Hiss resigned from the State Department in February, 1947. This was three years before McCarthy made his charges.

J. Edgar Hoover Makes a Comparison

"This approach to the internal security problem—an objective search for the truth; slowly, carefully, patiently developing all the evidence; and handling each subject on an individual basis—safeguards civil rights. The blunderbuss method, shooting wildly, hoping that in the broadside the guilty will be hit, unmindful of the number of innocent injured—that method is wrong, the very antithesis of democratic law enforcement. Security investigations can be conducted fairly, accurately and without hysteria. That is the aim of the FBI."

J. Edgar Hoover
Director, FBI
Iowa Law Review, Winter, 1952

Hiss was first named by Whittaker Chambers in 1948 and was forced into the open by the House Un-American Activities Committee. This was two years before McCarthy made his charges.

It was the FBI and the Department of Justice, not McCarthy, that "got" Hiss.

Hiss was convicted Jan. 2, 1950, when a jury decided he had lied in denying that he had passed secret State Department documents to Chambers. The FBI prepared the evidence and the Justice Department prosecuted. The case was over and Hiss was convicted before McCarthy made his first charges in Wheeling, Feb. 9, 1950.

McCarthy did not get Carl Aldo Marzani.

Marzani, a former employee of the Office of Strategic Services, was exposed by State Department investigators as a Communist and was fired in December, 1946, before McCarthy was sworn in as a Senator. The FBI and the State Department's investigators dug up the information and the Justice Department successfully prosecuted the case.

McCarthy did not get Henry Julian Wadleigh.

Chambers named Wadleigh as another State Department employee who had passed out documents. Then Wadleigh testified for the federal government against Hiss. McCarthy again had absolutely nothing to do with it. In fact, Wadleigh left the State Department in 1946—before McCarthy came to the Senate—and was exposed by Chambers before McCarthy made his first speech on the subject.

McCarthy did not get George Shaw Wheeler.

Wheeler worked for the Foreign Economic Administration and the War Department until 1947 when he was eased out while facing a loyalty probe. He had been working in the U.S. military government in Germany at the time and he fled to Czechoslovakia where the Soviets took him in and put him to work as an economics instructor. (Chicago Tribune, Apr. 13, 1950.)

These, then, are the four officials McCarthy claimed to have "got." Actually, as the official records show,

Report Card

Fitzpatrick in The St. Louis Post-Dispatch

all four were dismissed from government service before McCarthy began his sensational hunt for headlines.

It was this record which led Time magazine to observe on Oct. 22, 1951:

"After nearly two years of tramping the nation, shouting that he was 'rooting out the skunks,' just how many Communists had Joe rooted out? The answer: none."

But just as he used a variety of numbers in charging there were Communists in the State Department, McCarthy has also used different sets of names on different occasions.

When the evidence showed that the four he had named in the U.S. News and World Report were dismissed before he raised the question of Communism in government, McCarthy switched to a new group of names. For instance, in the condensation of his book, McCarthyism: The Fight for America, which appeared in the May 1952 issue of Cosmopolitan, McCarthy asked himself a number of questions and proceeded to answer them.

One of the questions is: "Will you give the names of some of those who have been removed from government service as a result of your proof?"

It is significant to know here that McCarthy does not now refer to the State Department but to "government service," despite the fact that all his original charges were leveled against the State Department.

It is equally striking that while McCarthy listed the names of eight individuals in this Cosmopolitan condensation, not one of them was on the list he compiled in the U.S. News and World Report interview. The new batch of cases covered eight individuals in a variety of government departments, but here again the official records show that McCarthy played no part in any of these cases.

A typical example, and we select this one because it represents the only case among the eight which resulted in conviction and imprisonment, involved William Remington. Remington was first investigated long before McCarthy began his attacks. Actually, it was in July, 1948, a year and a half before McCarthy first brought his charges, that a Senate Investigating Committee, headed by Sen. Homer Ferguson, Michigan Republican, first looked into the Remington case.

Sen. Ferguson, a strong McCarthy supporter, said on Apr. 4, 1951, that he did not want to discount the work McCarthy had done, but he made it clear that "outside of Sen. McCarthy's general statements of Communism in government, which of course embraced Remington, I personally do not know of any particular work he did in the Remington case." (Letter to Robert H. Fleming, Apr. 4, 1951.)

McCarthy has been equally careless, on occasion, in claiming credit for the conviction of top Communist leaders in the United States. What are the official facts?

After a prolonged trial in New York City in 1949 (one full year before McCarthy first raised his voice on the subject of Communism at Wheeling, W. Va.), the government obtained the conviction of eleven top Communist leaders.

In addition, through the work of the FBI and the Department of Justice, Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, David Greenglass, Harry Gold, Morton Sobell, and others were convicted on charges of espionage.

In none of these cases did McCarthy play any part whatever.

The story of "the Numbers Game" provides the background against which the reader can follow what McCarthy did—and failed to do—about the "205," or "81," or "57" when he took over as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Investigations with full power to prove his case (See Page 33).

Guarding America's Security

An Elaborate System Protects the Government From Spies and Subversives

THERE was a time when many Americans—both Republicans and Democrats—hoped that the United States and the Soviet Union could exist in peace, at least on a live-and-let-live basis, however divergent were their respective philosophies. This belief came out of our wartime alliance with Russia against Hitler's Nazis.

Typical of the former attitude of the American people toward Russia was this comment by Gen. Douglas MacArthur in 1942:

"The world situation at the present time indicates that the hopes of civilization rest upon the worthy banners of the courageous Russian Army."

The National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, now on the Attorney General's roster of subversive organizations, numbered during World War II such eminent Americans as Thomas W. Lamont, a partner of J. P. Morgan; Owen D. Young, of General Electric; Mrs. Ogden Reid, owner of the New York Herald-Tribune; Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones, and Lieut. Gen. Leslie C. McNair. In 1944, Gen. Eisenhower hailed the Council with this greeting: "I wish your Council the utmost success in the worthy work it is undertaking." And as late as the fall of 1946, Joseph R. McCarthy made a statement whose accuracy he left unchallenged for seven years, in which he was quoted as saying: "Stalin's proposal for world disarmament is a great thing and he must be given credit for being sincere." (Milwaukee Journal, Nov. 10, 1946.)

Looking back on that period immediately following World War II, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles recently said that "those in charge of our foreign policy at that time seemed to have assumed, as was quite natural perhaps to assume—many of us did—that we were entering into an era of lasting peace, and that the Soviet Union would not be a threat."

Dulles Press Conference, Nov. 25, 1953, New York Times

Mr. Dulles' comment came in response to a statement made in Tokyo by Vice President Richard Nixon. Nixon told the Japanese-American Society in Tokyo that "we misjudged the intentions of the Soviet leaders."

In the months that followed in late 1945 and early 1946 it became increasingly clear that the Soviet Union was less interested in friendly relations with the free world, and especially with the United States, than many Americans had thought would be the case in the period when the Soviets were our wartime allies in destroying Hitlerism.

When it became apparent that the Soviet Union posed a menace to world peace and that her agents and dupes in the United States were bent on furthering the imperial designs of the Soviet Union by weakening the United States, our government launched an elaborate program to guard our security against those who would commit espionage, sabotage, and subversion.

Actually, as far back as the Hatch Act of Aug. 21, 1939, it had been unlawful for any employee of the government to have membership in a party which advocates the overthrow of the constitutional form of government of the United States.

Gravely concerned over mounting evidence of Soviet intransigence in 1946, Congress went further and gave the Secretary of State the right to fire employees "whenever he shall deem it necessary or advisable in the interests of the United States." This action was taken before McCarthy was elected to the United States Senate.

On June 9, 1947, the then Secretary of State, George C. Marshall, appointed a special Personnel Security Board to get rid of "security risks." The Board did just this: it quickly recommended the dismissal of ten employees. This was two years before McCarthy made his first charge of Communism in the State Department.

The Truman Administration launched a comprehensive system of investigation throughout the federal service. Skilled investigators, many of them former FBI agents, were employed to make the initial inquiries. Their data was submitted to a group of appraisers whose job it was to sift the evidence and to report to the boards created to take testimony and make decisions.

J. Edgar Hoover Explains

The Federal Bureau of Investigation, headed by J. Edgar Hoover, played a decisive part then, as it does now, in the operations of the federal government's loyalty and security program. A glimpse of the character and scope of this operation can be gleaned from the testimony before the House Subcommittee on Appropriations Jan. 24, 1953, by J. Edgar Hoover. He reported then that the FBI had processed over 4,000,000 government employee and job applicant forms since the loyalty program was launched in 1947. Of that number the FBI "opened 20,051 active investigations."

"That is," Hoover explained to the Congressional Committee, "we have opened those investigations predicated upon information received or in our files that the individual may be disloyal. Our purpose then is to get the facts, to see whether the allegations can be proved or disproved.

"It has been necessary in only one-half of one per cent of all the loyalty forms checked to conduct full field investigations; 287 employees have either been removed from office or denied appointment in government service as a result of these investigations; 9,837 have been retained or accepted for employment; 2,824 resigned during the course of the investigation. This action raises a question as to why they resigned, whether from guilty consciences or for other reasons."

Gen. Conrad E. Snow, New Hampshire Republican, who then headed the State Department's Loyalty Security Board, summarized the character of the program in a speech given Oct. 25, 1951, when he said:

> "Every person who was in the employ of the State Department on Oct. 1, 1947, and every person since employed, in addition to being investigated by the Security Division of the State Department, has been submitted to the FBI for a 'record check.'

"If the FBI on this record check turns up a single item of derogatory information, in the loyalty field, the employee is given a full field investigation, and the confidential reports of the investigation are submitted to the Department Loyalty Security Board for determination of the employee's loyalty and security risk. These investigative reports constitute the prosecution—the 'state's case' which is before the Board for judicial determination."

The Loyalty and Security Program which operated before the Eisenhower Administration revised it was established Mar. 21, 1947, in Executive Order 9835. This program was inaugurated nearly three years before McCarthy launched his charges of Communism in government.

At the top of the President's program was placed a special Loyalty Review Board in the Civil Service Commission. First Chairman of this important agency was Seth Richardson, described by Time magazine June 18, 1951, as "a wealthy Washington corporation lawyer, a Republican, and an avowed isolationist. His Republicanism went way back—to the Hoover Administration, when he was Assistant Attorney General, and beyond that, back to his days in North Dakota." Richardson was succeeded in 1951 by Hiram Bingham, who was formerly a conservative Republican Senator from Connecticut.

Each department was ordered to set up an investigating program and to name loyalty boards to hear loyalty cases, all of which were subject to final review by the Loyalty Review Board. Since it was the State Department that McCarthy concentrated on exclusively during this period, it is pertinent to recall here the summing up made by Gen. Snow, the New Hampshire Republican who headed

'As A Catholic . . .'

GRAHAM GREENE, ENGLISH NOVELIST AND DISTINGUISHED CATHOLIC LAYMAN, MADE THIS COMMENT ON MCCARTHY IN A LETTER TO THE PROGRESSIVE:

"As a Catholic I am completely opposed to everything that McCarthyism stands for—the smear tactics which he uses would be described in theological terms as a lack of charity which to a Catholic (and he pretends to be one) amounts to a mortal sin.

"We Catholics of Europe believe that the aspects of Communism which we, as Catholics, are required to fight, can only be fought with honesty and we feel that a far worse enemy than Communism is the kind of treacherous Catholicism which is represented by McCarthy."

the State Department's Loyalty Security Board during this period. Said Gen. Snow in a public address:

> "I do not know of a single item of new evidence contributed by Sen. McCarthy that helped the State Department's Loyalty and Security Panel to pass on disloyalty charges.

"The Board thought the other day that it might have some help from the Senator. He had alleged on the floor of the Senate that a State Department employee was associating with the Communists. On inquiry made of the Senator of the name of the Communist, his office replied that the Senator had had the name in his hand when he made the statement, had had it on a slip of paper, but he had lost the paper!"

"Sen. McCarthy has raised a lot of dust, mistaken for smoke, by tramping around the nation and making over and over again the same baseless and disproved accusations.

> "This one man is able to raise so much dust only because (1) he is a Senator of the United States, and (2) he speaks in a loud and determined voice and waves in his hand a bunch of photostats that nobody takes the trouble to examine."

"This is McCarthyism," the General said at another point, "the making of baseless accusations regarding the loyalty and integrity of public officers and employees by a person who is himself in high public office and who uses his office at one and the same time as a platform from which to shout his accusations and as a screen to protect himself from action for defamation. The purpose of it all is, of course, not the public interest, but political advancement in a period of public tension and excitement."

Speech by Gen. Conrad E. Snow, Quoted in the New York Times, Oct. 25, 1951

This was the situation when the Republican Administration of Dwight D. Eisenhower took office in January, 1953. In his State of the Union Address, President Eisenhower said that the responsibility for "keeping out the disloyal and the dangerous" rested primarily on the Executive branch of the government. The President went on to say that unless the Executive branch did so, it "invited disorder and confusion" by being policed by another branch of the government.

The Eisenhower Administration replaced the Truman Loyalty and Security Program with its own program. James C. Hagerty, press secretary to President Eisenhower, in explaining the Administration's Security Program, emphasized on Oct. 23, 1953, these five factors that were being applied by the new security system:

1. All new applicants for federal service must be investigated. Those who got non-sensitive jobs are investigated only by their own departments and get a "name check" in the FBI files.

2. All persons considered for positions in sensitive agencies are given a "full field investigation," meaning that FBI agents investigate their backgrounds exhaustively by checking associates, former employers, family, friends, and similar sources.

3. All past investigations that were not completed will be re-made.

4. All persons who received a full field investigation in the Truman Administration are now receiving another full field investigation under the Eisenhower regime. Hagerty stated that this rule applied to persons who were so investigated merely because they got sensitive jobs, as well as those who get the full field inquiry because adverse data had been filed against them.

5. All employees who have had adverse information filed against them will receive full field investigations.

Factors 1 and 2 are, of course, applied to all new applicants, while the last three figure in the re-examination of suspected hold-over employees.

Early in 1954, the Eisenhower Administration announced the release of 2,200 employees under this new security program. Despite a storm of criticism that the 2,200 figure was misleading because it included many who talked or drank too much or had other character defects, Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell "refused to separate the 'drunks' from the 'spies.'" (New York Times, Jan. 21, 1954.)

The demand for a breakdown gained in volume as piecemeal reports on dismissals in individual departments made it clear that an almost negligible number involved any suspicion of "disloyalty."

FBI Advice

"My advice to the public is this: "Be alert to the dangers of Communism. Report your information immediately and fully to the FBI. Avoid reporting malicious gossip or idle rumor. The FBI is interested in receiving facts. Don't attempt to make private investigations. Leave that to trained investigators. Don't circulate rumors about subversive activities or draw conclusions from information you furnish to the FBI."

J. Edgar Hoover
Director of the FBI, in the U. S. News & World Report
Aug. 11, 1950

Brownell Makes a Claim

It is not the function of this study of McCarthy's operations to evaluate the merit, or lack of merit, of the loyalty and security programs promulgated by President Truman and after him by President Eisenhower. We cite the record showing the vigilant policing of the Federal Service merely to underscore what has been emphasized by so many top federal officials, whether Republican or Democrat—namely, that the Executive branch of the government has, without waiting for McCarthy to move and, in fact, moving long before he made his first charges, established elaborate machinery to guard against disloyalty and subversion in the federal establishment.

As the Eisenhower Administration neared the end of its first year in power, Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell proudly claimed for the GOP regime that it had licked the problem of Communists in government. In a speech at Fort Worth, Tex., he asserted he thinks "all suspected Reds have been cleaned out of the government." (Associated Press dispatch, Dec. 14, 1953.) But McCarthy clung tenaciously to his political meal ticket and sullenly rejected Brownell's conclusion—although in this case McCarthy did not smear his critic, as he had so many times in the past.

McCarthy Takes Over

As Chairman of the Investigating Committee McCarthy Produced Many A Headline That Did Not Stand Up as the Evidence Unfolded

FOR NEARLY three years, Sen. McCarthy had hurled his charges of Communism in government while he was a member of the Republican minority without power to conduct formal investigations. In January, 1953, when Republicans took control of the national government, McCarthy became chairman of the Committee on Government Operations and chairman of its Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. It is noteworthy that in the 15 months that have followed, a period in which he has had full investigative powers, a $200,000-a-year budget, and a tremendous staff of investigators, McCarthy has made no effort to prove his original charges that there were 205 Communists in the State Department, or 81, or 57. He has, in fact, made no references whatever to the original accusations which first vaulted him into national prominence.

New charges and new techniques were soon developed by the resourceful chairman. Witnesses were summoned in secret and McCarthy's version of what they said often leaked to the press before the witnesses were called to testify in public hearings.

One of the first inquiries conducted by McCarthy's Subcommittee involved the Voice of America, the radio broadcasting branch of the State Department's International Information Administration (IIA), which told the American story in some 40 languages to a potential audience of 300,000,000 in 87 countries and which put more program hours on the air than NBC and CBS combined.

Public hearings began Feb. 16, 1953, and continued on and off for 15 days until Mar. 19. For days before the first hearings, stories inspired by McCarthy and his aides built up a frightening picture of subversion, espionage, and waste. Thus, on Feb. 13, the Washington, D.C., Times-Herald proclaimed:

PROBERS TOLD OF ANTI-U.S. PLOT IN VOICE
INFILTRATION CALLED APPALLING

"A Senate investigation of Communist influence in the Voice of America headquarters here has uncovered amazing evidence of a conspiracy to subvert American policy in this nation's radio propaganda broadcasts abroad.

"Scores of witnesses questioned by day and night in the past week have involved high officials in a detailed account supported by documentary proof which indicates deliberate sabotage of American objectives in foreign propaganda."

On Feb. 14, the Cleveland Plain Dealer announced:

McCARTHY HITS SABOTAGE BY SOME ON VOICE CASTS

". . . McCarthy said most of today's evidence dealt with 'a vast amount of waste running into tens of millions' but he declined to elaborate. The rest of the evidence dealt with subversion."

On Feb. 13, the New York Times broke it this way:

McCARTHY SIFTING VOICE OF AMERICA HEARINGS ON MISMANAGEMENT AND SUBVERSION CHARGES TO BE HELD NEXT WEEK

The sensational charges of an espionage conspiracy operating within the Voice of America boiled down to these major accusations:

One—Two giant 1000-kilowatt radio transmitters named Baker East and Baker West because of their location on the two major coasts of the United States, were deliberately placed in locations where they would be ineffective, with an estimated waste of $18,000,000. This, in effect, was a charge of sabotage against Voice officials in charge of locating the transmitters. Actually, the result of the McCarthy investigation, as the evidence below emphasizes, was the cancellation of the world's two most powerful transmitters—precisely the end sought by the Soviets.

Two—In broadcasts to Latin America "very sinister influences" were working in a "pattern" that was "stifling anti-Communist propaganda."

Three—The Hebrew language broadcasts to Israel were ordered cancelled as part of a "pattern" performing a great service to the Communist cause. This "pattern" was too "consistent" to be "mere stupidity."

Four—The head of the religious desk of the Voice of America was accused of being an atheist.

An examination of the official testimony—plus documented evidence the Subcommittee curiously failed to examine—shows how far removed were the facts from the original charges given great prominence in the nation's press.

Baker East and West

In 1951 the Voice of America decided to build the world's two most powerful broadcasting stations, Baker West to be at Seattle, Washington, and Baker East to be in the Cape Hatteras area of North Carolina. On the first day of his public hearings, McCarthy sought to plant the impression that the areas selected for Baker East and West were not the best sites and were chosen by disloyal officials to weaken the Voice and thus aid the Communist cause.

Said McCarthy Feb. 16, 1953 (Hearings, pp. 8-9): "As well as the question of waste, what other significance do you find in this location of Baker East and West? . . . . Assume I do not want that [voice] to reach Communist territory. Would not the best way to sabotage that voice be to place your transmitters within that magnetic storm area? . . . . Now has it ever been suggested by those who have worked with you in the Voice that this mislocation of stations, the waste in the construction program, has not been entirely as a result of incompetence, but that some of it may have been purposely planned that way?"

On the following day, Feb. 17, the Chicago Tribune front-paged the story with the assertion that "Senate investigators disclosed that the sites of the stations were apparently selected to facilitate jamming of American broadcasts by Russia."

Part of McCarthy's charge, that the wrong locations had been selected, was backed by Lewis McKesson, a former engineer of the Voice, who testified that the locations for both Baker East and West were improper because of the alleged interference with radio transmission by the auroral absorption belt (magnetic storms far above the earth extending for about a 1,000-mile belt around the north geomagnetic pole). McKesson testified that in his opinion the more southerly locations of Los Angeles for Baker West, and southern Florida for Baker East would be the proper locations. (Summary of Committee Hearings, Feb. 16, pp. 2-3.)

An additional charge was made and repeatedly emphasized before the Subcommittee that the National Bureau of Standards was never consulted:

"McCarthy: Is it a fact that the Voice never contacted the Bureau of Standards when they were considering the location of Baker East and West?

"Dr. Newbern Smith (chief, Central Radio Propagation Laboratory, Bureau of Standards): That is correct. We were never formally contacted." (Committee Hearings, Feb. 16, p. 11)

This picture of a group of Voice officials furtively deciding on locations for the two giant transmitters without consulting Bureau of Standards experts is demolished by the facts. Official records which were not submitted to the McCarthy investigators, show that the Voice of America not only consulted the Central Radio Propagation Laboratories of the Bureau of Standards, but sought and received the expert counsel of the research laboratories of the Radio Corporation of America, the Signal Corps of the U.S. Army, and the Research Laboratory of Electronics of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The RCA report, conducted under Contract SCC-1A-1351, was completed and delivered in March 1951. This report concluded: "For Trans-Pacific transmissions, Seattle is somewhat better than Los Angeles."

On Mar. 2, 1951, the Signal Corps presented its propagation study, a technical analysis without conclusion, to the Voice of America as requested on Feb. 23, 1951.

On Apr. 17, 1951, the CRPL of the Bureau of Standards (Newbern Smith's division) submitted a 39-page report covering data to determine locations for Baker East and West as requested by the Voice at a meeting held in the National Bureau of Standards Feb. 23, 1951.

This fact, if not a contradiction of Dr. Smith's sworn testimony, quoted above, which McCarthy repeated many times with vitally damaging effect, is at least direct evidence that Dr. Smith's statement was extremely misleading. Technically, the Bureau was not consulted on location, but it was asked and gave a 39-page report of data to be used in determining location. McCarthy asked the one question on location only. He made no effort to find out whether any consultation had taken place, nor did Dr. Smith volunteer information on the fact that the Bureau of Standards had prepared a 39-page report which he must or should have known about.

Proof of the fact that the Bureau of Standards did indeed conduct a propagation study at the request of

'The Big Lie'

"Demagogues who shout the loudest about Communism and who smear anyone who disagrees with them by calling them Communists are the foremost disciples of the top technique of Communism—the Big Lie. They can be just as great a danger to your country and mine—to your freedom and mine—as the Communist disciples. They can be even more dangerous in that they are not as easily detected and exposed as the Communists are."

Voice officials is found in the complete transcript of letters on file in the State Department. One of these letters, from the Voice to the Bureau of Standards, dated Apr. 25, 1951, thanks the Bureau for "the propagation study submitted to us under your letter of Apr. 17, 1951." Another, from the Bureau of Standards, dated Apr. 27, 1951, discusses the studies made for the Voice.

Meanwhile, on Mar. 8, 1951, far from acting hastily or furtively, Voice officials had requested the Research Laboratory of Electronics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology to set up a special project (which included a representative of the Bureau of Standards) to evaluate all three of the studies previously made and present a recommendation for locations of Baker East and West.

In May, 1951, the MIT study group, using all the data available from the previous inquiries, including the study made by the Bureau of Standards, endorsed two sites, both of which were accepted by the Voice of America.

Later in 1951, Lewis McKesson, who had been a principal witness supporting McCarthy's view, pressed his "auroral absorption belt" objections to the two locations. The Voice asked the Research Laboratory of Electronics at MIT to re-evaluate its findings in the light of these objections.

On Dec. 26, 1951, Dr. J. B. Wiesner, director of MIT Research Laboratory of Electronics, by letter to the State Department, emphatically reconfirmed the two original sites in Washington and North Carolina as the best locations and stated that McKesson's "method of analysis is so oversimplified as to lead to erroneous conclusions. . . We believe that the original recommendation that the Baker station should be placed in Seattle is still sound."

On the strength of this report, the Voice of America went ahead on its sites in Seattle and North Carolina. In February, 1952, further MIT studies on auroral absorption raised some new concern on the whole problem. Subsequently, at a meeting of experts which included McKesson as well as representatives of all the scientific study groups concerned, it was decided to get the Federal Communications Commission to obtain actual data from a monitoring service on the West Coast. The results were not conclusive, but southern California sites were explored in July of that year. On July 14, a Voice of America staff report, which carefully weighed all the factors, recommended "that there be no change in the present site [Seattle] of the Baker West transmitter."

Will It Come to This?

Justus in The Minneapolis Star

On Feb. 21, 1953, Dr. Wiesner of MIT, head of the study project, reported that "though there would be times when the Seattle transmissions would be poorer than the southern sites . . . under favorable conditions transmissions from Seattle would provide stronger signals than more southerly points. We attempted to determine the relative duration of these various conditions and then formed the judgment that for this particular application the Seattle site would provide a more suitable service. . . . McKesson believes that the location [Baker East] should be further south, possibly in Florida. I do not believe that anything will be gained by such a move during normal conditions. The RCA data, which we still believe to be reasonable, indicated that any location on the southeast coast of the United States would be equally good. Cape Hatteras was suggested because it appeared to be slightly better than most other locations."

None of the above data, showing at worst a conflict of expert opinion, was ever presented at the McCarthy hearings. None of the engineering experts who would have testified in favor of the sites selected by the Voice were ever subpoenaed to appear. In fact one of them, Andrew Ring, a private radio engineering consultant, was at the hearing Feb. 16; when Dr. Wilson Compton, administrator of the Voice, wanting him to testify, stated, "He is right here," McCarthy simply repeated, "He is right here" (page 30, Feb. 15, Committee Hearings) and then went right on asking other questions.

Later, when Ring was away, Roy M. Cohn, McCarthy's chief counsel, stated he could not get hold of Ring. McCarthy berated the State Department for mentioning witnesses who were "out in the Pacific and not available," although Ben Crosby, Department spokesman, made it clear that Ring was in the country and available when the list of witnesses was submitted to the McCarthy Subcommittee. (Hearings, Mar. 3, p. 362)

Tests Confirm Choice

Even more remarkable is the fact that on Mar. 3, only ten days after the Feb. 21, 1953, letter from Dr. Wiesner of MIT to the State Department (quoted above), Cohn, in response to a request to get Dr. Wiesner's testimony, stated:

"The staff contacted Dr. Wiesner of MIT. We talked to him, three of us on the line for over one hour. Dr. Wiesner stated that it was his conclusion that Baker West, from a standpoint of efficiency and reliability, should be moved south and away from Seattle and that he would just as soon not come down and testify as that would be his opinion." (p. 361, Mar. 3 Hearings)

Cohn's claim is astonishing because five months later, on July 31, 1953, in a letter transmitting the report prepared by MIT in conjunction with the Radio Corporation of America and the Federal Communications Commission, Dr. Wiesner wrote:

"After further consultation with representatives of the International Information Administration, and also with Dr. H. H. Beverage of Radio Corporation of America, it was concluded that if large differences in signal level of the sort predicted by Mr. McKesson actually existed they would most certainly be disclosed by a brief series of measurements. Accordingly, plans were made to conduct tests during the period from May 28 to July 7, 1952, with assistance from the FCC under arrangements established by the Department of State.

"The results of these tests failed to substantiate Mr. McKesson's predictions."

In a statement Jan. 18, 1954, Sen. Henry M. Jackson, a member of the McCarthy Subcommittee, emphasized that both Dr. Wiesner and the Radio Corporation of America had endorsed the original location of the projects at Seattle and Cape Hatteras. Said Sen. Jackson: "Their approval had been based upon their own studies and studies of the National Bureau of Standards and the U.S. Signal Corps."

In the same statement, the Senator pointed out that Dr. H. H. Beverage, director of the Radio Research Laboratory of RCA, wrote the State Department May 19, 1952: "Seattle should be slightly better than Los Angeles because the distance to Central China is about 800 miles shorter from Seattle than it is from Los Angeles. It is for this reason that Seattle was recommended as a preferred site."

It is significant, too, that Col. F. P. Andrews, for 14 years the chief of the Alaska Communications System, Army Signal Corps, was never called to appear. Yet in a hearing before the Hickenlooper Committee (Hearings, Mar. 12, 1954), Dr. Compton testified about his views: "Col. Andrews' overseas radio had principal points in the Seattle area where this Baker West plant was to be located. He stated and I understand has since then stated in writing that with the exception of about five per cent of the hours of transmission during the year, he had no trouble in getting radio signals out of that area, and that the Seattle area had proven to be over the 14-year period one of the most advantageous areas. . ."

On Feb. 17, 1953, work on the Baker East and Baker West transmitters was suspended by a badly frightened State Department and canceled a month later, Mar. 20, in the face of wide public impression of "sabotage" and "waste" created by the McCarthy Subcommittee's public hearings. The cancellation came at a cost to the taxpayers of more than $8,000,000 already expended for the projected two most powerful transmitters in the world.

Any fair evaluation of the whole story of the Baker East and Baker West case which captured so many headlines for the McCarthy Subcommittee must certainly result in these conclusions:

1. The location of Baker West in Seattle, despite the fact that only unfavorable engineering testimony was produced in the Hearings, was, as the full evidence reveals, at most a controversy among expert scientists. The fact that the Voice of America made numerous efforts to obtain the best scientific advice from both public and private agencies refutes McCarthy's implied accusation that subversive forces had "purposely planned" to "mislocate" the sites. None of the evidence showing the extent to which expert opinion supported the Voice of America in its selections was introduced before the McCarthy Subcommittee.

2. The Baker East location in North Carolina was never called an unsatisfactory location, even by the Bureau of Standards. The sole exception was McKesson, who favored a more southerly location in Florida.

3. Even if there had been, as charged, some waste in the construction contracts, waste which could not possibly have exceeded a few thousand dollars, this fact could hardly have been the cause for canceling two 15 million dollar projects after more than 8 million dollars had already been expended.

The most extraordinary aftermath of the inquiry was the fact that an investigation which was begun in order to determine whether the transmitters were "purposely" located in the magnetic storm area, ended with the cancellation of the whole plan—certainly the end most urgently desired by the Kremlin—and with a loss of more than $8 million to the taxpayers of the United States.

It is equally noteworthy that, despite all the charges and implications of sabotage and subversion, McCarthy made no effort whatever to place his case before the Attorney General for prosecution. The case ended with the cancellation of the program for Baker East and West.

'Going to the Waldorf'

The investigation of Baker East and West marked only the beginning of prolonged inquiry into the Voice of America, but the techniques developed in the Baker case of having witnesses attribute (under the Subcommittee's leading questions) alleged mistakes in policy to "sabotage," "Communist conspiracy," and deliberate "pattern too consistent to be merely stupidity," were now to run wild in the general Voice of America investigation.

Ambitious and disgruntled employees in the VOA were not slow to size up the situation. The process, whereby some 75 of them formed a so-called "American Underground" which operated as a relay belt of gos-

McCarthyism—Communism's Most Potent Weapon

"I oppose what has come to be known as McCarthyism not, of course, because it is hunting Communists, dead or alive, but because it is not fighting Communism. When it distorts the evidence, when it smears the reputations of innocent people, when it convicts by accusation, when it tortures our judicial processes, and when it creates a climate of fear which shuts our mouths and closes our minds to such an extent that we might easily fall prey to a loud-mouthed, totalitarian suppression, I say that McCarthyism, in its anti-Communism, has become so much like Communism that it is difficult to tell them apart.

"McCarthyism is Communism's most potent weapon in this country; it is democracy's greatest peril. And it is making ominous headway."

sip, recriminations, and suspicions to the McCarthy Subcommittee, is described in Philip Horton's article, "Voices Within the Voice" (July 21, 1953, issue of The Reporter*)*:

"From the moment that the Messrs. Cohn and Schine (McCarthy's staffmen) moved into the Schine suite at the Waldorf Towers a week or so before the committee hearings opened, the 'American Underground' became in effect a secret tribunal.

"At the Voice offices, meanwhile, the expression 'going to the Waldorf' took on a very special meaning. On Feb. 13, the Washington Times-Herald described conditions thus: 'Consternation prevailed in the VOA headquarters at 57th Street and Broadway. . . Committee subpoenas were fluttering on desks like pigeons in Union Square, and more than one hundred witnesses had been lined up. . .'"

Out of this enormous welter of charges, rumors, and gossip, McCarthy and the Subcommittee staff screened out in executive secret sessions what they regarded as their best cases for public hearings. Some of the major cases are analyzed below.

Latin American Broadcasts

Stuart Ayers, assistant chief of the Latin American Division of the Voice of America, complained that a radio series beamed to our southern neighbors, "The Eye of the Eagle," a sort of superman vs. bad men serial story, was using up most of their budget for recordings. The basic charge was that the series was "juvenile," made America look ridiculous, and contained no anti-Communist material. (Hearings, p. 87, Feb. 18) But an analysis of the evidence shows how wide of the mark the charge was.

"MR. COHN: Did you make corrections in this script?

"MR. AYERS: Yes, I inserted seven mentions of the name 'Communist' in the script. . . .

"The Chairman (MCCARTHY): This witness [Ayers] has submitted names of individuals whom he does not consider good loyal Americans, at least not the type of loyal Americans that should be running the information program. . ."

Robert Bauer, the Voice division

'HE Been Cleared?'

Burck in The Chicago Sun-Times

chief responsible for the "Eye of the Eagle" and presumably listed as not a "loyal American," testified that the serial was definitely anti-Communist, and he cited many lines to prove his statement. A few examples:

"On page 8, Script 1, the real name of the man who calls himself Gomez but is a Communist agent, is Saroff, a Russian name. [Saroff] is suspected by the local chief of police of being a top-level foreign agent.

"In Script 3, the opening paragraph is: 'Our story begins in a small country of Central Europe that lost its independence and lives today under a brutal tyranny of an aggressor nation that tries to dominate the world with its absurd political doctrine.'

"There is also the language 'totalitarian aggressor. . .'

"On page 16 the word Communist is mentioned twice.

"The kidnaper in Script 5 is Bukoff, a Russian name; his goons are Ivan and Sergei; the saboteur is Voronov. . . The plot is about sabotage of an oil refinery. The engineer of the refinery has joined the Communist Party, but when he saw what their rotten aims were he quit the party, calling them extortionists. Although 10 years have elapsed, the Communist Party is trying to force him to be its tool.

"In Script 7 the Eagle says: 'The steamer Red Star is registered under the flag of a Communist country.' The spies are on the Red Star. . ." (Hearings, Mar. 6, pp. 536-37)

It is clear from the above that even children would get the point of the Eagle vs. innumerable Russian names as villains. It seems clear that we have here an office squabble about whether the propaganda should be laid on with a shovel or merely a trowel. Yet this for McCarthy was sufficient to raise the question of loyalty of a devoted public servant.

In answer to the charges that using up most of the budget for platters was "waste," Bauer testified "that after we sent six sample programs [Eye of the Eagle] to the field, not less than 23 American missions in Latin America have requested 123 complete sets of the program." He cited a series of rave notices and eager requests for this series from American missions and embassies in the Dominican Republic, Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica, Uruguay, Chile, Peru, Cuba, and Venezuela.

So convincing was Bauer's testimony that Sen. Karl Mundt, second-ranking Republican member of the McCarthy Committee, felt obliged to say: "I am inclined to believe that Mr. Bauer is making a very effective presentation, and that there is some question in my mind but what we are wasting a lot of our Committee time trying to arbitrate an argument between dramatic critics, which happens all over the country." (Hearings, Mar. 5, 1953, p. 538)

Sen. Mundt's comment dismissing the hearings as "wasting a lot of time" did not, of course, receive anything like the attention given the original charges.

Uproar Over the Hebrew Broadcasts

The McCarthy investigation harvested another crop of headlines involving the Voice of America when it turned microphones and news cameras on the proposed discontinuance of the Hebrew language broadcasts to Israel. Serious charges purporting to present "a deliberate pattern to destroy and nullify" the VOA program were placed before the McCarthy inquiry and duly received their share of newspaper and radio attention.

Two of the charges were made by Dr. Sidney Glazer, chief of the Hebrew Service of the Voice of America, whose desk would have been eliminated by discontinuance of the broadcasts. Dr. Glazer's two complaints were: 1) that close to 85 per cent of the people of Israel could understand Hebrew; hence the need for continuing the program, and 2) the discontinuance of the Hebrew language broadcasts would have come at a time when the VOA might have exploited in Israel the sensational Slansky trial in Czechoslovakia which produced widespread charges of Communist anti-Semitism. (Hearings, Mar. 4, pp. 397-398 and Feb. 28, pp. 190-211.) Actually the proposal to drop the Hebrew broadcasts was not carried out at the time, as a result of a decision by higher VOA officials to continue the programs for a while. (Hearings, Feb. 28, p. 198)

The third and most significant charge was made by Gerald F. P. Dooher, acting chief of the Near East desk of VOA, who charged there was a "pattern" favorable to the Communist cause in the action of the VOA:

"DOOHER: Well, in my opinion the cessation of the Hebrew broadcasts would have been a well-struck blow in the Communist cause." (Feb. 28, p. 190)

"COHN (counsel): Have you detected a pattern along these lines?

"DOOHER: I have. . . .

"SEN. POTTER: Mr. Dooher, do you consider that the policies were the result of design, or just plain stupidity?

"DOOHER: Well, sir, I hate to go into the reasoning which may have been behind this pattern. However, I must say that it is exactly what the Soviet Union wanted to happen.

"SEN. POTTER: You think it was too consistent to be just plain stupidity.

"DOOHER: It was certainly consistent, sir, and it certainly was stupid, but I believe that there was a pattern, and stupidity, I believe, does not fall into patterns.

"The Chairman (MCCARTHY): . . . If a man is merely stupid, he does the right thing once in a while." (Feb. 28, p. 199)

(Note: No other charges were made that could establish a "pattern" by either Glazer or Dooher. The cancellation of the Hebrew broadcasts was the only explicit charge.)

Reed Harris, deputy administrator of field programs for International Information Administration, testified in direct refutation of these three charges that:

One—The decision to cancel the Hebrew language broadcasts was made as a result of budget cuts ordered by Congress. It was reached at a full meeting of the Program Allocations Board in July 1952, well before the Slansky trial's spectacular revelations of anti-Semitism in Communist Czechoslovakia. The decision to drop the broadcasts, moreover, was made with the full knowledge and agreement of Dr. Compton, head of the Voice program. (Mar. 4, p. 400)

Two—The number of letters received in December, 1952, from the Hebrew broadcasts at a time when Dr. Glazer testified "we had a terrific increase of listeners" right after the Slansky trials was 16, as compared, for the same month, with 1,557 from Turkey, 1,301 from Greece, 712 from Iran. (Hearings, Mar. 4, p. 448.) Facts of this kind confirmed the belief of Voice officials that Israel was a more educated and literate country than many of her neighbors in the Middle East, with first-rate news services of its own, and that this was why the Voice was not much listened to—not nearly so much as in nearby countries like Turkey and Iran, which have fewer sources of news.

Three—Glazer's insistence that the Hebrew language programs were most effective for Israel was disproved by a letter from the American Embassy in Israel, dated Jan. 9, 1953, which said: "The VOA Hebrew broadcasts to Israel still fail to evoke any great listener interest. As the Embassy sees the situation, a regular continuing press campaign is the only remaining hope to create a raison d'etre for the VOA Hebrew broadcasts." (Hearings, Mar. 4, p. 448)

Four—A scientific panel convened by VOA and asked how the Voice of America could best program in Hebrew or any other languages in Israel, concluded: "Language choice—English preferred; Hebrew second." (Hearings, Mar. 4, p. 449)

Five—VOA broadcasts that go into the Near East and cover Israel include English among many other modern languages familiar to the multi-lingual population of Israel. (Moreover, daily wire and news services to Israel were not cut at all, but continued to carry a heavy volume of anti-Communist propaganda every day.) (Mar. 4, p. 452)

It is worth noting here that again the factual refutation received nowhere near the attention given the original charges. Even more significant in this case, however, is the remarkable fact that two months after the public hearings had been concluded, Dr. Robert L. Johnson, president of Temple University, who had been appointed head of the International Information Administration (IIA) by the Eisenhower regime, did precisely what those pilloried by McCarthy proposed to do: he canceled the Hebrew language broadcasts to Israel. But this time there was no mention at all of a "pattern" of Communist-inspired sabotage.

The Charge of Atheism

On Mar. 2, 1953, Dr. John Cocutz, acting chief of Voice's Rumanian service, was testifying critically of Voice operations. In the midst of a discussion of the use of religion to fight Communism in VOA broadcasts, he said he had heard that Roger Lyons, director of religious programming for the Voice of America, was an atheist.

"I talked with [Edwin M. J.] Kretzman (chief policy advisor of VOA) about it and he informed me there is a religious desk in the VOA, which is supposed to help the different language services with religious materials and scripts. 'But,' he said to me, 'I already told some other religious leaders around here that the chief of that desk does not believe in God.' (Hearings, Mar. 2, p. 234)

"The Chairman (MCCARTHY): You mean the Policy Director put an atheist or agnostic in charge? . . .

"DR. COCUTZ: I am just quoting what Mr. Kretzman told me.

"SEN. JACKSON: Mr. Kretzman told you he was an atheist?

"DR. COCUTZ: No; Mr. Kretzman told me that he told somebody else also that Mr. Lyons is an atheist." (Mar. 2, pp. 234-235)

Lyons demanded an opportunity to reply. Under oath he testified: "I am not an atheist, or an agnostic. I do believe in God and I would not have accepted the position of Director of Religious Programs if I had not believed in God, and I realize the importance of emphasizing religious and moral factors in the Voice of America broadcasts. . . . I have been in the present position for 18 months, and I have statements from the religious advisory panel of the information program consisting of distinguished religious leaders stating that since I have been in this position there has been a marked improvement in both the quality and quantity of religious programming on the Voice of America.

"I also have letters from clergymen of all faiths testifying that I have done a good job under my responsibility." (Mar. 2, p. 299)

Kretzman, called in to testify on Cocutz's statement, said:

"I was asked at one time by a superior in the Department of State what was Roger Lyons' specific religious sectarian adherence. My answer was that that was not a pertinent question for him to ask; and laughingly I added, 'For all I know, he may be an atheist.'

"This I knew not to be a fact because I had talked to Mr. Lyons previously. . .

"I would like to hasten to add that I do not think an atheist could do Mr. Lyons' job and I knew that he was not. . . He is a man of profound religious beliefs [and] a deep belief in God, and he has done a magnificent job in stepping up the religious output of the Voice." (Mar. 3, pp. 307-308)

No supporting evidence was produced for Dr. Cocutz' hearsay charge by any clergyman despite the fact that for 18 months on his job Lyons was daily in touch with leaders of all faiths and worked directly with an advisory panel of religious leaders. The headlines reporting refutation of the charge that the head of the VOA's religious desk was an atheist were, inevitably, far smaller and far less conspicuously displayed than the original front-page stories screaming the cry of atheism.

Destroying the Voice

The McCarthy attack on the Voice of America continued in subsequent hearings. On Mar. 3, Reed Harris, the deputy administrator, was called, ostensibly to answer the charges made against the VOA at a public hearing of the Subcommittee which was nationally televised. In actual fact, of the two-hour session covering 40 pages of testimony (pp. 331-370), only nine pages dealt with the charges against VOA. The other 31 pages constituted a gruelling cross-examination on a book, King Football, written by Harris 21 years before, in 1932, just after he left college. The book—which Harris testified, "I wrote in three weeks and have regretted ever since"—dealt largely with the dangers of the overemphasis of intercollegiate football, but included other reflections on higher education.

On the basis of a few paragraphs of sophomoric conclusions arising from an excess of youthful idealistic enthusiasm for academic freedom in a book which had almost no sales and was long since repudiated and forgotten by its author, McCarthy embarked on a relentless vilification that far outdid anything previously heard in these hearings.

No possibility of guilt by innuendo, nor by the most tenuous or fleeting association, was overlooked in digging into events that occurred in a totally different atmosphere 21 years ago. Nineteen years of a distinguished career in public service with full FBI clearance—in fact, the man's entire mature life—was ignored while a U.S. Senator explored the "sinister" significance of a few paragraphs in King Football.

'The Ghost of Torquemada'

"McCarthy's methods of investigation are an assault on and a denial of the dignity of the individual. Christianity teaches that men are 'made in the image and likeness of God' and so loved by Him that He died on the Cross for them. Democracy is one attempt in the political sphere to safeguard and protect that basic respect for each individual having something sacred within him.

"McCarthy has stirred up the ghost of Torquemada and the Inquisitors, which Catholics have been trying to bury as a small and unpleasant incident, as it was, in the total history of the Church. But for many today the Church has once again been covered with mud . . .

"It seems that Catholics should re-examine the basic tenets of their own Faith and of the American political and democratic system. For with the distortions and oversimplifications of McCarthy we are headed for the disruption and negation of everything both these represent at their finest."

GEORGE PATRICK MICHAEL CARLIN
The Catholic Worker
January, 1954

What was the result of these "hearings"?

The U.S. Advisory Commission on Information, a group of distinguished citizens appointed by the President, reported Feb. 3, 1954, that the kind of investigation conducted by McCarthy had seriously crippled the country's global propaganda program.

"It is not too much to say," the Commission reported, "that the desirable results sought through the activities of the information program are largely offset, if not destroyed, by the constant counter-barrage which is so generously distributed to the peoples of the world."

Noting that the information program had been investigated in 1953 by two groups, the McCarthy Subcommittee and a Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee headed by Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper of Iowa, the Commission found that the Hickenlooper group "rendered thoroughly and extremely constructive" service in revealing both "the strengths" and "weaknesses" of the information program.

But, turning its attention to the McCarthy inquiry, the Commission said: "The wide and unfavorable publicity that resulted from one of the Congressional investigations gave the agency such a bad name that professionally competent persons were reluctant to accept employment in it." Moreover, said the Commission, such investigations make information workers concentrate on "how the messages will sound or appear to investigators and completely lose sight of whether they will be effective with their intended audience.

"Some of the investigations which this agency has undergone in the past year have produced unfavorable impressions abroad on the very persons to whom the program is directed."

Commenting on the report of the Commission, McCarthy said he proposed to reopen the investigation of the overseas information program. "I know we will scare hell out of a few Communists—demoralize them," he said. "I don't mind demoralizing the Communist Party."

This comment was made by McCarthy despite the fact that the Commission is composed of Erwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor; Philip D. Reed, chairman of the Board of the General Electric Co.; Ben Hibbs, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, and Justin Miller, chairman of the board of the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters.

The "Book-burnings"

The McCarthy investigation which chilled thoughtful Americans most and shook the prestige of our country as the leader of the free world was the inquiry into the presence of books by Communist authors in U.S. libraries in foreign countries. The striking fact about these explosive hearings was that they were completely unnecessary, for the Republican-controlled State Department, under which these libraries functioned, had seven weeks earlier ordered the removal from the library shelves of all books by Communist authors and sympathizers which did not "affirmatively serve the ends of democracy." The basic principle in the State Department directive, issued Feb. 3, was that the content of the book, rather than the identity of the author, should determine its utility. In other words, it would be permissible to carry on the shelves of overseas libraries a book written by a Communist if the contents were such that the book could be used for an anti-Communist purpose.

In establishing its policy for the 189 libraries, with 2,000,000 books in 63 countries, the State Department was guided by the recommendations of its Advisory Commission of eminent authorities: Dr. J. L. Morrill, president of the University of Minnesota, chairman; Dr. Harold Willis Dodds, president of Princeton University; Dr. Edwin B. Fred, president of the University of Wisconsin; Dr. Martin R. P. McGuire, of Catholic University; and Mark Starr, educational director of the militantly anti-Communist International Ladies Garment Workers Union.

This Commission unanimously endorsed the recommendation of its Committee on Books Abroad (composed of top-flight book publishers, librarians, and scholars) which made this recommendation: ". . . the Committee is positive and unanimous in its decision to recommend to the U.S. Advisory Commission on Educational Exchange that authorship should not be a criterion for determining whether or not a book is available for U.S. libraries abroad. In this connection the Committee is unanimous in its recommendation that the content of the book regardless of authorship, be the criterion which determines its availability for inclusion in the U.S. libraries." (Italics ours)

Evidence produced by the State Department showed that almost all the books by Communist authors and sympathizers on the shelves of overseas libraries were of pre-1947 vintage. Other books were, in addition, purchased after 1948, and on these Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, former head of the Central Intelligence Agency and presently Undersecretary of State in the Eisenhower Administration, testified emphatically before the Senate Appropriations Committee July 20, 1953:

". . . the Library Service had spent no money since 1947 for books by Communists. . . I can say categorically that the Secretary of State is and has been opposed to the works of Communist authors per se. . . But the overseas libraries must be free to put Communist works on their shelves if they can be used to counter Soviet propaganda."

This common-sense approach to the problem, which represented the heart of the State Department's Feb. 3 directive, which in turn was based on the unanimous judgment of two groups of distinguished authorities, was not allowed to function for long, however. On Mar. 24, 1953, McCarthy launched his much-publicized hearings on the charge that American libraries abroad were permeated with Communist books. Instead of the quiet corrective adopted by the State Department, the nation and the world were to be exposed to days of noisy headlines shouting a Communist plot to subvert the overseas libraries for Soviet purposes.

McCarthy's tactics in conducting the inquiry were clearly designed to magnify the scope of the problem and create an impression of widespread disloyalty among government employees. Thus, he subpoenaed before his Committee a number of witnesses whose political views were already well-known, in some cases to the public, and in all cases to the FBI. These witnesses, who were not government employees, had written books which appeared on the shelves of the overseas libraries. When questioned under oath regarding Communist connections, they refused for a variety of reasons to testify, claiming the protection of the Fifth Amendment.

McCarthy succeeded in so confusing the authors with government employees that the public gained the totally false impression that a number of public officials were claiming the protection of the Fifth Amendment.

This impression was heightened by the testimony of witnesses friendly to McCarthy like Karl Baarslag, formerly associated with the American Legion's National Americanism Commission, who subsequently joined McCarthy's staff as a paid employee. Baarslag's testimony in response to Counselor Cohn's questioning ran like this:

"COHN: Did you look to see whether you could find any anti-Communist material [in Germany]?

"BAARSLAG: . . . My estimate of the proportion would be that the pro-Soviet, anti-American literature ran roughly eight or nine to possibly four or five books on our side." (Hearings, Apr. 2, p. 160) "I was rather shocked nevertheless to find that they had never heard of it [American Legion Magazine]. So I hopefully asked for The Freeman. They had never heard of that. I asked for The National Republic and they had never heard of that. There were no anti-Communist magazines." (Apr. 2, p. 161)

(Note: These three magazines seemed to have exhausted his list of American anti-Communist publications, although he later testified that the libraries subscribed to 520 publications, including most magazines—nearly all of which are conservative and strongly anti-Communist—available at newstands.)

". . . the pattern is one of a vast, as we feel, planned conspiracy that has been going on in this country for many years not only to push pro-Soviet and pro-Communist books, but, to me what is far more sinister and dangerous, the blacklisting, suppression, and knifing of books on our side, the anti-Communist books, and the books telling the truth about Soviet Russia." (Hearings, Apr. 2, p. 163)

It is a measure of the demoralization in the State Department created by McCarthy's operations that Dr. Robert L. Johnson, former president of Temple University and the responsible head of the IIA under which the libraries operated, did not answer these shocking charges until more than two months later, on July 15, when for reasons of ill health he resigned his post.

Helping the Communists

On that date in a public statement and also in a letter to McCarthy, Johnson lashed out at Baarslag's statements as "flagrantly inaccurate" and "false." He said: "I cannot understand why anyone would deal in such patent falsehoods unless he were completely incompetent as an observer or downright malicious." Johnson pointed out that his department had distributed 6,000,000 anti-Communist books and that there were 16,729 anti-Communist works in the libraries.

"The reputation of the American people has suffered enough as a result of irresponsible charges and actions in connection with our program abroad. The only group that has gained through these wicked attacks has been the Communist international movement. It is one of the tragic ironies of our time that some of those 'who are in the forefront of the fight against Communism' are among those who are damaging the action programs that do battle against it."

Meanwhile, in the interim between Baarslag's April testimony and Johnson's July reply, a greatly harried State Department issued a series of directives which at first sought to clarify the Feb. 3 directive, but subsequently began to reverse the previous criterion of content rather than authorship. Directive after directive seems only to have heightened the confusion and fright of overseas library officials who could read the headlines in the current American newspapers and who knew what had already happened to the Voice of America.

Aping the Dictators

Fitzpatrick in The St. Louis Post-Dispatch

While our friends abroad looked on with mounting horror, frenzied American officials abroad sought to work their way through the layers of confusion. Then, on June 15, the world press reported that a jittery America, succumbing to the Hitler-like methods of McCarthy, was actually burning books. A front-page story in the New York Times June 16 follows:

SOME BOOKS LITERALLY BURNED AFTER INQUIRY, DULLES REPORTS

"John Foster Dulles, the Secretary of State, disclosed today that there had been a literal though small-scale burning of books after Congressional investigations as his department had moved to rid the shelves of its Information Service libraries abroad of works by Communist authors.

"Secretary Dulles set the number of books burned at 11."

Only the day before, President Eisenhower had felt obliged to denounce the book-burners and thought control. Speaking at the commencement service at Dartmouth College, the President said: "Don't join the book-burners. Don't think you are going to conceal faults by concealing evidence that they ever existed. Don't be afraid to go in your library and read every book as long as any document does not offend our own ideas of decency. That should be the only censorship.

"How can we defeat Communism unless we know what it is? What it teaches—why does it have such an appeal for men? . . . . We have got to fight it with something better."

The tide now began to run against McCarthy on this issue. President Eisenhower returned to the attack June 26 when he wrote the American Library Association, assembled in convention at Los Angeles, criticizing as un-American "zealots" who with "more wrath than wisdom" sought to suppress information and ideas.

"Freedom cannot be censored into existence," he said. "A democracy smugly disdainful of new ideas would be a sick democracy. A democracy chronically fearful of new ideas would be a dying democracy."

At the conclusion of its convention, the American Library Association adopted a resolution threatening to withdraw its support of the government's overseas library program "unless the integrity and effectiveness of the program is reassured." The Association, consisting of 21,000 members, unanimously criticized the State Department for removing books from the libraries because loyalty of some authors and the material in some volumes were questioned.

Heartened by these developments and concerned about the frightful toll in world opinion, the State Department decided to defy McCarthy and send out, on July 8, its 11th directive to the overseas libraries, instructing them to revert to the original Feb. 3 directive to judge removal of books by content rather than by authorship.

The new directive termed book-burning a "wicked symbolic act" that was not to be condoned. The yardstick for selection of books for overseas libraries, it emphasized, was the usefulness of a particular book in meeting the particularized needs of a particular area. Said Dr. Johnson on that occasion: "We don't deal with ideas we dislike by imitating the totalitarian techniques we despise. The burning of a book is not an act against that book alone; it is an act against free institutions."

McCarthy's response to Johnson's statement avoided discussion of the issue on its merits, but threatened to cut the budget of the International Information Administration in reprisal.

Perhaps the most revealing reaction to Dr. Johnson's statement came from a Republican member of the McCarthy Subcommittee, Sen. Charles Potter of Michigan, who exclaimed: "I've never seen anything like this committee. It seems we can't go 15 minutes without running into some new problem." (Quoted by United Press, July 17, 1953)

The record would not be complete without noting that despite the July directive making content rather than authorship the yardstick of acceptability for books in overseas libraries, the foreign information program has since retreated in several major respects from that position—largely in response to hysteria generated by McCarthyism.

The Rothschild Case

McCarthy's handling of the case of Edward Rothschild, a bookbinder in the Government Printing Office (GPO), can be interpreted as a striking example of the Senator's inability to stand prosperity. For here was a case that seemed more solidly based than his others, and many of his critics were quick to concede that maybe he "had something here."

But McCarthy was unwilling to present the facts as they were; he insisted on indulging in reckless exaggeration and distortion. For example, on a dash out to San Diego, to "take care of a matter" concerning the GPO investigation, McCarthy, with a straight face, told newsmen that this case could be "worse than the Alger Hiss case." (United Press dispatch, Aug. 24, 1953.)

Not content with his case against Rothschild, which itself was magnified beyond the provable facts (see below), McCarthy, in a series of press conferences, tossed out these accusations:

1. "Sen. McCarthy charged that the Printing Office harbored a 'gambling ring.' He said heavy los-

'Making It Easy for Communists'

"Despite the fact that McCarthy has not been responsible for the conviction of anybody whom he has accused under the cloak of Senatorial immunity, he has justified his irresponsible charges on the basis that he has alerted the general public to the dangers of Communism.

"What he has actually done is to incite a kind of hysteria which must please the Kremlin mightily. 'Divide and conquer' is an old technique. Make everybody suspicious of his neighbor, turn friend against friend, inject a religious angle into the controversy, and when the time is ripe and protagonists have knocked themselves out, step in and take over.

"Intentionally or not, McCarthy is making it easy for Communists to operate behind the smokescreen he throws up."

ers among employees could be blackmailed by agents who sought classified information and might gladly square losses to get such data. This, he held, made gambling 'a grave security risk.'" (New York Times, Aug. 29, 1953)

Aside from the refusal under the Fifth Amendment of one witness to answer questions on this score, no evidence whatever was presented at the hearings to substantiate this sensational charge of a 'gambling ring' operating in the GPO, and none has turned up since.

2. "Chairman (McCarthy): . . . . Counsel has been instructed to contact Mr. Cole [GPO security officer] and tell him as soon as he is ready to attempt to explain why 35 cases—where they had a great mass of information from the FBI and other Federal agencies of Communist activities—all were cleared." (Aug. 22 Hearings, p. 114)

Cole, when he testified before the Subcommittee, was never asked the question raised above about the "35 cases" and was obliged to make his reply on this point at a press conference:

"Mr. Cole also disclosed that the FBI had been asked to make a full field investigation of 176 printing office employees who occupied 'sensitive' positions.

"Of the 35 employees who were principals in loyalty cases handled by the printing office security officials, he stated, 15 had been dismissed. One had retired, he added, and the cases of the other 19 were to receive full field investigation in accordance with the new security procedures established by President Eisenhower several weeks ago." (New York Times, Aug. 21)

3. Throughout the hearings and in his press conferences McCarthy gave out a vastly exaggerated version of the amount of classified material handled by the GPO. Typical comment:

"McCarthy also said he was 'trying to establish' whether Soviet agents purportedly working for the GPO stole secret hydrogen bomb information." (United Press dispatch, Aug. 24)

Cole again had to make use of his press conference to put the situation in its proper perspective:

This page illustrates one of the most striking facts to emerge from a study of McCarthy in action—that he has actually pleased the Communists and played into their hands. Herbert Philbrick (inset left), who risked his life as an FBI counterspy within the Communist Party for nine years, wrote the story of his experiences in the book shown above. At the time of the launching of the book, Philbrick was interviewed by newspapermen in New York. The New York Herald-Tribune, the paper for which Philbrick subsequently went to work, reported that he said that Communist Party members "just love" McCarthy's "name-calling" because "it creates confusion, it makes the party's strength appear greater than it really is, and harms men whom the 'comrades call those stupid liberals.'"

" 'Secrets of the atomic bomb or the hydrogen bomb,' Mr. Cole declared, 'were not available to employees of the printing office. Material marked restricted, confidential, secret, and top-secret came to the plant from other government agencies, but very little matter in the last two categories was processed.

" 'Secret material processed in the printing office constituted only an infinitesimal part of the $73 to $98 million worth of printing it did annually.'

"He criticized as 'completely misleading' some newspaper headlines that 'carloads of secrets' had been stolen from the office." (New York Times, Aug. 21)

Still, if we ignore McCarthy's sensational exaggerations and spectacular charges of "gambling rings" and "35 cases" that were intended for newspaper headlines, the evidence in the Rothschild case was of a relatively solid character as compared to his "evidence" in all previous cases.

The evidence ran as follows:

1. Mrs. Markward, an undercover FBI agent posing as a Communist from 1943 to 1951, definitely stated that Mrs. Rothschild was a member of the Communist Party with whom she had attended some 12 meetings and carried out a number of mass mailings in New York and Washington, D.C., in the period 1945-1947. Mr. Rothschild was in the Navy at the time, and Mrs. Markward therefore was not able to make any statement on whether he had had any Communist connections. (Resume of hearings, pp. 1-28, Aug. 17)

2. James Phillips, a fellow GPO employee of Mr. Rothschild, testified he had attended a meeting with Rothschild where he had been invited to help in forming a GPO Communist cell in 1939. In the same year Phillips alleged that a Fred Sillers and Rothschild again pressed him to join the Communist Party. (Resume of hearings, pp. 28-30, Aug. 17)

3. Miss Cleta Guess, former GPO worker as assistant to Rothschild, testified, in a sworn affidavit read at the hearings, that in the period 1941-43 when she had worked with him, Rothschild had put in his right pocket a secret code of the Merchant Marine and other pamphlets; had carried the Daily Worker in his left pocket; had shown an interest in airplane manuals; and had defended the Communists in an argument with her. (Resume of affidavit, Hearings, Aug. 20, pp. 110-112)

Both Mr. and Mrs. Rothschild refused, under the protection of the Fifth Amendment, to testify in answer to the charges when they appeared before the Subcommittee public hearing, although Mr. Rothschild had previously denied four times under oath at Loyalty Board hearings that he had any Communist connections. It is noteworthy that Rothschild was the first among the scores of government employees summoned by McCarthy over a six-months period who refused to answer questions by claiming the protection of the Fifth Amendment. All the other witnesses who had claimed the privilege up to then were not employed by the government.

As a result of the hearings Rothschild was suspended and later resigned. To date there is nothing to indicate that the Attorney-General has found sufficient evidence in the hearings to seek an indictment of Rothschild.

It is worth noting here that in what was his strongest case McCarthy's target was an agency of government "not under the executive authority of the White House. Responsibility for the Government Printing Office rests on the six-man Joint Congressional Committee on Printing, consisting of Sens. Jenner of Indiana, Carlson of Kansas, and Hayden of Arizona, and Reps. LeCompte of Iowa, Schenck of Ohio, and Trumble of Arkansas. The chairman is Sen. Jenner." (St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Aug. 18, 1953)

The Monmouth Caper

Of the many investigations conducted by McCarthy few have been more spectacularly launched than the investigation into "espionage" at Fort Monmouth, N. J., the Army's vast Signal Corps facility where some of the most vital research into radar is carried on.

Few flopped more spectacularly.

McCarthy was on his honeymoon in Spanish Cay, British West Indies, when, as the Associated Press reported Oct. 9, 1953, a staff member of the McCarthy committee announced that "alleged security leaks" were being investigated at Fort Monmouth.

Dramatically cutting off his honeymoon, McCarthy rushed back to the United States. Up until the time he arrived in New York to take over the investigation, there had been no claims of espionage involved in the probe. On Oct. 12, he formally launched the headline phase of the investigation with the statement, "It has all the earmarks of extremely dangerous espionage. If it develops it may envelop the entire Signal Corps." The next day McCarthy told the Washington Star, "I am of the opinion that it definitely involves espionage."

Hearings were held behind closed doors. Developments were fed to the press by McCarthy himself when he emerged periodically from the secret proceedings to tell the public what he was "uncovering." This strange manner of reporting a vital story on espionage did not prevent otherwise responsible papers from running headlines such as these:

"ARMY RADAR DATA REPORTED MISSING"; "ESPIONAGE IN SIGNAL CORPS FOR TEN YEARS IS CHARGED"; "MCCARTHY HINTS OF SPY PLOT HITTING WHOLE SIGNAL CORPS"; "WITNESS CRACKS, BARES SPY RING AT RADAR CENTER."

The New York Post established a pattern for responsible reporting, which few other papers followed, by running the following box with each story on new developments in the hearings: "Neither the Post nor any other newspaper or press service is being permitted to cover the current Senate hearings. What you read here is what Sen. McCarthy gives out to reporters when he emerges periodically from behind the closed doors."

Here are some of the most sensational charges that helped to make

'Jeopardize Foreign Policy'

"Reckless blasts hurled at the State Department by Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy, Wisconsin Republican, have reached a point where they jeopardize this nation's foreign policy and threaten collapse of the Republican Administration program at home."

Eau Claire (Wis.) Leader

those headlines and also the facts subsequently uncovered which reveal how frequently flimsy and sometimes non-existent was the evidence to support the reckless charges:

One—Twenty-six out of 57 secret documents missing from the Signal Corps laboratory showed up in the Russian Zone of Eastern Germany. This charge was made in Chicago by Sen. Everett Dirksen, Illinois Republican and member of the McCarthy Subcommittee.

In a series of documented articles on the Monmouth investigation in the Washington Post, Murrey Marder exposed the distortion involved in this as well as other charges made by McCarthy and his associates. Marder showed Nov. 8 that this was an old charge that had been investigated in 1952 by Army Intelligence and the FBI and found to be without basis in fact. The Associated Press reported Oct. 18, 1953, that the Army had determined "more than a year ago" that no documents had been stolen. The Army, said the AP, officially announced that "the documents alleged to have been missing at that time were accounted for."

Two—McCarthy charged that an East German scientist who had fled the Soviet Zone reported that he heard Communist scientists say that "the Russians could get anything they wanted out of Fort Monmouth." McCarthy, describing the man as an "eminent scientist," said that the "scientist" had seen "many microfilmed copies of documents."

The Washington Post reported on Nov. 8: "An investigation of that charge, in which the FBI participated, was ordered in December 1952 [nearly a year before McCarthy 'uncovered' him], and then was dropped about March, 1953. McCarthy acknowledged that some intelligence officers believed that the man was 'boasting.' In news accounts last month the man was first described as 'an eminent scientist' and then a 'technician' when it was found he was only 21 years old at the time of escape from the Soviet Zone."

Meanwhile, on Nov. 13, Secretary of the Army Stevens told a press conference that "we [the Army] have been unable to find anything relating to espionage." According to the Christian Science Monitor of Nov. 18, Stevens had said that among the 33 suspensions at Fort Monmouth (most of which occurred after McCarthy started his probe), none had turned out to be spies. On Nov. 24 the Monitor quoted Stevens as saying that no "current case" of subversion had been uncovered during an Army G-2 investigation paralleling McCarthy's.

McCarthy Shifts His Position

McCarthy, in the meantime, began to deny that he had ever charged "espionage" at Fort Monmouth (and at the same time launched a diversionary investigation of General Electric in Schenectady). But the Associated Press had quoted him in a dispatch which hit many front pages Oct. 12 as saying that testimony before his Subcommittee "has all the earmarks that extremely dangerous espionage had been committed" and "if it develops as it has been, it will envelop the whole Signal Corps." On Nov. 17, McCarthy was quoted in the New York Times in reply to Army Secretary Stevens: "The open hearings beginning next Tuesday will permit the public to see the extent of Communist infiltration and espionage in the Signal Corps. It is extremely important, in view of Mr. Stevens' statement, that the public watch the testimony closely. Regardless of what I say, or what Mr. Stevens said, the final word will come from the witnesses."

In a radio debate with Roy Cohn, counsel for the McCarthy Subcommittee, Joseph Rauh, vice-chairman of Americans for Democratic Action, charged on Nov. 22 that McCarthy "would have nothing on [the following] Tuesday to support their hoax." Cohn replied that the public hearings "will bear out everything that Sen. McCarthy has said."

Late in November there were two days of open hearings. Three witnesses refused to testify about alleged Communist activities and two refused to say if they had engaged in espionage. None of these were current or even recent Fort Monmouth employees.

Later McCarthy shifted his position. Although he had several times insisted that "espionage" existed (as on Oct. 13 when he said, "I think there is no question but that espionage is involved"), he said Dec. 9, "We don't expect to come up with anything more than contempt or perjury. It is not our function to develop cases of espionage."

But McCarthy was again to change his story. In Senate debate Feb. 2, 1954, McCarthy insisted his one-man inquiry had turned up "very, very current espionage" at Fort Monmouth. He made this claim after Sen. Allen J. Ellender, Louisiana Democrat, read a letter from Army Secretary Stevens, dated Jan. 15, 1954, saying that "insofar as the Army has thus far been able to determine, there is no current espionage or other subversive activities at Fort Monmouth." (Congressional Record, Feb. 2, p. 1053)

After completing a comprehensive inquiry into McCarthy's investigation of Fort Monmouth, the New York Times reported Jan. 13, 1954, that 19 employees were suspended as security risks, one because, among other things, his mother had enrolled him in the left-wing Young Pioneers of America in 1933 and 1934, when he was 12 and 13 years old; another, an electronics engineer, because he "favored the 'leftist' policies of Max Lerner," a militantly anti-

'McCarthyism Could Lick Us'

"I do not think Stalin could have licked us; I do not think that whoever now may be running Russia can lick us. But McCarthy and the spirit of McCarthyism could lick us—no doubt without intention, but they could—by getting us to fighting among ourselves like the Romans, by persuading every man that he must keep on looking over his shoulder, to make sure that the man beside him doesn't stab him in the back. There is still enough vitality in Western civilization to save us, unless we insist on disemboweling ourselves."

Communist writer; and a third, a physicist, because, among other things, he "attempted to transmit" a reprint of a publication to a Czechoslovak professor who requested it. Said the New York Times:

"These, a New York Times study shows, are among the 19 Monmouth employees now suspended without pay as security risks. . . .

"Such charges—none involving espionage or disloyalty, and all vigorously rebutted by the employees—are generally a far cry from the headlines of possible Monmouth spying raised by Sen. McCarthy. In fact, the Wisconsin Republican's Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations has thus far called only one present Monmouth employee in public hearings.

"So far as can be determined, only two of the employees now suspended have been charged with even past membership in the Communist Party. They and all others deny any Communist sympathy."

Public Opinion Supports The Monmouth Workers

During the hearings Telford Taylor, prominent New York attorney and former Brigadier General who was chief counsel for the United States at the Nuremberg war crime trials, delivered an address at West Point on Nov. 27 in which he said that "most of the McCarthy accusations at Fort Monmouth are indefensible fabrications." Unless McCarthy proves his charges of espionage, Gen. Taylor said, he "will stand condemned as a dangerous adventurer who does not hesitate to gamble with the national security."

McCarthy replied that Taylor had left government service with an "unresolved question of loyalty" showing on his civil service record. He also demanded an explanation from West Point officials of why Taylor was allowed to speak to the cadets at the institution.

Taylor declared that McCarthy's charges were "unfounded and false." Philip Young, Eisenhower-appointed chairman of the U.S. Civil Service Commission, said he knew of no questions about Taylor's loyalty being raised since he entered the Commission in April.

"I've noticed in the past that some of his [McCarthy's] references have not been too accurate," Young said.

A Torch Without Light

Justus in The Minneapolis Star

On Dec. 9 McCarthy said he was issuing a subpoena for Taylor to appear before the Committee. "He is retired," McCarthy said, "and we are going to see if he is getting a pension or in what way the government is supporting him." Shortly afterward Taylor, still awaiting service of a subpoena, predicted that a "thorough investigation" of McCarthy's Fort Monmouth charges would "destroy the Senator."

In the communities where the Monmouth employees live, public opinion has run strongly in their favor. Thus, the Asbury Park Press, in a Nov. 28 editorial, characterized most McCarthy charges then known to it as "ridiculously thin accusations," and said McCarthy's tactics "can easily become a threat to American principles of liberty and justice." The Long Branch Daily Record, in a Dec. 16 editorial, denounced "the spectre of McCarthy daily sitting in sole judgment of free American citizens, like a demigod." The Daily Record bitterly denounced what it called the Senator's "reckless charges; his masterful dissemination of half truths, insinuations, and innuendos; his assumption of the roles of prosecutor, judge, and jury, and now his threatened intimidation of the Army's loyalty review board; his callous disregard of the reputations of American citizens who have never been convicted of anything, much less accused; his snide 'ad lib' comments; his abrogation of time-honored civil liberties."

The Federation of American Scientists, after hearing a report from its own committee which looked into the Fort Monmouth case, adopted a statement saying that the McCarthy investigation was wrecking morale among the scientists at Fort Monmouth and could "result in a net gain for those who work against the interests of the United States." Scientists, it said, will seek work elsewhere rather than endure the kind of treatment suffered at McCarthy's hands at Fort Monmouth.

"Investigations which are characterized largely by sensational headlines and wholesale suspensions can, by crippling our defense research, actually result in a net gain for those who work against the interests of the United States," the statement said. "The effect on our national security would be extremely serious if such investigative methods are allowed to spread to other areas of this country's scientific effort."

At a conference of scientists at Columbia University, Prof. Ernest C. Pollard, Yale University physicist, who is chairman of the Scientists Committee on Loyalty and Security of the Federation, reported that "morale among the professional staff [at Fort Monmouth] is very poor" and that "a high percentage of the scientists not implicated in the present investigations are now planning to seek employment elsewhere."

Prof. Pollard emphasized that "no charges of actual espionage or real subversive activity have been made against any of the 19 scientists suspended or the ten scientists who have been transferred to unclassified work." He emphasized the fact that, contrary to general belief, "not a single scientist" at Fort Monmouth had pleaded the Fifth Amendment, and only one of those suspended had received a public hearing. Pollard's committee found that the "atmosphere of suspicion and distrust" created by the McCarthy charges had "seriously disrupted" the vital defense work of "developing the continental defense network" of the United States. (Quoted in the New York Times, Jan. 30, 1954.)

Writing in the Republican New York Herald Tribune on Dec. 8, Walter Millis, author and historian, said, "This really vital and sensitive military installation has been wrecked—more thoroughly than any Soviet saboteur could have dreamed of doing it—by the kind of anti-Communism of which Sen. McCarthy has made himself the leader.

> "The Fort Monmouth situation is truly scandalous. It is so scandalous that some who have looked into it, thoroughly conservative in outlook and Republican in politics, are talking about demanding a Congressional investigation—not into the alleged espionage (of which on Secretary Stevens' word, no evidence of any kind has been discovered by the Army) but into the processes of witchhunting, bigotry, cowardice, race prejudice, and sheer incompetence which have turned one of our top-level military-scientific operations into a mare's nest of exasperation, fear, and futility. . .

"The personal injustice involved is not here considered. The impairment of the national defense is something which no one whose life may one day hang upon the excellence of our radar screens can dare to disregard."

Editorially, the Herald Tribune said, "The picture of this place as a nest of spies can hardly have done less than weaken the incentives which spur such men to creative work—to say nothing of promoting doubts and confusion in the American public. The thought that such a picture was created by Sen. McCarthy to further his own ambition is bitter indeed."

The Washington Post said McCarthy's accusations "shattered morale at a post of vital significance to the national defense and badly disrupted activity in an area where work ought to be going forward with utmost energy."

Dr. Harold C. Urey, one of the nation's foremost atomic scientists and Nobel Prize winner, denounced McCarthy's investigation as an "irresponsible type of activity" which had ruined morale "among scientific personnel at Fort Monmouth," according to an Associated Press dispatch. Said Dr. Urey: "I don't believe the U.S.S.R. has a better agent in the country than Sen. McCarthy."

McCarthy had the last word. He said the investigation wasn't closed. He has never formally closed one.

A Major Setback

Before Sen. McCarthy had completed six months as chairman of the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, he had been in a head-on clash with the press, some of the nation's educational institutions, the State Department, the Pentagon, the Foreign Economic Administration, and the White House. At the end of six months he found himself in a stormy controversy involving religion—a controversy in which he was to suffer a major defeat, the worst since he took over the Subcommittee in January of 1953.

The stage was set for the explosion when the six other members of the Subcommittee received a memorandum from McCarthy late in June informing them for the first time that

The Fort Monmouth Timetable

The changing character of McCarthy's claims in the Fort Monmouth case shows up graphically in this timetable:

Oct. 12, 1953

"It has all the earmarks of extremely dangerous espionage. If it develops, it may envelop the entire Signal Corps." (New York Times)

"It looks very much like a case of current espionage." (Associated Press)

Oct. 21, 1953

"I am not saying whether there is espionage or there is not. . . It would be improper for me to evaluate the testimony. . . I think it is easy for a reporter to make a mistake and refer to espionage. I have been giving reporters a daily resume of the testimony. I think with all of the evidence coming out—I think some of them may have used the word 'alleged espionage'. . . There is evidence of espionage. . . I refuse to say there is or is not [espionage] at this time. I intend to let the evidence speak for itself. . . . I won't evaluate, but there is evidence of espionage. . ." (Washington Post)

Nov. 5, 1953

"There is no question now, from the evidence, that there has been espionage in the Army Signal Corps." (Washington Evening Star)

Dec. 10, 1953

"[I have] no real hope [of proving espionage]. . . We don't expect to come up with anything more than contempt or perjury. It is not our function to develop cases of espionage." (New York Times)

Feb. 2, 1954

"We have uncovered espionage." (Congressional Record, Feb. 2, 1954, p. 1053)

NOTE: When this issue of The Progressive went to press, McCarthy had offered no evidence whatever to support his last claim.

he had hired Dr. J. B. Matthews, "whom I consider to be an outstanding man," as executive director.

Matthews is a former extreme left-wing Socialist who admits he was a fellow-traveler of the Communists, though he denies ever taking out a membership card. In 1938 he published a book called Odyssey of a Fellow Traveler. During his fellow-traveling days he was fond of blasting away at the churches and clergy as the "tools of capitalism." His theme was that the basis of the clergy's opposition to Russian Communism was the opposition of the men of wealth who control the churches. This theme was set forth in his book Partners in Plunder. A survey by the Washington Star in July, 1953, produced the conclusion that "he was active with Communists, Socialists and others in 28 different front organizations, in 15 of which he held an official position."

Matthews had been active as chief investigator for the old Dies Committee, after his conversion from the left. He was briefly back in the headlines in late 1950 in the abortive attempt to smear Assistant Secretary of Defense Anna Rosenberg as a Communist—an attempt which backfired badly. Matthews proudly displays a desk set inscribed, "To J. B. Matthews, a star-spangled American, from one of his pupils and admirers." The set is a gift from Sen. McCarthy. (Cited in the Washington Star, July 6, 1953.)

A few days after McCarthy's colleagues on the Subcommittee had received notice of the hiring of Matthews, the July issue of the American Mercury appeared. The magazine is owned by Russell Maguire, whose name has been linked in the past to the old racist Christian Front. The lead article, by Matthews, was called, "Reds in Our Churches." Its opening paragraphs were:

"The largest single group supporting the Communist apparatus in the United States today is composed of Protestant clergymen.

"Since the beginning of the First Cold War in April 1948, the Communist Party of this country has placed more and more reliance upon the ranks of the Protestant clergy to provide the party's subversive apparatus with its agents, stooges, dupes, front men, and fellow-travelers.

"Clergymen outnumber professors two to one in supporting the Communist front apparatus of the Kremlin conspiracy. . . . The Communist Party has enlisted the support of at least 7,000 Protestant clergymen in the same categories—party members, fellow-travelers, espionage agents, party line adherents, and unwitting dupes."

McCarthy's Conflicting Stories About Matthews' Article

Developments broke swiftly and explosively.

On July 2, the three Democratic members of the Subcommittee, Sens. Jackson, Symington, and McClellan, issued a statement denouncing the article as a "shocking and unwarranted attack against the American clergy." They called on McCarthy to convene the Subcommittee as "early as possible" to "consider appropriate action."

McCarthy seemed stunned by the storm that broke. On July 2, C. P. Trussell reported in the New York Times, "Mr. McCarthy said he knew about both of the American Mercury articles by Mr. Matthews when he offered him the Subcommittee post." On July 8, Samuel Shelton, Jr., of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, quoted McCarthy as saying on the previous day, "I haven't read all of Matthews' material and I do not intend to. He undoubtedly has written many things with which I disagree. But I feel I have no right of censorship over anyone."

Later, on July 15, McCarthy declared in a letter to the three Democrats, "I was totally unaware of the controversial article written by Dr. Matthews. It first came to my attention the first week of this month."

Meanwhile, it became known that the article was familiar to Congressional circles. It had been introduced into the Congressional Record on June 27 by Rep. Kit Clardy, Michigan Republican and a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee (pp. A4114-4117).

Whether he had read the article or not, McCarthy stood by Matthews. On July 2 he said, "Dr. Matthews has the reputation of being one of the most outstanding authorities, if not the outstanding authority, on subversion in the United States." (New York Times, July 2).

On July 3, Sen. Potter, Michigan Republican, joined the three Democrats in the view that Matthews should not be retained on the Subcommittee. When McCarthy convened the group to consider the question on July 8 he faced this line-up: four members committed to firing Matthews; two—Sens. Dirksen and Mundt—absent and uncommitted; and McCarthy for retention.

Don Irwin reported to the New York Herald Tribune July 9, "Lines hardened in the fight joined yesterday when Sen. McCarthy refused to permit a Subcommittee vote on the question although four (three Democrats and Sen. Potter) of the group's seven members demanded Mr. Matthews' separation. . . Not a single Subcommittee member came to Sen. McCarthy's assistance yesterday—two Republicans (Mundt and Dirksen) were pointedly absent. . ."

McCarthy emerged from the meeting to tell newsmen, "I have not accepted his resignation. I do not intend to do so." He said that he had refused to put the question of resignation to a vote because Matthews was not a "professional staff member" as defined by law and therefore could not be fired by a majority of the Subcommittee—only by the chairman.

President Eisenhower Takes a Hand

Meanwhile, protests came from church leaders all over the country. On July 6, the Christian Science Monitor reported that Bishop William C. Martin, president of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. and Methodist Bishop of the Dallas area, made this statement: "There are only two bases upon which such a statement as the Matthews article can be accounted for: either it is deliberate Communist propaganda or it is a revelation of a degree of stupidity and misrepresentation which can be reached only in an atmosphere of suspicion, distrust, and fear. A Communist agent could afford to subsidize the article liberally. He knows that any influence that tends to weaken the confidence of the Protestant layman in his church and its leaders is helping to remove the most stubborn barrier in his path."

In New York, Dean James A. Pike of the New York Cathedral (St. John the Divine) spoke for thousands of the Protestant clergy when he attacked Matthews' article as "so absurd on the face of it as to reflect on Mr. Matthews' competence to hold any public office. . . It is alarming to find that procedures resulting from fear of Communism are causing us to lose those very things that most distinguish our way of life from theirs."

Even as the headlines were proclaiming across the country that McCarthy would stand by his "star-spangled" friend, the final blow that was to end Matthews' brief tenure as executive director was being prepared in the White House. President Eisenhower on July 9 had received from the three national co-chairmen of the Commission on Religious Organizations of the National Conference of Christians and Jews (Msgr. John A. O'Brien of the University of Notre Dame; Maurice H. Eisendrath, president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, and the Rev. Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York) the following telegram:

"The President
"The White House

"The sweeping attack on the loyalty of Protestant clergymen and the charge that they are the largest single group supporting the Communist apparatus is unjustified and deplorable.

"This is a matter of vital concern to the nation. You are to be congratulated on your recent warning against casting doubt on the loyalty of the churches and synagogues.

"We fully recognize the right of Congress to investigate the loyalty of any citizen regardless of the office he may occupy, ecclesiastical or otherwise. But destroying trust in the leaders of Protestantism, Catholicism or Judaism by wholesale condemnation is to weaken the greatest American bulwark against atheistic materialism and communism."

Msgr. John A. O'Brien,
Rabbi Maurice H. Eisendrath,
Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell

The President replied immediately:

"I have received your telegram of today's date. I want you to know at once that I fully share the convictions you state. The issues here are clear. Generalized and irresponsible attacks that sweepingly condemn the whole of any group of citizens are alien to America. Such attacks betray contempt for the principles of freedom and decency. And when these attacks—whatever their professed purpose be—condemn such a vast portion of the churches or clergy as to create doubt in the loyalty of all, the damage to our nation is multiplied.

"If there be found any American among us, whatever his calling, guilty of treasonous action against the state, let him legally and properly be convicted and punished. This applies to every person, lay or clergy.

"The churches of America are citadels of our faith in individual freedom and human dignity. This faith is the living source of all our spiritual strength. And this strength is our matchless armor in our world-wide struggle against the forces of godless tyranny and oppression."

Dwight D. Eisenhower

"Quick, Men—Get That Bible Off the Shelves"

"I Want You to Shake Hands With—Say, What's Wrong With You Guys?"

McCarthy rolled with the punch. On the same day, he announced that Matthews' resignation had been accepted but said that it had been accepted before the President had taken his action. Newsweek for July 20 reported that the Presidential announcement had come at 5:29 p.m. and the McCarthy announcement at 6:35.

But the question of whether McCarthy was to have sole power to hire and fire committee personnel was not yet settled. Newsweek reported that Vice-President Richard Nixon had worked out a compromise under which Matthews was to resign and McCarthy was to have sole hiring and firing power by agreement of the other members of the Subcommittee.

On July 10 the Subcommittee met and by a party line vote of 4-3 gave the chairman sole power to employ or discharge staff members. Announcing that they had been put in "the impossible position of having responsibility without any voice, right or authority," McClellan, Jackson, and Symington resigned.

"I will accept the resignations," McCarthy said. "If they don't want to take part in uncovering the graft and corruption of the old Truman-Acheson Administration, they are, of course, entitled to refuse." (McCarthy made no effort to detail "the graft and corruption," and a study of the official record shows he has done little if anything in this field.)

Realizing that he headed a solely Republican committee instead of a Senate committee, McCarthy changed his tune by July 15 and sent an invitation to the Democrats to come back. "I sincerely hope," he said,

"you will not permit such differences of opinion among us on details of our housekeeping to cause you not to continue the service which you have been rendering the country while fulfilling your responsibilities as members of the Subcommittee. . ."

The Democrats said that the letter had not influenced them to change their positions in the slightest degree.

McCarthy again went back to the brass knuckles. On the National Broadcasting Company's radio and TV show, "Meet the Press," on July 19, he said that the Democrats had quit because the Subcommittee was "exposing graft and corruption" in the Truman Administration. He said that he would make no move to force them to return if they felt that as Senators "they wanted to draw their pay and not do their work." He compared them to "small, irresponsible boys."

McCarthy continued to defend Matthews, telling the radio and TV audience that he had not "fired" Matthews and had not accepted his resignation. "He quit," McCarthy said, "when the opposition raised the phony religious issue where there was no religious issue."

The furor caused by the Matthews article brought Sen. Harry F. Byrd, conservative Virginia Democrat, into the controversy. "Mr. Matthews," he said, "should give names and facts to sustain his charge or stand convicted as a cheap demagogue, willing to blacken the character of his fellow-Americans for his own notoriety and personal gain." (New York Times, July 10, 1953.)

The Matthews' Affair Ends In Retreat and Defeat

Noting that McCarthy had said that Matthews was "an outstanding authority on subversion in the United States," the Christian Advocate, official organ of the Methodist church, said, "In weakening confidence that Protestant laymen have in their church and its leaders, Mr. Matthews is doing precisely what atheistic Communism wants."

The Lutheran, news magazine of the United Lutheran Church in America, said, "To save his [McCarthy's] shriveling reputation he announced that he had accepted Matthews' 'resignation.' The rafters are ringing with the explosive replies made to Matthews' charge."

An appeal by Matthews to the Subcommittee to be allowed to testify and "document" his charges was turned down by Subcommittee members on the grounds that it would plunge the group into an investigation of the clergy, an area in which it had no jurisdiction. (New York Times, July 10.)

On a subsequent TV show, "The Big Issue," Matthews was asked, "If testifying under oath, could you tonight name a single Protestant minister as an espionage agent?" He replied, "I could not." He was asked, "If testifying under oath tonight, could you name 15 Protestant clergymen who are card-carrying members of the Communist Party?" He answered, "I could not." ("The Big Issue" television program on Sept. 14, 1953.)

When Congress reconvened in January of this year, the question of what to do about the absent Democratic Subcommittee members was before the Republican leadership for solution. The Associated Press reported that on Jan. 8, 1954, McCarthy said he was willing to "lean over backward" to get the absent members back, but on the issue of hiring and firing the staff, "I will be completely adamant—I will not give an inch."

By Jan. 25 his retreat and defeat in the Matthews' affair were complete. It was announced that the Democrats had won certain concessions in exchange for returning to the Subcommittee. McCarthy not only surrendered his exclusive authority to hire and fire staff members, but agreed to the following concessions limiting his power:

When the Democratic minority unanimously opposes public hearings on any issue, the question must be taken to the parent Committee on Government Operations for decision by a majority vote.

The Democratic minority will be provided with its own counsel and a clerical employee to keep them advised.

On Feb. 2, 1954, the Senate voted, 85 to 1, with Sen. J. William Fulbright, Arkansas Democrat, the sole dissenter, to grant McCarthy's Subcommittee $214,000 for this year's investigations.

In the Matthews case McCarthy again showed himself to be a master of the diversionary tactic: when in trouble on one issue, break into the headlines on another. On July 10, 1953, one day after he was forced to accept Matthews' resignation, McCarthy launched an attack on the super-secret Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), which brought him a new harvest of headlines on a new issue. In the end McCarthy was obliged to retreat on this one, too, but not, as the Alsops noted in their column July 16, 1953, until "Administration strategists allowed him a little phony face-saving."

The Pattern in Summary

In case after case, as the foregoing makes clear, McCarthy the Chairman demoralized vital services of the national government, terrorized government personnel, and actually contributed to the weakening of our defenses, as the scientists emphasized in their report on the Fort Monmouth case.

Headlines and hysteria made up most of the crop harvested by the Subcommittee, which often functioned as a one-man show with no other Senator, Republican or Democrat, on hand. As Peter Edson, Washington correspondent for the Newspaper Enterprise Association, put it July 11, 1953:

> "There has been a headline a day—sometimes two or three—as the chairman has leaped with agility from sensational crag to crag. When all the cases are boiled down, however, the substance of constructive contributions . . . is not too impressive. . . . Nearly all charges have been as vigorously denied as they have been made. Nothing has been proved."

It is not difficult to understand why a year earlier (See Page 43) Herbert Philbrick, who risked his life as an FBI counterspy within the Communist Party, told reporters that the Communists "just love" McCarthy's name-calling, because it "creates confusion." Confusion and disunity in America are among the most cherished goals of the Kremlin.

McCarthyism in Action

Case Studies of the Major Ingredients of The 'Ism,' Including Smearing the Innocent, The Big Lie, and 'Shoot First, Ask Later'

McCARTHYISM has been defined in a variety of ways, none of them flattering to the man who gave his name to the ism. Perhaps the most effective method of evaluating McCarthy and McCarthyism is to observe them in action.

One of the most criticized ingredients in McCarthyism is the ruthless smearing of individuals who happen to hold views on foreign policy or other issues which McCarthy finds objectionable.

The Michigan Catholic, official publication of the archdiocese of Detroit, skillfully caught this characteristic of McCarthyism in an editorial (Sept. 20, 1951) which conceded McCarthy's right to fight his foes on foreign policies, and then went on:

"But that is quite a different matter from exposure of covert Communist influence. It is an issue that ought to be fought on its own merits, and not as a smear campaign that seeks to discredit what are apparently honest motives."

When charged with conducting a smear campaign, as he has been, not only by Catholic publications but by spokesmen of virtually every religious denomination, McCarthy habitually denies the charge with a statement like:

"All right, what innocent person have I injured? I've asked that question lots of times—on forums and in speeches—and nobody ever tells me. I've never yet had anyone give me the name of a single innocent person who has been hurt by my methods." (New York World Telegram and Sun, June 13, 1953.)

Americans who have the facts have no difficulty driving McCarthyites to cover when this question is asked. The official records and the reports of the country's most reliable newspapers show the extent to which McCarthy has smeared individuals. Suppose we look at a few of the better-known cases.

The Marshall Case

On June 14, 1951, speaking to an all but empty Senate chamber, McCarthy delivered a 60,000-word attack on one of the most distinguished of Americans, George C. Marshall, former Secretary of Defense, former Secretary of State, former Chief of Staff, a five-star general, and sub-

McCarthy Charges Marshall with Aiding Russian Cause

BY WILLARD EDWARDS

ern plains of Europe ahead of the Russians.

"It was Marshall, who at Tehran, made common cause with Stalin on the strategy of the war in Europe and marched side by side with him thereafter.

Opened Secrets to Reds

"It was Marshall who enjoined his chief of military mission Moscow under no circumstances to 'irritate' the Russians by asking them questions about their forces, their weapons and their plans.

sequently (1953) winner of the Nobel Prize for Peace.

Although McCarthy has since offered a variety of interpretations of what he recalled saying on that occasion, the record is clear that he accused Gen. Marshall of treasonable conduct. One of the most pro-McCarthy of the nation's newspapers, the Chicago Tribune, reported McCarthy's speech this way:

"Sen. McCarthy told the Senate today that Defense Secretary Marshall consistently had advanced the designs of Soviet Russia since 1942 . . . From largely friendly sources, McCarthy compiled a review of Marshall's important acts which led him to the conclusion that Marshall had always supported Soviet interests and opposed anti-Communist proposals.

"'How can we account for our present situation unless we believe that men high in this government are concerting to deliver us to disaster?' McCarthy asked. 'This must be the product of a great conspiracy on a scale so immense as to dwarf any previous such venture in the history of man.'"

Chicago Tribune, June 15, 1951

In his bitter outcry against Marshall, McCarthy went on to say:

"Gen. Marshall is at the head of our Armed Services. Quite apart from the destructive nature of his public acts since the beginnings of World War II, I ask in all gravity whether a man so steeped in falsehood who has recourse to the lie whenever it suits his convenience is fit to hold so exalted a place where he must be a model to the officers and men of our Armed Services."

Congressional Record, June 14, 1951, p. 6752

In his book-length attack on Marshall, America's Retreat From Victory, McCarthy professes to see in Marshall's activities "a pattern which finds his decision maintained with great stubbornness and skill, always and invariably serving the world policy of the Kremlin." And McCarthy added:

Gen. George C. Marshall

"Even as we were spending vast amounts of flesh and blood and steel to win the war there was still being conducted what appeared to be a planned loss of peace. . ."

In his June 14 Senate speech McCarthy, after describing "a conspiracy so immense and an infamy so black as to dwarf any previous venture in the history of man," went on to say that the object of this "conspiracy was to diminish the United States in world affairs, to weaken us militarily . . . to the end that we shall . . . finally fall victim to Soviet intrigue from within and Russian military might from without."

And yet McCarthy continues to insist that "no innocent person has been hurt by my methods." If Marshall has not been hurt by McCarthy's smear attack, the only reason can be that Marshall is too great a figure and too patriotic an American to be affected by McCarthy's calculated attempt at character assassination. On Aug. 22, 1952, Dwight D. Eisenhower said:

"Gen Marshall is one of the patriots of this country. If he was not a perfect example of patriotism and a loyal servant of the United States, I never saw one. I have no patience with anyone who can find in his record of service for this country anything to criticize."

The conservative Washington Star characterized McCarthy's tirade against Marshall as "an adaptation of Hitler's big-lie technique."

In 1953 when Gen. Marshall was awarded the Nobel Prize for peace, McCarthy was asked if he had anything to say on the award in view of his bitter attack on Marshall's loyalty. "No comment," was all he would say.

Dwight D. Eisenhower

McCarthy broadened his 60,000-word smear attack on Marshall to include others whom he sought to associate in this "black" and "infamous" conspiracy. Among them was Dwight D. Eisenhower, then General of the Army and Commander-in-Chief of American forces in Europe, who was described by McCarthy as a partner in the Marshall "conspiracy" against America.

The incident was recalled recently by the Associated Press in a dispatch from Washington:

"In a blistering, two hour and 45 minute speech the Wisconsin Senator wove the name of Dwight D. Eisenhower into what he described as 'a conspiracy so immense and an infamy so black as to dwarf any previous such venture in the history of man.'

"McCarthy charged, among other things, that Gen. George C. Marshall, as World War II Chief of Staff, played Joseph Stalin's game—wage the campaign against Germany in a manner 'so bad for the free world and so good for international Communism.'

"And 'in all these attitudes,' declared McCarthy, Marshall's 'firm supporter' was his fast-rising protege 'Ike' Eisenhower."

Associated Press Report, Wisconsin State Journal, Nov. 29, 1953

McCarthy's exact words, as they appeared in his book, were these:

"In all these attitudes Eisenhower, who had been Commander-in-Chief in North Africa, was Marshall's firm supporter."

America's Retreat from Victory, by Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy, p. 28

Philip C. Jessup

Another prominent American smeared by McCarthy—and vindicated by the evidence—was Dr. Philip C. Jessup, professor of international law at Columbia University. Dr. Jessup has held a number of government posts during the past 25 years, starting in the Justice Department during the Coolidge Administration.

In 1950 McCarthy charged that Jessup "has an unusual affinity for Communist causes." (Congressional Record, Mar. 30, 1950, p. 4464.) On another occasion McCarthy said, "For some reason or other, you find Jessup always is following the Communist Party line."

McCarthy persisted in his smear of Jessup despite clear-cut evidence to refute his charges.

Hiram Bingham, former Republican Senator from Connecticut, then head of the Federal Government's Loyalty Review Board, wrote Sen. John Sparkman of Alabama in response to a query:

"My dear Senator: With further reference to your letter of Sept. 24 requesting information as to the status of Philip C. Jessup, a panel of the Loyalty Review Board has now put its seal of approval on the action of the Loyalty Board of the State Department in finding there is no reasonable doubt of his loyalty." (Italics ours)

Hearings, Nomination of Philip C. Jessup, Subcommittee of Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, p. 146

Dwight D. Eisenhower, then President of Columbia University, wrote an unsolicited letter to Jessup Mar. 18, 1950, in which he said:

"I am writing to tell you how much your university deplores the association of your name with the current loyalty investigation in the United States Senate.

"Your long and distinguished record as a scholar and a public servant has won for you the respect of your colleagues and of the American people as well. No one who has known you can for a moment question the depth or sincerity of your devotion to the principles of Americanism. Your university associates and I are confident that any impression to the contrary will be quickly dispelled as the facts become known."

Said the New York Times editorially:

"In making a political career of mud-slinging and Red-baiting, Sen. McCarthy has launched irresponsible, unprovable, and ridiculous charges against so many respected citizens that his attacks have become almost an accolade.

"Sheer disgust and weariness of his demagogic tactics impel fair-minded men to rise to the defense of his victims . . .

"In the case of Dr. Philip C. Jessup, this newspaper has sharply disagreed on occasion with his views and his attitudes on matters of public policy. He is a liberal whose good impulses have sometimes confused and misled him. But we have never had the slightest doubt of his loyalty or his patriotism."

It is true that Dr. Jessup's views on foreign policy were bitterly denounced by critics other than McCarthy. For instance, Soviet State and Law, an official Moscow publication, said this about Jessup:

". . . for many years Jessup has been a faithful servant of American imperialism and is one of the most diligent apologists of its foreign policy."

Also, Tass, the official Soviet news agency, said this about Jessup on May 26, 1951:

"The representative of the United States, Dr. Philip Jessup, spoke on the same lines as Mr. Davies. By slander against the peace-loving policy of the Soviet Union borrowed from the filthy sources of anti-Soviet

Arthur Eisenhower Compares McCarthy to Hitler

Arthur Eisenhower, brother of the President and vice-president of the Commerce Trust Company, in Kansas City, was quoted by the Associated Press in a dispatch from Las Vegas, Nev., July 24, 1953, as saying: "It is a horrible shame that McCarthy is a Republican for he has done the party no credit. He is the most dangerous menace to America.

"When I think of McCarthy, I automatically think of Hitler. I would believe anything about him."

Asked if he thought the Wisconsin Senator had an ultimate objective, Eisenhower was quoted as saying:

"Of course he has. He wants to keep his name in the papers at all costs. He follows the old political game which is 'whose name is mentioned the most in politics is often selected for the highest office.'

"McCarthy is a throwback to the Spanish inquisition. He calls in people and proceeds to make fools of them by twisting their answers. What chance do they have? They have no rebuttal because they have no recourse to the press, radio, and magazines. It is Nazi-like and what makes it all so much more of a fiasco is that he has never been responsible for the conviction of one—of one, mind you—Communist."

propaganda, he attempted to justify the aggressive policy of the Western Powers . . ."

'Shoot First, Ask Later'

Another ingredient of McCarthyism is the practice of shooting first and asking questions later, of rushing into print with sensational charges and then, after a while, looking around for some evidence that might support those charges.

A notable case involved McCarthy's shameless attempt to imply that former President Harry Truman had deliberately concealed from the FBI a list of some 150 Soviet spy suspects received from Canadian authorities.

McCarthy's statement hit the front pages with big, black headlines, as he knew it would. Then, according to the Associated Press, "McCarthy fired off a letter to Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell asking if the Justice Department ever got such a list from Truman. He called this a first step toward deciding whether to ask the investigation's subcommittee to call Truman as a witness."

Two weeks later, McCarthy reluctantly revealed that the FBI had assured him Mr. Truman had not withheld any information he had received from Canada—a fact which inevitably received far less prominence in the press. McCarthy, of course, could have acquired the necessary information by picking up a telephone or writing his letter to the Department of Justice before he rushed into print with his original statement.

McCarthy was asked why he did what he did the way he did it, in a "Meet the Press" program shortly afterward. William S. White, Washington correspondent for the New York Times, put the question to McCarthy this way:

"Would it perhaps have been better to check first with the FBI before suggesting that you could call the former President?"

"You might do it one way, Mr. White, I might do it the other."

Still another ingredient of McCarthyism is the sly use of innuendo to plant doubts about the integrity and loyalty of Americans of unassailable character and patriotism. One of the shabbiest examples of this McCarthy treatment involved Nathan Pusey, the new president of Harvard University.

In the summer of 1952, Dr. Pusey was president of Lawrence College, located in Appleton, Wis., McCarthy's home town. Dr. Pusey joined with a group of distinguished citizens, among them bankers, industrialists, clergymen, educators, doctors, and lawyers in sponsoring The McCarthy Record. Throughout the campaign of 1952, when he was seeking reelection to the Senate, McCarthy refrained from attacking The McCarthy Record or its sponsors, and refused to challenge in any way that documented analysis of his record.

In the summer of 1953, when Pusey was appointed to the presidency of Harvard, Neal O'Hara, columnist for the Boston Traveler, asked McCarthy for an estimate of his fellow-townsman. In his reply, McCarthy said:

"I do not think Dr. Pusey is or has been a member of the Communist Party." The use of this language to create a doubt where none was justified was bitterly denounced by the paper which is closest to and most enthusiastic about McCarthy's operations, his home town Appleton Post-Crescent, as a "gutter-type approach."

In his statement to the Boston Traveler, McCarthy went on to say of Dr. Pusey:

"His activities could well be compared to the undercover Communist who slaps at the Communist Party in general terms, cusses out the thoroughly well-known Communist, and then directs his energy toward attempting to destroy those who are really hurting the Communist Party by digging out the dangerous undercover members of the party, who parade as loyal to the country which their conspiracy is attempting to destroy.

Nathan Pusey

"What motivates Pusey, I have no way of knowing. He is what could best be described as a rabid anti, anti-Communist."

McCarthy's attempt to smear Dr. Pusey infuriated some of the Senator's best friends in his home town—people who knew Dr. Pusey well and who were thus exposed first-hand for the first time to McCarthyism in action.

The most outraged response came from the Appleton Post-Crescent quoted above, whose managing editor, John Reidl, was listed number one among "McCarthy's Wisconsin newspaper backers" by Richard Wilson, chief of the Cowles correspondents in Washington (Look, Dec. 1, 1953).

After noting that McCarthy had been fighting "a two-front battle against the machinations of the enemy, and against the doubts of his fellow Americans as to the fairness of his methods," the Post-Crescent went on to say:

"These doubts have not been confined to the political opposition. The Senator's supporters in Wisconsin have had to defend him again and again from the charge that he has besmirched reputations in order to advance his own career.

"The Senator has multiplied those doubts by his gratuitous and completely uncalled-for attack on Dr. Nathan Pusey. Dr. Pusey is known to us all here in Appleton for his integrity, his devotion to American ideals, his exemplary personal life, and his leadership in the liberal arts movement that is just as important in fighting Communism as McCarthy's exposures.

"The Senator's act has caused dismay among Dr. Pusey's friends and associates, many of whom have been strong supporters of McCarthy, and are known to have contributed to his campaign funds.

"In stating that 'I do not think Dr. Pusey is or has been a member of the Communist Party' McCarthy has used a gutter-type approach. He could have referred as correctly to Pope or President. It is an insult not only to Dr. Pusey, but to all who know him and are proud to call him friend.

"The only motive for the Senator's statement appears to be Dr. Pusey's opposition to him in last fall's election. If this is the case, McCarthy is running way out of bounds. Dr. Pusey, like any other loyal citizen, has a perfect right to take whatever stand he pleases in a political campaign, and should not be subjected to personal slaps for so doing."

McCarthy's hunger for revenge against Pusey went on a long time.

In a New York inquiry, which had nothing to do with Harvard, Pusey, or education, McCarthy repeatedly threw poisonous barbs at Harvard and Pusey and referred to Harvard as "a sanctuary for Communists." (United Press report quoted in Wisconsin State Journal.)

The Commonweal Case

McCarthy's use of innuendo in the case of Dr. Pusey is paralleled by a similar device he used in attempting to smear The Commonweal, the distinguished Catholic magazine which has been critical of many of McCarthy's methods. In the Pusey case he said, "I do not think Dr. Pusey is or has been a member of the Communist Party"; in the case of The Commonweal he sought to achieve the same result by inviting the public to "draw your own conclusions." Here is what happened:

In August 1953 the North American Newspaper Alliance, a national press syndicate, released to its member papers a four-part interview with McCarthy. In it the Senator was asked to comment on his habit of labelling critics as "Communists."

McCarthy replied, "I'd have to know what critics you have in mind."

When The Commonweal was mentioned, McCarthy said, "I never said The Commonweal was Communist. I just said that, in front of the Jenner Committee, one of its writers refused to say whether he is a Communist or not. From that you can draw your own conclusions."

'Help! I'm Being Followed'

Herblock in The Washington Post

The editors of The Commonweal asked McCarthy to identify the writer to whom he had referred. Five weeks later McCarthy "replied" by asking the editors "what connection Thomas Davin has with The Commonweal—whether he writes for it, whether he has any voice in determination of policy, etc."

The Commonweal reported in its issue of Nov. 27, 1953:

"We . . . assured Sen. McCarthy that Mr. Davin had never at any time written a single line for The Commonweal, that he has never had the slightest voice in determining the magazine's policy, and that, previous to the present incident, four of the present five editors had never heard of him. We therefore ask the Senator to make a public correction of his own statement (with its dark innuendo: 'from that you can draw your own conclusions') and to bring this correction to the attention of the North American Newspaper Alliance."

In a letter dated Nov. 12, 1953, McCarthy had failed completely to respond to the request of the editors of The Commonweal that he set the record straight. Instead he renewed his attack on The Commonweal, widely regarded as one of the most effective of anti-Communist publications in the United States. In his letter McCarthy said:

"I may also have pointed out that while you referred to your publication as a Catholic magazine, as far as I know, you have no right to use that title unless the fact that apparently your editors feel that because some of them attend the Catholic church they are entitled to call The Commonweal a Catholic magazine. So that there will be no doubt in your mind as to how I feel about your magazine, I feel that you have done and are doing a tremendous disservice to the Catholic church and a great service to the Communist Party . . ."

In the face of the big distortion heaped by McCarthy on his original innuendo, the editors of The Commonweal decided against engaging in a name-calling contest with McCarthy. Said the editors of The Commonweal:

"No extended comment on this letter seems necessary. It is sufficient to note that Sen. McCarthy ignores the point in question (the fact that no Commonweal writer has ever appeared before the Jenner Committee) and apparently refuses to correct the false implications of his widely publicized comments on The Commonweal, resorting instead to his familiar method of personal attack.

"Discussion on this level is, of course, impossible and The Commonweal will certainly not stoop to attempt it. But we are indebted to Sen. McCarthy for one thing: he has again demonstrated, more effectively than we could ever hope to do, the level of his 'crusade.' "

A final word on The Commonweal's controversy with McCarthy came from another Catholic publication, The Wage Earner, published in

Hitler Parallels

Returning from a trip to Europe, Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, of the Methodist Church, told reporters that religious leaders in Europe are concerned about McCarthyism because "they see too many parallels to the pre-Hitler days." Said the Bishop:

"Sen. McCarthy has done more to discredit the nation abroad than any other single factor. Europeans overestimate the place and power of McCarthy in this country. They seem to think he is dictating the policy of this country."

The New York Post

Detroit by the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists. Writing in the January 1954 issue, Father Karl Hubble, chaplain of the Detroit chapter, after observing that "one cannot go on indefinitely being silent about Joe McCarthy," struck back at McCarthy's claim that The Commonweal was doing a "tremendous disservice to the Catholic church" and was "dishonestly masquerading" as "a mouthpiece for the Catholic Church." Said Father Hubble: "Having read The Commonweal for most of the 29 years of its existence, we need look no farther for a better example of the slanderous results of the terrifyingly simple McCarthy methods."

Distorting the Truth

A recurring McCarthy device is to play fast and loose with the record, even in cases where the record can be easily checked. An example of McCarthy's loose use of the truth could be found in McCarthy's November 1953 radio and television attack on former President Truman. In denouncing the former President, McCarthy said that Truman's definition of McCarthyism was exactly the same as that of the Communist Daily Worker. The definition, he said, was "identical, word for word, comma for comma."

After the broadcast, however, when asked what issue of the Daily Worker contained the Truman-employed definition, "an official source of the committee of Senator McCarthy," according to the United Press, qualified the McCarthy statement. It had not appeared in any single issue, this source said, but in selected phrases put together by McCarthy.

Thus, the quotation was not, as McCarthy had pretended, "word for word, comma for comma." Quite the contrary, it was a series of isolated phrases stretching over many issues which were assembled by McCarthy in order to present the wholly false impression that Truman had lifted the Daily Worker's precise language in describing McCarthyism.

Another significant example of this characteristic of McCarthyism—distortion by tampering with the truth—was on display in the fall of 1953 when McCarthy suddenly opened a new attack on the Pentagon, charging that it had sent out "clear-cut, Communist propaganda to 37 of its commands last year."

"If you read this and believed it, you would move to Russia," McCarthy told reporters, pointing to photostatic copies of 70 pages of a document he said was prepared for an indoctrination course for intelligence officers and others.

Reported by the Associated Press, Sept. 10, 1953

Army authorities were furious, not only because McCarthy had disclosed restricted security information in violation of the espionage laws, but because he had clearly distorted the real meaning of the Army's bulletin which was an intelligence study of the "psychological and cultural traits of Soviet Siberia," made in January, 1952, by the Far East Command.

By selecting certain passages from the report, McCarthy sought to back up his claim that the document was "95 per cent Communist propaganda." But in his release McCarthy significantly omitted precisely those portions of the report which clearly showed the intent to be the exposure of Communism as a way of life. For instance, McCarthy conveniently failed to make available to the press the conclusion of this Army survey which read as follows:

"The Soviet citizen enjoys neither the liberty nor the civil rights which we insist upon as a natural endowment of all men. The 'free worker' in the Soviet Union is as much chained to his job and local area as is the convict . . .

"He has no redress against a harsh authoritarian government . . . His voting rights are a travesty on the ideals and purposes of democracy . . . He is the helpless prisoner of a slave state . . . Such an existence would be intolerable to Americans. American traditions and beliefs militate against every facet of government activity in the U.S.S.R. British and American Communist sympathizers who visit the U.S.S.R. nearly always return in bitter disillusionment. There is no better antidote for radicalism."

McCarthy's failure to make this part of the report available to the press at the time he was denouncing the report as Communist propaganda shows again how lazy he believes others are. Perhaps he felt that Pentagon officials would not care to fight back, but it is difficult to understand why he would not know that newsmen would not be content to accept his handout, but rather would ask for permission to examine the entire report.

Another example and one which is a revealing study of McCarthyism in action came in a speech McCarthy gave in Milwaukee, Sept. 3, 1952, during his primary campaign for reelection. McCarthy said in the course of his address:

"There are those who say, 'But there are no longer Communists in government.' I am not going to ask you to take my word for that. I have in my hand the brief prepared by seven lawyers of the Justice Department dated July 28, 1952. Let me read to you from it:

" 'Illegal passports have been used to expedite travel in foreign countries by members of the Communist Party. Plans have been discussed by leading members of the party and agents of the Soviet secret police to obtain blank American passports from the [State] Department from Communists employed in the State Department.'

"For the benefit of the press, that's on page 91 of their very excellent and lengthy brief."

Two days later, on Sept. 5, the Associated Press reported from Washington that Atty. Gen. James P. McGranery had exposed the distortion McCarthy had made of the Department report. McGranery said that Paul Crouch, an acknowledged former Communist, had testified that in 1928 he had met a man identified as the head of the Russian secret police in the United States and learned from him that a plan was afoot to obtain blank passports from Communists employed in the State Department.

"His [McCarthy's] reference to 'plans' discussed to obtain blank American passports from Communists employed in the State Department does not mean that there were Communists employed in the State Department," McGranery said.

In other words McCarthy used a quotation from the Department's report which referred to a condition that was alleged to exist 24 years earlier under the Administration of Calvin Coolidge, to support his charge that there were Communists in government in 1952!

Another ingredient of McCarthyism is the reckless use of exaggeration to bolster a weak case or to create headlines for personal and political aggrandizement. An interesting example of this characteristic of McCarthyism was exhibited in the summer of 1953 when McCarthy returned to his home state to address the Republican Convention of Wisconsin in Madison, June 13, 1953.

In that speech McCarthy demanded that the Justice Department bring the "traitors" responsible for the ammunition shortage in Korea before a grand jury and make them answer for their crimes. McCarthy seemed to be basing his charge and demand on the investigation of the Senate Armed Services Committee. But Sen. Leverett Saltonstall, Massachusetts Republican and chairman of the committee, promptly asserted that there was nothing whatever in the disclosures before the Committee to indicate a "general picture of treason." The "only thing charged" by the investigators, Saltonstall told reporters, on June 15, 1953, was "inefficiency and bad manners"—certainly a far cry from treason.

McCarthy frequently attempts to prevent the publication of unfavorable material. A notable example occurred in late 1951 when Prof. Hornell Hart, professor of sociology and anthropology at Duke University, was preparing to publish his survey entitled, McCarthy Versus the State Department. Hart, more considerate than many authors, sent a preliminary draft of his study to McCarthy. He requested a factual criticism. Instead, he received from Jean Kerr, then McCarthy's secretary, a letter calling the survey "a typical Communist Party line smear upon Senator McCarthy." Convinced of the accuracy of his findings, Hart decided to go ahead with publication. McCarthy then wrote the president of Duke:

"The purpose of this letter is to call your attention to the fact that this preliminary draft of the Hart report contains a vast amount of the vicious, false, and libelous attacks which have been leveled at me by the Daily Worker and some of the Communist camp-following elements of the press and radio. This is to notify you personally of Mr. Hart's project, in case you are not aware of it at this time, and that I shall hold the University legally accountable for the publication of this document."

On Oct. 31, 1951, McCarthy wrote a second letter which contained the following:

"Unless I hear from you on or before Nov. 10 that you are taking steps to have retracted the false and defamatory statements made, I shall assume that the material in the publication meets with your aproval."

Despite these threats of libel action, Hart and Duke University went ahead with publication. When the Hart study appeared, McCarthy took refuge in silence.

Still another example involves the then Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Air, John F. Floberg. It was Floberg who had approved the award of medals to McCarthy (See Pages 9-11), but apparently McCarthy was concerned that Floberg, in discussing his approval of medals for McCarthy, might delve into portions of McCarthy's service record which he preferred to leave undisturbed. As a result, on Jan. 2, 1953, McCarthy wrote Floberg saying that he had heard Floberg was "displaying classified material to unauthorized personnel." Further, said McCarthy, "this is to inform you that I am aware of this situation and you will be held fully accountable. Will you please prepare a report to me on such activities on your part, and have it available for presentation to me as chairman of the Senate Investigating Committee?"

Note how McCarthy used the power of his position as chairman of the Senate Investigating Committee to crack down on Floberg. Floberg wrote McCarthy Jan. 5, 1953, "you are hereby advised that I have not at any time disclosed any classified material to any unauthorized person or persons; any reports which you have received of any such conduct on my part are false."

'The Ruthless Effort to Make Himself Feared'

The recent uproar generated by McCarthy's violent clash with the U.S. Army—a case in which he accused high Army officials of "coddling Communists"—is perhaps the best recent example of McCarthyism in action. The background:

Dr. Irving Peress, a New York dentist, was called to duty as a captain Jan. 3, 1953. In the routine loyalty inquiry that followed, he invoked the Fifth Amendment in refusing to answer questions. In June, 1953, the commandant at Camp Kilmer, N. J., where Peress was stationed, recommended that the dentist be dismissed. This was more than six months before McCarthy took a hand.

But as a result of the Army's "hurry up and wait" delays known to every GI, Peress was not dismissed then. In a completely separate action Peress received an automatic promotion to major in October under the law requiring advancement of medical men according to age and professional experience. On Feb. 2, 1954, he was given his honorable discharge.

Army officials, the New York Times reported Feb. 26, 1954, "admit certain aspects of the case have been poorly handled. . ." But, they were quick to point out, they "had no feasible legal alternative but to grant the dentist an honorable discharge under Defense Department directives. . ."

The case began to command front-page headlines when McCarthy summoned Gen. Ralph W. Zwicker, new commandant at Kilmer, to a secret hearing. McCarthy's treatment of Zwicker angered Army officials. The official transcript shows that Zwicker, a combat veteran much decorated for heroism, had declined to answer some questions because a Presidential order forbade Army officials from revealing details of loyalty investigations. Zwicker's steadfast insistence on following Presidential orders enraged McCarthy into using language of this kind:

"General, let's try and be truthful." . . . "I cannot help but question either your honesty or your intelligence." . . . "Don't give me any of that double-talk." . . . "Anyone with the brains of a five-year-old child can understand that question." . . . "Any [General] who says, 'I will protect another General who protected Communists' is not fit to wear that uniform."

Afterward, McCarthy said, "I was too temperate."

Secretary of the Army Robert T. Stevens, expressing resentment at the "unwarranted abuse of our loyal officers," ordered Zwicker and other Army officials not to appear before McCarthy and announced he would go himself.

But the showdown did not come off as scheduled. Stevens met, instead, with McCarthy and the other Committee Republicans. The outcome of the conference was universally interpreted as complete surrender by Stevens, for he agreed to give the McCarthy Committee the names of everyone involved in the Peress case, and consented to their appearance before the Committee.

Greatly troubled by the adverse public reaction to Stevens' capitulation to McCarthy, the Eisenhower Administration gave 100 per cent approval to a statement by Stevens which said: "I did not at that meeting [recede] . . . from any of the principles on which I stand. . . . I shall never accede to [Army personnel] . . . being browbeaten or humiliated. . . . From assurances . . . received from the Committee, I am confident they will not permit such conditions to develop in the future."

McCarthy struck back by accusing Stevens of having made "a completely false statement" about the assurances.

The violence of McCarthy's attack on Army officials created a front-page sensation throughout the world and measurably lowered American stature everywhere people could read. Even papers usually friendly to McCarthy were critical of his behavior. Thus, the Chicago Tribune commented: "McCarthy will better serve his cause if he learns to distinguish the role of investigator from the role of avenging angel." H. V. Kaltenborn, veteran newscaster who said that up to then he had "enjoyed defending McCarthy," found it impossible to swallow McCarthy's conduct in this case. "McCarthy uses the same bludgeon to hit an honorable Army General that he swings at a treacherous Communist. He has become so vindictive . . . that he treats as an open enemy anyone who is not on his side. . . . He has become completely egotistical, arrogant, arbitrary, narrow-minded, reckless, and irresponsible. Power has corrupted him."

Frank Conniff, writing in the usually pro-McCarthy New York Journal-American (Hearst) said: "I think Joe owes the Army an apology but I doubt if our soldiers will get it; the Senator has sure lost his touch since he took up with those oil-rich, anti-Catholic Texas millionaires, the very same gang which threw the shiv at Al Smith back in 1928."

"O.K., Bud, When I Want You Again, I'll Send for You"

Summarizing the whole case for the Republican New York Herald Tribune Feb. 27, Walter Lippmann expressed the conclusion of countless middle-of-the-road newspapers and citizens when he said:

"Manifestly, McCarthy's purpose . . . was to demonstrate his power to intimidate the Army, to show that he was so powerful that he could reach over the head of the Commander-in-Chief and terrorize individual officers. . . .

"This is the totalitarianism of the man: his cold, calculated, sustained, and ruthless effort to make himself feared. That is why he has been staging . . . demonstrations, each designed to show that he respects nobody . . . and no institution in the land, and that everyone at whom he growls will run away."

The shocked outcry of press and public led Leonard W. Hall, chairman of the Republican National Committee, who had previously called McCarthy an asset to the GOP, to say Mar. 2: "When he begins to attack persons who are fighting Communism just as conscientiously as he is, I can't go along with him."

On Mar. 3, the President denounced the "disregard of the standards of fair play" in Congressional investigations, and warned the nation that "in opposing Communism, we are defeating ourselves if either by design or carelessness we use methods that do not conform to the American sense of justice and fair play."

McCarthy sought, as always, to reserve the last word for himself. He issued a statement sneering at the "silly tempest in a teapot" and characterized the criticism as "unprecedented mud-slinging . . . by the extreme left-wing elements of the press and radio. . ." McCarthy did not make it clear whether this designation was meant to include the Chicago Tribune, the Hearst press, and the scores of ultra-conservative dailies and radio commentators that had condemned his conduct.

'Striking at the Freedom of the Press'

"The Whole Thing Reeks With Totalitarianism," Said the Voice Of the U. S. Newspaper Profession

ONE OF the most frequently recurring characteristics of McCarthyism is his attempt to pin the Red label on those who criticize his methods and morals. This tendency has been especially marked in McCarthy's dealings with the nation's press.

At one time or another McCarthy has denounced as being practically indistinguishable from the Communist Daily Worker such leading American publications as the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, the Washington Post, the Milwaukee Journal, the New York Post, the Christian Science Monitor, the Saturday Evening Post, Time, the Madison (Wis.) Capital Times, the Portland Oregonian, the Louisville Courier-Journal, and the Denver Post. In addition, McCarthy has accused the re-write desks of the three great news-gathering agencies, the Associated Press, the United Press, and the International News Service, of doctoring and distorting stories dealing with his operations in Washington. (McCarthyism: The Fight for America, by Joseph R. McCarthy, p. 3.)

The principal characteristic of McCarthy's treatment of critical publications has been an attempt to intimidate them by smearing them as "Daily Workers," threatening them with libel actions, and seeking to launch advertising boycotts against them.

Perhaps the best known case involves the Washington columnist, Drew Pearson. After Pearson had written several columns exposing some of McCarthy's operations in the Senate, McCarthy picked a fist fight with Pearson at a Washington club; on the wave of the publicity that followed, he made a two-hour Senate speech demanding that all his friends boycott Pearson's radio sponsor, the Adam Hat Company. Shortly afterward, the Adam Hat Company withdrew its sponsorship of Pearson's radio program, although officials of the company denied that they had acted in response to McCarthy's intimidation.

Late in 1951, McCarthy tangled with Time magazine. On Oct. 22, 1951, Time had carried a documented story showing that "after nearly two years of tramping the nation, shouting that he was rooting out the skunks" (Communists in government) McCarthy had failed to root out a single Communist. McCarthy struck back with an appeal to the magazine's advertisers to withdraw their patronage, with the familiar charge that the purpose of Time's story was to "obstruct the fight against Communists."

Time, however, refused to be intimidated. James A. Linen, publisher of the magazine, issued a statement on Nov. 9, 1951, saying, "We believe our interpretation and analysis of Sen. McCarthy's political activities is an honest and factual one drawn from months of interviews, research, checking, and cross-reference." Moreover, said Linen, "Time's record in the fight against Communism is long, clear, and consistent. It cannot be twisted around to make it appear that Time is obstructing that fight." Henry R. Luce, editor-in-chief of Time, in a letter to McCarthy Nov. 5, 1951, asserted that "Time feels you haven't lived up to those principles [of fairness] in your campaign against Communism."

'Betraying Principles of Decency'

Commenting on McCarthy's attempt to launch a boycott by Time advertisers—an effort which produced no noticeable results—the ultra-conservative Boston Herald said editorially Feb. 14, 1952:

"Sen. McCarthy is a good man with a smear, but he can't take it when he is on the receiving end of the tar brush. . . . This new technique of sandbagging newspaper and magazine critics through their advertisers is dangerous and should be stepped on promptly. It strikes at the very basis of an independent press and is as un-American in its essence as anything the Senator has criticized in others."

The Chattanooga Times observed Jan. 30, 1952, that McCarthy's boycott threat against Time involved "actions and attitudes that betray every principle of decency. . . . We have never witnessed a more disreputable act on the part of one who holds but does not honor, the position of United States Senator. . . . McCarthy does not deserve to sit in a body which represents the entire nation and any investigation worthy of the name would confirm this fact."

One of McCarthy's more successful efforts at intimidation concerns the Syracuse (N. Y.) Post-Standard, which denounced the Senator in 1951 about the same time that Time did. McCarthy sued for $500,000. The Post-Standard's lawyers evidently decided that some of the paper's charges were not true, and that a settlement was in order. The settlement included some cash and a retraction that was unique. The retraction took back, not only the statements which the Post-Standard could not prove, but statements for which official support existed.

For example, the Post-Standard retracted its criticism of McCarthy's $10,000 Lustron housing pamphlet fee, by remarking that this deal was made "after the Republican Party had been defeated in the 1950 elections and had lost control of Congress and Sen. McCarthy was very unpopular with the Truman Administration. It is not possible, therefore, that Sen. McCarthy could have been useful to the Lustron Company with the Truman Administration."

The fact, as related officially in the Hennings Subcommittee Report on McCarthy in December 1952 (See Pages 12-21), was that McCarthy's Lustron deal was initiated not after the 1950 elections, but before the 1948 elections—in other words, while he was still vice chairman of a joint committee on housing which proved quite useful to Lustron by preparing legislation for RFC loans to prefabricated housing companies. McCarthy must be one of the few libel suit winners who has compelled the defendant not only to issue a retraction, but to rewrite history in his behalf.

Another revealing example of McCarthy's tactics was on display in his treatment of the Milwaukee Journal, largest daily in Wisconsin. After McCarthy's election to the Senate in 1946 the Journal hopefully editorialized: "We think that Joseph McCarthy has it in him to be a good Senator and a good representative of his state. . . . If Joe McCarthy will use his talents and his experience in behalf of the people of Wisconsin and the people of the United States, he can have a bright future in the U. S. Senate."

But the Journal soon found McCarthy's activities in Washington impossible to condone. It criticized him editorially. McCarthy struck back. Although the Journal is well-known in Wisconsin for the militancy of its anti-Communism, McCarthy promptly pinned the label of "the Milwaukee edition of the Daily Worker" on the Journal.

On Aug. 6, 1950, speaking at the convention of the Wisconsin Retail Grocers Association, McCarthy urged the retailers to withdraw their advertising. "Keep in mind when you send your checks over to the Journal or pay a nickel apiece, you are contributing to bringing the Communist Party line into the homes of Wisconsin."

Muddying the Waters

McCarthy taxed the credulity of even his warmest admirers when he suggested that the conservative Saturday Evening Post had fallen for the Communist line. In the July 9, 1950, issue of that magazine, Joseph and Stewart Alsop reported their critical impressions of McCarthy's activities in charging Communism in government. McCarthy angrily wrote Ben Hibbs, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, on Aug. 15, 1950: "It is disturbing to find that this article is almost 100 per cent in line with the official instructions issued Communists and fellow-traveling members of the press and radio by Gus Hall, national secretary of the Communist Party."

Hibbs, who knew the Alsops' record of combating Communism, replied to McCarthy: "The Alsops and the Saturday Evening Post are against the employment of 'traitors and perverts' in government, just as you are. But we are also against wild, unsupported charges such as you have been making. We feel very strongly that the tactics you have employed succeed only in muddying the waters and playing into the hands of the enemy."

McCarthy's harassment of the press takes many forms. Thus, for instance, on Aug. 22, 1953, McCarthy, according to a United Press dispatch, announced that he had asked the Post Office Department to supply him with estimates on the cost of "subsidizing distribution" of the Washington Post, the Wall Street Journal, and the New York Communist Daily Worker.

In a letter to Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield, McCarthy said that "they are typical examples of papers that overburdened taxpayers should not be called upon to subsidize."

On May 7, 1953, according to the Washington Post of that date, McCarthy directed Harvey Matusow, a one-time Communist, to supply the McCarthy Committee with a list of "all the names of Communists who have infiltrated the news media. . . . I realize that this will be a monumental task," McCarthy told Matusow, "so I will not set any date by which you are to complete it." Matusow is the man who told a Montana audience during the 1952 campaign that there were 126 "dues-paying Communists" on the staff of the Sunday New York Times. A check showed that the entire staff of the Sunday Times totaled only 93.

Wechsler Fights Back

Perhaps the most notorious case involving attempted intimidation of the press—a case in which McCarthy took on a considerable segment of the American press—was the dispute which arose from McCarthy's questioning of James A. Wechsler, editor of the New York Post. Wechsler, who had been a young Communist in his teens, but had abandoned Communism more than 15 years ago to become one of the nation's most effective editorial foes of the Soviet line, had been high on McCarthy's list for a long time because Wechsler had been equally effective in exposing the machinations of the junior Senator from Wisconsin.

On Apr. 23, 1953, Wechsler was summoned (on 18 hours' notice) to testify before McCarthy's Investigating Subcommittee. The Subcommittee was ostensibly investigating the State Department's overseas libraries and Wechsler was called to testify on his views, his past, and his newspaper opinions and personnel.

The legal pretext was that Wechsler had written books which appeared on the shelves of U.S. overseas libraries. McCarthy, however, never was able to tell which of Wechsler's books had given offense. This, plus the equally obvious fact, clear in the official transcript of testimony, that McCarthy was much more interested in Wechsler's conduct of the Post than he was of the views expressed by Wechsler in his books, led to widespread denunciation of McCarthy's tampering with the free press. Of his experience as a witness before McCarthy, Wechsler has written:

"It is not quite possible to communicate the quiet horror of examination by McCarthy. I have no wounds to exhibit; I write what I please about McCarthy. I bear every external resemblance to the person I was a moment before the telephone call from Washington [summoning him to appear before the McCarthy Subcommittee]. But I do not commend the experience to anyone else. . . . No moment can be much more hideous than that in which your own estimate of yourself is alleged to be a case of mistaken identity; when you are charged with harboring the doctrine that you long ago renounced; and worst of all when you know that the men who are making the charge do not believe what they are saying. To be catapulted into the realm of madness without losing one's own reason is a rough journey." (The Age of Suspicion, p. 323.)

Wechsler recalled, in his book and in a series of articles he wrote for his paper, that in nailing down his anti-Communist credentials, he offered as an exhibit a statement issued by the Central Committee of the Communist Party in December 1952 which said that the activities of Wechsler, along with a group of anti-Communist labor leaders, were largely responsible for wrecking the Communist attempt to roll up a big vote for the Progressive Party in the 1952 elections.

The Communist pronouncement had charged that "the Reuthers, Dubinskys, Wechslers, et al, paralyzed independent political action by protecting the myth that [Adlai] Stevenson was an obstacle to the advance of reaction."

The exhibit seemed to Wechsler "devastatingly conclusive. I thought it might even jar McCarthy. I underestimated the man. Suddenly the faint, familiar smile vanished from his face.

" 'Did you write that statement?' McCarthy asked sullenly.

"At first I wondered whether I had heard him correctly. When he made clear that I had, I asked whether the question was facetious. He repeated it, broadening it this time to ask whether I or one of my deputies had inspired the Communist attack on me.

"In what I will always recall as one of the most preposterous moments of my life, I thereupon solemnly denied under oath that I was the author of Communist statements denouncing myself!"

One of the most extraordinary statements from McCarthy came after Wechsler had seemed to meet every known test of anti-Communism. "I am convinced," said McCarthy, "you have done exactly what you would do if you were a member of the Communist Party, if you wanted to have a phony break to the advantage of the Communist Party." (Hearings, Apr. 21, p. 276.)

Some indication of what McCarthy was up to in his examination of Wechsler can be found in these quotes from the official transcript of the hearing:

"Do you have any other people who are or were members of the Young Communist League working for you on your newspaper? . . . Your record, as far as I can see it, has not been to fight Communism. You have fought every man who has ever tried to fight Communism. Your paper, in my opinion, is next to and almost paralleling the Daily Worker. . . Have you been making attacks on J. Edgar Hoover in the editorial columns of your paper? . . . Have you ever, in your editorial columns, over the last two years, praised the FBI? . . . Have you always been very critical of the heads of the Un-American Activities Committee? Do you think Jenner is doing a good job? . . . Do you know Bernard DeVoto? . . . No one who is an anti-Communist would put the New York Post on a shelf to fight Communism any more than they would use the Daily Worker. . . If you or I were a member of the Communist Party and we wanted to advance the Communist line, perhaps the most effective way of doing that would be to claim we deserted the party; and if we got in control of the paper, use that paper to attack and smear anybody who actually was fighting Communism. Now, without saying whether you have done it, you would agree that would be a good tactic, would you not? . . . I feel that you have not broken with Communist ideals. I feel that you are serving them very, very actively."

McCarthy's treatment of Wechsler brought a wave of angry editorials in many of the nation's leading newspapers. The American Society of Newspaper Editors appointed a committee to investigate. The committee divided, seven to four, on the specific issue of whether McCarthy had violated the constitutional guarantee of a free press.

The majority of the committee confessed to some confusion. They could not make up their minds whether McCarthy had intended to punish or challenge Wechsler's opinions as an editor. They wondered if maybe McCarthy had only been interested in establishing the facts of what Wechsler's opinions were. Unable to agree that an offense to freedom of the press had been committed, the majority urged other editors to read the record and decide for themselves.

"A Dangerous Precedent"

Four members of the ASNE committee wrote a supplementary report in which they expressed their own strong conviction that McCarthy had been tampering with constitutional rights. "The people," said the report drafted by J. R. Wiggins, managing editor of the Washington Post, "suffer some diminution of their right to know fully and comment freely upon their government whenever a single newspaper, however worthy or unworthy, is subjected by one Senator, however worthy or unworthy, to inconvenience, expense, humiliation, ridicule, abuse, condemnation, and reproach, under the auspices of governmental power."

McCarthy sought to reserve the last word for himself. He issued a statement demanding that the ASNE Committee "investigate the extent to which the chairman of your Committee, Mr. Wiggins, through his paper, the Washington Post, has prostituted and endangered freedom of the press by constant false, vicious, intemperate attacks on anyone who dares expose any of the undercover Communists. . ."

But others sought and got the last word. William M. Tugman, editor of the Eugene, Ore., Register-Guard, who was a member of the special committee, characterized McCarthy's attack on the Washington Post as "another move to try to intimidate editors for their honest opinions. . . The Senator's attack on Mr. Wiggins verifies the conclusions we made in reviewing the Wechsler case."

As for the larger issue, whether McCarthy's grilling of Wechsler involved an attempt to investigate the Post's editorials, the most significant comment came from Editor and Publisher, the newspaper industry's leading trade publication, which concluded that McCarthy had indeed sought to probe into editorials criticizing McCarthy. Said Robert U. Brown, the publication's editor:

". . . Nevertheless, that is just what he did do." Continued Brown: "The Senator has every right to attack the Post, its editor, or any other newspaper or newspaper man. But we think it is an abuse of his position, and a dangerous precedent, for him to use the forum of his investigating Committee to accuse an editor of subservience to the Communist cause because that editor's writings are not to his liking. Particularly is this so when the chairman of the Committee approaches such a hearing with pre-conceived ideas and refuses to review every aspect of the record objectively."

The strongly pro-American London Economist found Wechsler's courageous response to McCarthy's attempts at intimidation the beginning of what it hoped would be a general movement in the American press to fight back. Said the Economist; "It has been particularly dismaying throughout this whole period of McCarthyism that the people who control the media of public communication, though they have a vested interest in freedom of thought and expression, have on the whole refused to fight back. It seems to have taken Mr. Wechsler to show that blood could be drawn even under klieg lights."

America, the national Catholic weekly review published by the Jesuits, concluded after examining the evidence that Wechsler was hauled before McCarthy "because he has dared to engage in a give-no-quarter fight against McCarthyism. Having had some experience of the way the Senator goes about 'replying' to his critics, we admire Wechsler's refusal to play dead."

Perhaps the most effective summary of McCarthy's relations with the press, as indeed in every other aspect of McCarthyism in action, appeared in the newspaper profession's eminently conservative organ, Editor and Publisher. Said that magazine at the time McCarthy was threatening Time magazine with an advertising boycott:

"When a United States Senator attempts to silence criticism in the press by high-pressuring advertisers into dropping their economic support of a publication, that is a new low in politics.

"This strikes at the very roots of press freedom—the economic power that makes a free press possible. It is one thing to answer or attack critics—it is another thing to attempt to intimidate and silence them. And in this case the dignity and influence of the U.S. Senate is being perverted to this sin.

"The whole thing reeks with totalitarianism."

Off McCarthy's Wagon

"We have just completed our own personal survey on the subject of Senator Joseph McCarthy.

"At the recent Centennial Convention of the Wisconsin Press Association we talked with 16 publishers, all of whom have actively supported 'Jumbled Joe' during his recent campaign. Of the 16, no less than 11 have had enough. They're off Joe's wagon for keeps. Four more had lost so much of their enthusiasm for Joe that they no longer support him, although they aren't actively opposing him. One—just one of the 16—stilll regards Joe as the Moses to lead us out of the wilderness."

WIN at any cost

The Truth About the Man Who Ran With Communist Support and Then Reached Out for the Support of the Far Right

CRITICS of Sen. McCarthy frequently assert that his tactics are strikingly similar to those of the Communists, whose ideology he denounces so passionately. If his manner of operation, they say, were to be distilled into a written dogma, as the Communist creed has been, it would show no less devotion to the doctrine that the end justifies the means. As Arthur Eisenhower, the President's brother, put it July 24, 1953, McCarthy's purpose is power and his strategy to "keep his name in the papers at all costs."

Patient research into the techniques of McCarthy's political campaigns results in the conclusion that his one all-dominating consideration has been to win at any cost. To achieve his ends he has failed to repudiate support from the extreme left and extreme right, including Communists on the far left and some of the most disreputable, hate-mongering, fascist-minded groups in the nation on the far right.

McCarthy's first experiences in public life are discussed in an earlier chapter. This section is concerned with his political conduct in the years since he first became a candidate for U.S. Senator.

In 1944 McCarthy ran unsuccessfully for the Republican nomination against the incumbent, Sen. Alexander Wiley, now chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. In preparation for that campaign, he faced two obstacles: 1) he was in military service in the Pacific, and 2) Wisconsin law made it a felony for a judge to run for a political office. His friends helped him overcome both by launching his campaign for him and by having the 1943 session of the Wisconsin legislature repeal the law. (There was also a constitutional provision against judges running for political office, but that was ignored. See Page 7.)

McCarthy's friends ran the 1944 campaign for him for a while. He was presented to the public by a former Hearst editor and Milwaukee public relations man, James Colby, as a "fighting Marine" who had waived his immunity to military service and "enlisted as a buck private in the Marine Corps," though he never served an hour as a private.

In July of 1944, with many dreary and dangerous weeks of fighting ahead for his Marine buddies, McCarthy wangled a leave and was back in Wisconsin where he managed to show himself at numerous political rallies in his Marine uniform.

The Communists Help to Elect McCarthy Senator

The 1944 campaign is remembered principally for the chapter it added to the story of McCarthy's curious financial affairs. The Senate Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, which later investigated his financial affairs (See page 12), found that the Committee to Elect Joseph R. McCarthy to the U.S. Senate filed reports with the Wisconsin Secretary of State, showing the following contributions to the campaign:

HOWARD MCCARTHY (brother)	$10,600
TIM MCCARTHY (father)	4,000
ROMAN KORNELY (brother-in-law)	3,000

On page 27 of its report the Senate Subcommittee drew this conclusion about the financing of the 1944 campaign: "In that these relatives of Sen. McCarthy do not appear to be people of substantial means and for the further reason that Sen. McCarthy made a profit on securities transactions in excess of $40,000 in 1943 and withdrew most of these profits in 1944 prior to the Aug. 14 primary election, it might appear possible that the $17,600 allegedly contributed by Sen. McCarthy's relatives were, in fact, personal expenditures of Sen. McCarthy."

McCarthy was defeated in the primary by Sen. Wiley. After resigning from the Marines Dec. 11, 1944, he returned to begin the campaign that was to defeat Sen. Robert M. La-Follette, Jr., in 1946.

During the campaign of 1946 the mail boxes in the cities and rural routes were jammed with literature showing McCarthy in his dashing "tail-gunner's" outfit.

But perhaps the most important single factor in winning the nomination for McCarthy was the help given him by the Communists. It seems incredible now that McCarthy should owe his membership in the U.S. Senate to the Communist Party, but any informed appraisal of the factors in the 1946 campaign can lead to no other conclusion.

The Communists were in control of the Wisconsin CIO during the 1946 campaign. The state secretary, the key man in the organizational apparatus, was Melvin Heinritz, a member of the Communist Party. The Wisconsin CIO News was diverted to the role of a propaganda sheet for the Communists. Its influence extended deep in the 75,000 rank-and-file members of the CIO unions.

In May of 1945 LaFollette had delivered a major address on the Senate floor warning the nation of the aggressive designs of the Soviet Union. That was enough for the Communists. Through the CIO in Wisconsin they opened up on LaFollette at just about the same time that Circuit Judge McCarthy was focussing his sights on the veteran Senator.

The line was laid down and sent out through the locals. The CIO News began a systematic smear attack which reached a crescendo of vilification in the closing weeks of the campaign. (See cut.)

The Communists falsified Bob LaFollette's voting record and refused to correct the lies when ordered to do so by officials of the national CIO. According to McCarthy: The Man, The Senator, and the Ism, by Anderson and May, reporters asked McCarthy about this Communist attack on his opponent. "Communists have the same right to vote as anyone else, don't they?" McCarthy is reported to have answered. (Page 104.)

LaFollette's strength had always been great in the labor areas of Milwaukee, Racine, and Kenosha, but McCarthy captured all three and thereby won the election. LaFollette was defeated by a margin of 5,378 out of a total 410,474 votes cast. It was clear enough, and CIO officials have confirmed the fact, that without Communist support McCarthy would have been beaten.

Above is evidence to show the extent to which the Communists came to McCarthy's aid in his bid for the U.S. Senate in 1946. The headlines in the upper two-thirds are from the CIO News, then completely dominated by the Communists. They threw their heavy artillery against Sen. Robert M. LaFollette, Jr., whose seat McCarthy was contesting. The lower one-third shows excerpts from a 1952 survey by Aldric Revell, anti-Communist CIO leader and political writer, quoting present CIO leaders as exposing the extent to which the Communists helped McCarthy in 1946.

Later in that year the anti-Communist forces in the Wisconsin CIO were successful in cleaning the Communists out. Herman Steffes, Milwaukee, was elected state president. In an interview in 1952 with the Madison Capital Times Steffes said, "The Communists were definitely responsible for the election of McCarthy."

Harvey Kitzman, Milwaukee, director of District 10, UAW-CIO, said, "The Communists certainly did defeat LaFollette and elect McCarthy. They are the people mainly responsible for McCarthy. They played a big role in his election." Walter Kappel, UAW-CIO representative, said, "There is no doubt in my mind that the Communists were mainly responsible for electing McCarthy. They were strongest in Milwaukee, Racine, and Kenosha, and that's where McCarthy ran ahead of LaFollette." Said John Giacomo, international representative of the CIO Steelworkers, "The Communists certainly were responsible for the defeat of LaFollette and the election of McCarthy. They didn't come out publicly and say to vote for McCarthy but they opposed LaFollette with everything they had and that was the same thing."

McCarthy won the general election against his Democratic opponent, Howard McMurray, by a vote of 620,430 to 378,772. After the election he was interviewed Nov. 10, 1946, by Lawrence C. Eklund of the Milwaukee Journal, who quoted the Senator-elect as saying:

"Stalin's proposal for world disarmament," he said, "is a great thing and he must be given credit for being sincere about it." (McCarthy waited eight years before repudiating the quotation, but the Milwaukee Journal's president and editor, J. D. Ferguson, publicly announced Dec. 6, 1953, that the quotation was accurate in every respect. "Sen. McCarthy," he said, "conveniently forgets or denies statements which might now embarrass him.")

It is nonsense, of course, to couple Red votes for McCarthy with his accolade for Stalin and conclude that McCarthy was or is pro-Communist. But many a McCarthy victim has been publicly pilloried with far less evidence.

McCarthy Goes After MacArthur in 1948

McCarthy's next excursion into a Wisconsin political campaign was in the Presidential preference primary in the spring of 1948. Thomas E. Coleman, boss of the state GOP, had put together a slate of delegates for Harold Stassen, on which McCarthy was a candidate for delegate-at-large. A slate was in the field for Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who had wired from Tokyo that he would consider himself "derelict" in his duties as a citizen if he were called and did not serve. Thomas E. Dewey also had a slate in the field.

It was clear that the Stassen slate, with the backing of the Coleman machine, was the most formidable in the field. But a strong appeal was being made on behalf of MacArthur, principally on the grounds that he was a "native son" who claimed residence in Milwaukee. Stassen supporters sought to explode the "native son" appeal and to plant the notion that the General was an old man and also a divorced man. It was McCarthy who did the hatchet job.

In a letter that went out all over the state, with particular attention paid to church groups that frown on divorce, McCarthy said, "Gen. MacArthur has been a great General. But he is now ready for retirement. He would be 72 years old before a term as President ended. Twice before we have had Presidents who became physically weakened during their term of office and both times it had very sad results for our country. . .

"On returning to Wisconsin," McCarthy continued, "I notice that hundreds of big campaign billboards tell the people to support the General because he is a native son of Wisconsin. The Hearst papers, which are booming the General's candidacy, refer to him as the 'Wisconsin-born General.' This is not true.

"The General was born in Little Rock, Ark., on Jan. 26, 1880, and not in Wisconsin. He is not listed on any poll list as a voter of Wisconsin. Neither his first nor his second marriage, nor his divorce, took place in Wisconsin. He was first married in Florida to Mrs. Walter Brooks of Baltimore, who now lives in Washington, D.C. After she divorced him in Reno, Nev., he was remarried in New York City. Neither wife ever resided or voted in Wisconsin. In a sworn marriage application for his second marriage he did not claim Wisconsin as his residence, but gave Manila as his residence and Baltimore, Md., as the domicile of his former marriage."

A majority of Stassen's delegates were elected, among them McCarthy.

In 1952, when Gen. MacArthur was four years older than when McCarthy urged his retirement from active public life, McCarthy suggested publicly that the hero of the Pacific would be a good candidate for President.

McCarthy's next major appearance in the limelight was to be his biggest. On Jan. 7, 1950, he was having dinner at the Colony Club in Washington with Father Edmund Walsh, dean of Georgetown University's foreign-

'Homespun Totalitarianism'

Dr. Chad Walsh, a director of Episcopal Church News, the national Episcopal magazine, said at Appleton, Wis., McCarthy's home town, Sept. 3, 1953, that "international Communism and domestic McCarthyism" are twin threats, and the Christian churches must lead America's fight against them.

"Our danger is that McCarthyism will gradually grow into a homespun variety of totalitarianism, and will destroy our liberties as surely as Communism would. The antics of the McCarthyites are made to order for the propaganda purposes of international Communism.

"I am sure that McCarthyites are not intentionally aiding the international conspiracy of Soviet Communism, but if they were Communist agents they could not be doing a more useful job, from Russia's viewpoint. The wilder the McCarthyites grow, the weaker they leave America, and the stronger the position of international Communism."

service school, Col. William A. Roberts, Washington attorney who represents Drew Pearson, and Prof. Charles Kraus, of Georgetown's political science department. (Notes on this conference appear in the diary of a close associate of one of the participants; the story is also published in Anderson and May's McCarthy, page 172, and has appeared frequently in the press without challenge from McCarthy.)

McCarthy was worried about his political future. His stock had been dropping back home. His income tax scandals had rocked the state; his "quickie" divorces and his troubles with the bar association and the state Supreme Court were not easy to explain.

McCarthy confided that he needed an issue for his 1952 bid for re-election. Several suggestions were made, but McCarthy was intrigued by the possibility that he try Communism in government as an issue. None of McCarthy's three dinner companions had any notion of the kind of show he would conduct.

The 'Despicable Back Street' Campaign in Maryland

McCarthy put the suggestion into effect a month later with the now well-known speech at Wheeling, W. Va. (See Pages 22-29 for a full report of the Wheeling speech and McCarthy's subsequent leap into the limelight.)

In the Maryland campaign of 1950 McCarthy had a chance to test the Communists-in-government issue as a political possibility for himself. Sen. Millard Tydings, conservative Maryland Democrat, was up for re-election.

Tydings had headed the special Senate investigating committee which found that McCarthy's charges of Communists in government were a "fraud and a hoax." McCarthy had determined to "get" Tydings, and he jumped into the Maryland campaign with his Communist issue. Tydings was defeated, though there is considerable disagreement about the effect of McCarthy's influence.

A Senate committee composed of two Republicans and three Democrats looked into the Maryland campaign. These Senators were Robert C. Hendrickson (Republican, N. J.); Margaret Chase Smith (Republican, Maine); A. S. Mike Monroney (Democrat, Okla.); Thomas C. Hennings, Jr. (Democrat, Mo.); and Guy M. Gillette (Democrat, Ia.).

The Senators unanimously concluded that the Maryland election "brought into sharp focus certain campaign tactics and practices that can best be characterized as . . . destructive of fundamental American principles." (Senate Report No. 647, 82nd Congress, 1st session, p. 6.)

It was, the report continued, a "despicable 'back street' type of campaign which usually, if exposed in time, backfires."

A four page tabloid, entitled From the Record, flooded Maryland. This tabloid featured what the Committee report called the "infamous composite picture" which through a process of photographic faking showed Tydings "in close physical proximity to Earl Browder, Communist leader."

"The tabloid," the Committee found, "contains misleading half truths, misrepresentations, and false innuendos that maliciously and without foundation attack the loyalty and patriotism not only of Sen. Millard Tydings, who won the Distinguished Service Cross for battlefield heroism in World War I, but also the entire membership of the Senate Armed Services Committee in 1950."

Mrs. Ruth McCormick Tankersley, then Mrs. Ruth McCormick Miller and publisher of Col. Robert R. McCormick's Washington Times-Herald, testified before the Committee that "the first time I heard of the contemplated production of the tabloid was when Sen. McCarthy called me that a group of persons interested in Sen. Butler's [Tydings' Republican opponent] campaign were considering producing a tabloid and Sen. McCarthy asked me if they reached a decision to produce such a thing could the Times-Herald do the job." (Hearings, pp. 431-2.)

"Stop That! McCarthy Will Demand Space for a Reply"

The Committee concluded from the evidence that "Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy of Wisconsin was actively interested in the campaign to the extent of making his staff available for work on research, pictures, composition, printing of the tabloid From the Record." (Senate Report, p. 5.)

Although the Committee did not charge McCarthy with personal responsibility for the composite picture of Browder and Tydings, it reported that members of "his [McCarthy's] staff, and particularly Miss Jean Kerr, his research assistant, vigorously supported the propriety of the tabloid and composite photograph in their testimony." (Senate Report, p. 23.)

On Page 9 of its report the Committee—Democrats and Republicans alike—offered this serious recommendation to the Senate: "The question of unseating a Senator for acts committed in a Senatorial election should not be limited to the candidates in such elections. Any sitting Senator, regardless of whether he is a candidate in the election himself, should be subject to expulsion by action of the Senate, if it finds such Senator engaged in practices and behavior that make him, in the opinion of the Senate, unfit to hold the position of U.S. Senator."

The Aug. 17, 1951, issue of The Commonweal, the Catholic weekly, said editorially, "Such campaign methods and tactics are destroying our system of free elections and undermining the very foundation of our government. . . If the West Point cadets are to be tried for cheating, why not McCarthy? . . . The issue here is not whether or not Communism must be fought at home; it must. The issue is whether or not we have the intelligence and the courage to do it in the American way, or whether we will leave the job—and our liberties—to a man who runs along the back streets to do his cheating when he hasn't the stuff it takes to do things the straight and open way."

When McCarthy came up for reelection in 1952, more than two years had passed since he went to Wheeling, W. Va., on Feb. 9, 1950, to make Communism in government his issue. He had become a national figure and was attracting a fanatical following, many of them Americans who seemed genuinely convinced that McCarthy was the only person in government fighting Communism.

In the primary election he defeated an independent Republican, Leonard F. Schmidt, 515,481 to 213,701. McCarthy made but one major speech, at a Milwaukee Republican rally, broadcast over a network of 31 radio stations in Wisconsin, during the primary race.

In it McCarthy appealed for votes, saying that he needed them "badly." But most significant, in view of his subsequent attitude toward the Eisenhower Administration, was his failure to ask support for the GOP Presidential candidate. His only reference to Eisenhower was a critical one, made without mentioning his name.

His Democratic opponent in the general election was Thomas E. Fairchild, a brilliant young attorney who had served as Wisconsin's Attorney General and as the U.S. Attorney for the western district of Wisconsin.

McCarthy divided his time between campaigning in Wisconsin and barnstorming other states in behalf of Republican Senatorial candidates. He likes to take credit for the defeat of Sen. William Benton of Connecticut and Sen. Blair Moody of Michigan, and other Democratic incumbents against whom he campaigned. But he carefully avoids mention of the fact that he also went into Washington, Missouri, and Montana, where despite a Republican trend in those states, he was unsuccessful in preventing the defeat of three of his closest Senatorial cronies: Cain of Washington, Kem of Missouri, and Ecton of Montana. Perhaps the most notable exhibition of McCarthy's lack of pulling power was displayed in the state of Washington. There McCarthy worked hard for his most effusive supporter in the Senate, Harry Cain. But while Dwight Eisenhower carried the state for the Republican Party by a majority of 100,000, McCarthy's friend Cain was defeated by the Democrat, Henry Jackson, by 134,000 votes.

McCarthy's bid in Wisconsin was well-financed and was conducted through two principal organizations, the Republican Party and the McCarthy Club. The latter raised money across the nation for the campaign. Advertisements appeared in newspapers throughout the country soliciting contributions. Letters were sent to McCarthy's new-found friends among the oil millionaires of Texas. (Milwaukee Journal, Dec. 20, 1953.)

A flood of out-of-state money poured in. Among the contributors were such well-known men as H. R. Cullen, multi-millionaire Houston oil man, who came through with one of the largest single contributions, $5,000; Seymour Weiss, one of the top figures in the old Huey Long machine in Louisiana, who was sent to jail for tax and mail frauds; Gen. Robert E. Wood, chairman of the board of Sears, Roebuck & Co.; Craig R. Sheaffer of the Sheaffer Pen Co.; and Maj. Gen. Claire Chennault, long identified as a major figure in the "China Lobby".

McCarthy roamed the state. The Associated Press reported that at Eau Claire he told an audience he would make a "good American" out of Adlai Stevenson if he were put aboard Stevenson's campaign train with "a slippery elm club."

McCarthy never permitted anything but the Communist issue to be raised in his campaign. He ignored repeated attempts of the Democrats to smoke him out on his voting record. Questions designed to get an explanation of his strange financial operations and tax difficulties brought the reply that the questions were "Communist inspired."

McCarthy continued to ignore his Wisconsin opponents until the last days of the campaign when he was forced to recognize the gravity of a charge brought against him by Edward P. Morgan, former administrative assistant to FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover and a specialist on Communist activities. Speaking over WTMJ-TV Nov. 2, 1952, Morgan charged that McCarthy, "in a mad effort to justify his charges of Communism in the State Department, produced a thick document on the Senate floor" which "two agents of the FBI told me was an out and out forgery." (Quoted in the Milwaukee Journal, Nov. 3, 1952)

McCarthy felt obliged to answer in his last campaign talk on the night of Nov. 3 at his home town of Appleton. McCarthy called the Morgan charge a "new low in campaign degeneracy," accused Morgan of "posing" as an FBI agent, and flourished a telegram from Hoover saying Morgan now had no official connection with the FBI. This was a typical McCarthy diversion, for Morgan had emphasized in his TV presentation that he was a former FBI agent and was now practising law in Washington. McCarthy made no effort whatever to answer the Morgan charge of forgery, nor has he instituted libel or slander action against the former FBI official.

McCarthy's Role as Hatchet Man in 1952

The most spectacular part he played in the 1952 campaign was in his old role of hatchetman. His talents were mobilized for the task of smearing Adlai Stevenson as disloyal.

On Sept. 4 he had announced in Milwaukee that he was checking the Stevenson record. He said, "We are finding proof not of guilt by association but of guilt by collaboration." Addressing himself directly to Stevenson, he declared, "After your entire record is given them, and I can assure you it will be given before Nov. 4, if the American people want you, they can have you. I don't think they will."

From then on there was a steady build-up for the day when McCarthy would "tell all" about Stevenson. A $78,000 radio and television network show was scheduled to be broadcast from Chicago on Oct. 27.

The money was raised by a group headed by Gen. Wood. Some of the most generous contributors were Texas oil millionaires whose support McCarthy had attracted. One of the contributors was C. W. Murchison, a Dallas oilman who has been host to McCarthy at his fabulous homes during the Senator's visits to Texas. Other Texans listed were W. L. Golstan, Houston, and E. B. Germany, Dallas.

The attack was delivered in the familiar McCarthy style. Prof. William H. Pedrick of Northwestern University Law School soberly analyzed the McCarthy charges in a scholarly article on the law of libel in the May-June, 1953, issue of Northwestern University Law Review. Prof. Pedrick cites several examples of the McCarthy technique, of which this one is typical:

McCarthy speaking: ". . . Stevenson says, 'I was the man who formulated [our post-war Italian] policy' . . . and the head of the Central Intelligence Agency [Gen. Walter Bedell Smith] says the policy then was to 'connive' to put Communists into the Italian government, 'connive' and to bring Togliatti, the Communist leader, back from Moscow, which they did. Now I wonder what their defense of Stevenson's plans for foisting the Communists upon the Italians will be."

Prof. Pedrick's investigation produced the following facts: Stevenson had headed a Foreign Economic Administration mission to survey and report on Italian economic problems in 1943. The report he submitted was classified secret, but that did not prevent McCarthy from speaking as though he were summarizing the document, although he made no claim that he had read it.

"To support his charge that Stevenson formulated a policy of 'conniving' to put Communists into the

"You Sure Knocked Some Loyalty Into Them, Senator"

Italian government," Prof. Pedrick said, "Sen. McCarthy refers to Walter Bedell Smith's My Three Years in Moscow.

"Nowhere in Smith's book is Stevenson's name mentioned nor for that matter is any reference made to the Italian Foreign Economic Administration mission or its report. If Smith undertook to give any credit for our wartime political policy in Italy, it was to Gen. Eisenhower and Mr. Robert Murphy, his chief political adviser."

Two days after the McCarthy speech, the Stevenson report was declassified.

"What does the report show as regards the mission's recommendations concerning Communist participation in the Italian government?" Prof. Pedrick asks.

"The answer is—nothing, nothing at all. Nowhere in the report is the name of Togliatti nor the Communist Party mentioned. The mission simply did not address itself to the problem of the elements to be considered for participation in a government for a democratic Italy."

McCarthy also charged disloyalty against five of Stevenson's advisers and supporters. The charge against Prof. Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., Harvard historian, is typical.

McCarthy said: "Now in 1946, Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., says the present system in the United States makes even freedom-loving Americans look wistfully at Russia. . ."

The quotation is taken from an article in Life magazine for July 29, 1946. It appeared under the title, "THE U. S. COMMUNIST PARTY—SMALL BUT TIGHTLY DISCIPLINED, IT STRIVES WITH FANATIC ZEAL TO PROMOTE THE AIMS OF RUSSIA." Written at a time when McCarthy was receiving Communist help to defeat Bob LaFollette in Wisconsin, the article was one of the most effective anti-Communist pieces of its day and was written after consultation with Whittaker Chambers, among others.

Schlesinger had written that the way to defeat Communism is to eliminate its breeding grounds—poverty and discrimination. "The Communists," he said, "are looking to a next depression as their happy hunting ground. The way to defeat them is not pass repressive legislation or return Martin Dies to public service, but to prevent that depression and to correct the faults and injustices in our present system, which make even freedom-loving Americans look wistfully at Russia."

America, the well-known Jesuit weekly, in the issue of Nov. 22, 1952, called the McCarthy attack on Stevenson a "cheap stunt" and in its issue of Dec. 13, 1952, said, "That Sen. McCarthy, without a shred of warrant, set out to smear the reputation of Gov. Stevenson by trying to wrap up his candidacy in The Daily Worker seems to this writer, in view of the evidence, simply incontrovertible."

McCarthy Runs Far Behind His Own Party

On the night before the 1952 election McCarthy went on a radio network and again repeated his charges against Stevenson and his advisers. To his supporters he had risen to a new and heroic stature. If Eisenhower and the other Republicans should carry Wisconsin the next day, they told each other and McCarthy, it would be because McCarthy turned the trick.

The people of Wisconsin made a somewhat more restrained assessment. When the votes were counted on the night of Nov. 4, it was found that McCarthy had trailed far behind the rest of the Republican ticket and might have fallen if the Republican sweep had not been so strong as to carry him along.

Gov. Kohler, for example, ran 407,327 votes ahead of his Democratic opponent. Gen. Eisenhower ran 357,569 ahead of Stevenson. Republican Secretary of State Fred R. Zimmerman, an outspoken foe of McCarthy whom McCarthy had attempted to purge in the primary, ran 505,300 votes ahead of his Democratic opponent; he led the whole Republican ticket, and polled the highest vote ever given to any candidate in the history of Wisconsin. McCarthy beat Fairchild by 139,042 votes. His margin of victory was 102,616 less than it was in the general election of 1946 against his Democratic opponent, when he ran as a comparatively unknown circuit judge and ex-Marine, and considerably less than every other Republican on the state ticket.

McCarthy did not let his comparatively shabby showing in the Wisconsin election prevent him from darting back into the limelight and reaching out for a major role of leadership in the Republican Party. It is now fairly well settled that he will play a prominent part in the Republican campaign of 1954 to retain control of Congress, for McCarthy has repeatedly declared his determination to campaign this year for Congressional candidates who share his views.

But the big question concerns 1956. Will McCarthy make a bid for the Presidency?

In Wisconsin some of McCarthy's life-long friends know that such ambitions are not beyond his conceptions of the politically possible. Some claim to have heard his boasts that he would someday be the first Catholic President of the United States. His friends know him as a gambler who plays for high stakes.

McCarthy's White House ambitions have claimed much national attention in recent months, particularly since he challenged the leadership of the Eisenhower Administration on basic issues in the closing weeks of 1953. Those ambitions were known in Wisconsin long before.

John Wyngaard is an able Wisconsin newspaperman who covers the state capitol at Madison for a string of Republican papers in the state. He is a close political confidant of the Wisconsin Senator and a long-time personal friend. To Wyngaard's children, McCarthy is known as "Uncle Joe." Richard Wilson, chief Washington correspondent for the Cowles papers, named Wyngaard, in the Dec. 1, 1953, Look magazine article entitled "The Ring Around McCarthy," as one of the newspapermen close to McCarthy. Wyngaard's columns in Wisconsin papers are watched carefully for clues as to McCarthy's moves and moods. As long ago as Oct. 9, 1951, Wyngaard reported to his papers that McCarthy "has been importuned by some of his admirers around the country to enter his name in a few of the early state Presidential preference primaries" of 1952.

"McCarthy's career to date has not been distinguished by the caution of his approach," Wyngaard wrote. "While there is nothing to indicate that McCarthy intends to make the biggest jump of his spectacular political life, those who have followed him closely know also that they will not be surprised if such a decision comes."

McCarthy decided against showing his hand in 1952, possibly because, as Wyngaard pointed out, if the plan failed "it would probably have a disastrous effect upon his candidacy for Senator in his home state" and because the "barest announcement of such a plan would be detrimental—giving his critics an opportunity to say that his Communist-hunting exploits were calculated solely for his own political aggrandizement."

The Wisconsin Senator's recent repeated denials that he has Presidential aspirations are probably motivated in part by the realization that it is not good politics to let his ambitions show too obviously. On a radio program in Washington Dec. 6, 1953, he said he had "no desire" to be President and there was "no possibility" that he would run.

"You Mean I'm Supposed To Stand on That?"

This cartoon by Herblock, Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist for the Washington Post, is the first-known use of the word "McCarthyism." It appeared Mar. 29, 1950.

Opening Up on the Eisenhower Administration

Speculation about his ambitions broke into headlines all over the country after his nationwide radio and TV broadcast Nov. 24, 1953, when he charged the Eisenhower Administration with "batting zero" in the removal of some disloyal individuals from government and insisted that he, McCarthy, would be the issue in the 1954 campaign. It was given greater impetus when, a few days later, he made an appeal that people write and wire the President to change what Secretary of State Dulles called the "heart of our foreign policy."

Newsmen who study McCarthy at close range saw his ambitions long before this, however. On Oct. 27, 1952, the Alsop brothers, two of the most influential of Washington correspondents who write for the Republican New York Herald Tribune, reported that "the prize he is playing for is nothing less than the Republican Presidential nomination in 1956." A survey of opinion among Democratic and Republican politicians in Washington caused the Alsops to report Apr. 16, 1953, that "it is almost universally agreed that McCarthy's objective is the Presidency and nothing less."

The immediate reaction regarding the motivation of McCarthy's Nov. 24, 1953, speech blasting both former President Harry Truman and the Eisenhower Administration was the same in both the pro-McCarthy and anti-McCarthy press. One of his staunchest supporters in Wisconsin, Editor John Chapple of the Ashland Press, immediately called for McCarthy's nomination in 1956. "Let Eisenhower be a one-term President," he said. "He deserves no more. Let him make way, however unwilling, for McCarthy."

The Chicago Tribune, a warm and unwavering friend, said McCarthy "will make the fight for the Republican Party even if a great many professed members of the party lack the stomach for any fight at all."

Commonweal, the Catholic weekly, said in its Dec. 11, 1953, issue that McCarthy's speech is "perhaps his first bid for the Republican nomination for the Presidency in 1956." The Chicago Sun-Times (anti-McCarthy) said, "It is clear that he proposes to take over the Republican Party, Ike included, and shape it in his own image." Joseph C. Harsch, Washington correspondent for the Christion Science Monitor, reported, "One White House spokesman characterized the McCarthy speech . . . as a 'hat-in-the-ring' speech." Lyle Wilson, chief of the Washington bureau of the United Press, wrote, "There is ample evidence here that some distinguished Administration insiders believe Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy is grabbing for the 1956 Republican Presidential nomination." Writing in Magazine Digest for August, 1953, Julian M. Snyder said that McCarthy is grooming himself to be "the man of the hour." Commenting on McCarthy's denial that he wants to be President, Snyder said: "But there is no other goal toward which his ambition can take him. As he told a friend not long ago, 'I'll either end up in jail—or in the White House.'"

McCarthy Labels Democrats 'The Party of Treason'

It is the theory of some Washington observers that McCarthy, failing to capture the Republican nomination, would head a third-party movement. "McCarthy," the Alsops reported in April of 1953, "would have no compunctions at all about wrecking the Republican Party, if this seems to serve his purposes." And William S. White, Washington correspondent for the New York Times, although unconvinced that McCarthy would run for President, wrote in the June 16, 1953, issue of Look magazine that "McCarthy is on no account a typical party man. . . When 'McCarthy,' as he sometimes calls himself in the third person, transfers his attack from 'Acheson' . . . to the present Republican State Department he is not much troubled by party considerations."

And yet, in recent months McCarthy has seemed to regard himself as a Republican spokesman. In a series of Lincoln Day addresses beginning at Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 4, 1954, McCarthy called on Democrats who are "loyal Americans" to join the Republican Party. In Canton, O., Feb. 5, according to the United Press, and in subsequent "Lincoln Day" speeches, McCarthy characterized the Democratic Party as "the Party of treason."

The speculation about McCarthy's ambitions has caused some observers to attempt an assessment of the kind of support he could expect if he makes his move in 1956. Newsmen noted that at about the time he was challenging the leadership of President Eisenhower, a group of nationalists and McCarthy backers met at the Harvard Club in New York City and announced plans for the formation of an American Action Committee.

Former Rep. Hamilton Fish, the New York super-nationalist, issued a statement saying, "It is obvious that if the Republican Party in 1956 again nominates an internationalist for President and adopts an internationalist platform, there automatically will be a third party with machinery set up in every state."

Others interested in the new organization are Col. Robert R. McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Tribune; former Sens. Burton K. Wheeler of Montana and Albert W. Hawkes of New Jersey, and Frank Gannett, publisher of a chain of Eastern newspapers.

There seems little question that McCarthy could command considerable financial support from men of great wealth to advance his political ambitions. One of the first industrialists who offered to come to his financial aid was Walter Harnischfeger of Milwaukee, a backer of extreme right-wing causes with close ties to ultra-nationalist forces in Germany. In 1947, when McCarthy was in desperate financial straits and was being pressed by the Appleton State Bank on his overdue loans (see pages 14 to 18), he wrote his banker, Matt Schuh:

"I have made complete arrangements with Walter Harnischfeger to put up sufficient collateral to cure both our ulcers." Two years later, McCarthy played a pugnacious and uninvited role in a Senate committee's investigation of the Malmedy "massacres" during the Battle of the Bulge in World War II—a case in which Harnischfeger was greatly interested. (Quoted in Commentary, March, 1953.)

McCarthy's conduct during the inquiry brought charges that he had based his extremely pro-German position on materials provided by a German Communist spy and ultra-nationalist forces in Germany. The records show that McCarthy was assisted in his role in the Malmedy inquiry by Tom Korb, lawyer for Harnischfeger, who was carried on McCarthy's Senate staff payroll as "administrative assistant" during six weeks of the investigation.

But most of McCarthy's financial support has come not from Wisconsin but from wealthy Texans. They, like some other business forces in the country, were early impressed by McCarthy's attitude on labor. The New York Times of Dec. 6, 1946, quoted McCarthy as saying during a coal crisis: "I believe the President should use his powers to immediately draft John L. Lewis into the Armed Services. Lewis should be directed to order his miners to mine coal. If he does not do that, he should be court-martialed. We should go straight down the line. If subordinates of Lewis fail to order the miners back, they should be court-martialed."

McCarthy's Texas supporters, most of whom have made their millions in oil, are enthusiastic about McCarthy and what he is doing. They entertain him royally at their luxurious homes in Texas, provide him with private airplanes with which to travel about the country, and contribute generously to his political projects.

McCarthy's Texas benefactors stoutly insist their support of McCarthy has nothing to do with his voting record. This may well be true, but an analysis of the Senator's official voting record shows that whether by conviction or other motivation, McCarthy almost always votes their way in the Senate. On Mar. 29, 1950, he voted for the passage of the so-called Kerr natural gas bill which gave natural gas interests an exemption from regulation by the Federal Power Commission. This bill was opposed by the Republican and Democratic Parties of Wisconsin. The state, through its governor, attorney general, and legislature—all Republicans—made known its opposition on the ground that it would mean an increase in natural gas rates for Wisconsin consumers. McCarthy and one other Republican Congressman cast the only votes the oil people got from the Wisconsin delegation for the bill which Congress passed but then-President Truman vetoed.

These illustrations present an interesting case study of one phase of McCarthy's support. The photograph on the lower right shows E. M. Biggers, Texas rancher and printer, presenting McCarthy with a $6,000 Cadillac in behalf of McCarthy's Texas supporters. (Details on Page 74.) The two illustrations above, "History of the United States," a crude bit of anti-Semitism featuring the caricature of a Jewish pawnbroker as the dominant symbol of America, and "Names of Jews Running the United Nations," were mailed out by Biggers on request to the address shown on the lower left. The UN pamphlet distributed by Biggers is sponsored by the Christian Nationalist Crusade. Among other things, it urges: "The reader of this tract should join the American Committee for the Abolition of the United Nations." To date McCarthy has not, publicly at least, repudiated Biggers' support.

On Sept. 28, 1951, McCarthy was paired against an amendment to the tax bill that would have cut the 27½ per cent depletion allowance given to oil operators—an allowance which saves them millions of dollars in taxes each year.

On April 2, 1952, he voted for passage of the so-called tidelands oil bill under which the federal government turned over to Texas, California, Louisiana, and Florida the off-shore oil deposits worth billions.

Cast of Texas Supporters

An investigation of McCarthy's connections with these wealthy Texans was recently conducted by Edwin R. Bayley, a seasoned political analyst of the Milwaukee Journal. The results were published in the Dec. 20, 1953, issue of that paper. Here are the names of some of these millionaire supporters of McCarthy and pertinent data about them:

HUGH ROY CULLEN of Houston, who broke into headlines in 1947 when he set up an educational and charitable foundation with 169 million dollars worth of oil properties. He was in the news again when he gave $2,250,000 to the University of Houston reportedly (but subsequently denied) for winning a football game against Baylor University and a week later gave a million to Baylor. He contributed $5,000 to McCarthy's campaign in 1952, the legal limit for any one contributor and the largest single contribution reported by the McCarthy Club. In 1948 he wrote a letter to Houston papers attacking Jesse Jones, former Cabinet officer, for, among other things, trying to run Houston "with the assistance of a bunch of New York Jews." (Quoted by the Associated Press, Jan. 17, 1954.) Cullen subsequently said he "didn't mean anything by that remark. I was just mad."

DOUGLAS MARSHALL of Houston, who is Cullen's son-in-law. He entertained McCarthy at his home and gave $500 each to the campaigns of two Wisconsin Republican Congressmen, both of whom voted for the tidelands bill.

C. W. MURCHISON of Dallas, who has an estimated total worth of $218,000,000, owns 19 corporations, Mexican ranches, and several private airplanes which have been used to fly McCarthy around Texas. Murchison gave $10,000 to the 1950 Maryland campaign which McCarthy directed against Sen. Millard Tydings. This was part of the money which was not reported, as required by law, until a Senate committe began an investigation of the campaign. Murchison said in an interview that he had contributed a total of $25,000 to various candidates at McCarthy's request.

In late May and early June of 1953, McCarthy was Murchison's guest in Texas. Part of the vacation was spent on "an island owned by the Murchisons off the coast of Mexico near Tampico, where the Duke and Duchess of Windsor had been entertained two years before," the Journal said. "The party was said to include 14 oilmen and the purpose of the trip was the shooting of rare 'white winged doves.' " McCarthy had announced before leaving Washington that he was going out of the country for about 10 days on business involving his investigating committee.

CIPRIANO ANDRADE III of Dallas, another one of the oil millionaires who entertain McCarthy when he is in Dallas. He arranged speaking dates for McCarthy at American Legion meetings in Texas.

AUSTIN HANCOCK of San Antonio is a retired insurance executive and founder of the American Heritage Protective Association. Hancock, who was quoted in Look, Dec. 1, 1953, as saying that he hopes to get the 1956 Republican Presidential nomination for McCarthy, has distributed a considerable number of anti-Semitic tracts, some written by himself, others written by fellow racists.

W. L. GOLDSTAN of Houston, who contributed $500 to McCarthy's radio and TV attack on Adlai Stevenson during the 1952 campaign.

E. B. GERMANY of Dallas, another oilman and chairman of the board of a bank and president of the million dollar Lone Star Steel Co., who contributed $250 to McCarthy's attack on Stevenson.

H. B. KECK of Houston also is an oil tycoon. When McCarthy and his wife flew into Madison, Wis., Nov. 1, 1953, they had at their disposal a converted Douglas B-26, described by personnel at the Madison airport as "plush." The plane is owned by the Superior Oil Co. of Houston. The president of the Superior Oil Co. is H. B. Keck, who, according to the Milwaukee Journal, "is possibly the same person as the 'N. B. Keck' listed as a donor of $2,000 to McCarthy's campaign club in 1952." The Journal pointed out that Moody's Industrials, an investors' service manual, indicates that the Superior Oil Co. is interested in tidelands oil and that in 1947 it joined with another company in leasing from Texas about 66,000 acres of submerged land in the Gulf of Mexico and Galveston Bay.

Another private plane which McCarthy has used to carry him about the country belongs to John Fox, publisher of the Boston Post. Though Fox is not a Texan, he has wide-ranging oil holdings. Gas fields in Pennsylvania alone, according to the Saturday Evening Post, bring him an estimated $400,000 a month. His paper has joined McCarthy in attacking Harvard University as a nest of Communists. When McCarthy came to Wisconsin from Boston Nov. 19, 1953, and landed at the Stevens

'Wrecking the Republican Party'

"McCarthy will have no compunctions at all about wrecking the Republican Party if it seems to serve his purposes. His contempt for his own party was amply demonstrated during the battle over the confirmation of Charles E. Bohlen as ambassador to the Soviet Union. He then implied clearly that the Republican Secretary of State was a liar. He arrogantly defied both the Senate Republican leader and the chairman of the Republican Policy Committee. And at least by implication, he also attacked the Republican President.

"McCarthy has certain very great assets (as a new party candidate). For the first time in American political history, he has succeeded in uniting behind him the whole assortment of small, proto-Fascist extremist groups. These have existed for a long time, but despite their attempts to poison the political atmosphere, they have heretofore been hardly more than a nuisance. Now they are all together in one movement, which can exercise a balance of power in key areas."

Point airport, he was flown there in Fox's plane.

HAROLDSON LAFAYETTE HUNT of Dallas, who is McCarthy's most important backer among the wealthy Texans. His income has been estimated at $200,000 a day, or about $70,000,000 a year before taxes, and he is reputed to be the nation's richest man. He made his money in oil. According to Ben H. Bagdikian, who wrote a series of articles about Hunt and his political activities for the Providence (R.I.) Journal-Bulletin, Hunt was recently awarded leases on tidelands oil property by Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas. He was the biggest single awardee, getting more than 100,000 acres at an average of $6 an acre while others paid as high as $400.

"Hunt believes that Shivers is a good possibility for President," the Journal-Bulletin reported. "He thinks the same of Sen. McCarthy." When Hunt was asked if he were supporting McCarthy for the Presidency in 1956, he replied, "Some day I might be able to answer that better. But I think it is a little too early. It's two years away."

"Hunt," according to the Journal-Bulletin, "is estimated to own 200 million dollars' worth of farm land. He is estimated to be the biggest independent oil operator in the world with holdings in excess of 500 million dollars. He is estimated to be the largest grower of pecans in the world. He has, in addition, gold mines, natural gas, and other interests."

In 1951 Hunt established Facts Forum, which the Journal-Bulletin, after an exhaustive investigation, described as "an organization of growing power in American mass communications and public opinion." Facts Forum presents political views on a network of radio and TV stations, most of the time for which is

Senator McCarthy has taken the lid off the sewer and many persons cannot stand the odor. Why are so many people opposed to public hearings for discovering traitors, spies and disloyal enemy agents? What are they afraid of? The witnesses are either involved as enemies of American Constitutional laws or have been influenced by those who are involved. Senator McCarthy Challenges Marxism

Those Americans who wish to live as free men and enjoy Christian worship as they see best, should thank our good Lord for such a man as Joe McCarthy. Senator McCarthy, like all other leaders who had the courage to challenge Marxism, is now attacked by Marxists and their dupes and hatchetmen. Only a few Communists are allowed to admit that they belong to the Communist party and, actually, none have carried cards since 1945. Those 55,000 admitted Communist Party members are only shock troops for the Marxist-Zionists who are the brains and directors of Communism while posing as loving, respectable men and philanthropists.

The Zionists set up Communism in 1917, as one of their fronts, to do a job for them. Zionists use Communism as the aggressive front to secure control of unions and other organizations with huge memberships so that those votes and power can be used to place Christian servants of Zionism in government key spots, to serve the Marxist program.

furnished free. Hunt has said that it is a non-partisan, non-political, educational project with rules against carrying on propaganda. Facts Forum sends out a great quantity of literature and public opinion polls and is building local units in communities throughout the country. It pays members for letters that they get published in their local papers, most of which are letters that reflect the views of Hunt and McCarthy. It has obtained a tax exemption for its expenditures and its contributors.

The Journal-Bulletin found that half of Facts Forum's "basic program more often than not is devoted to the political philosophy and methods of McCarthy." According to Richard Wilson in the Dec. 1, 1953, issue of Look magazine, Jean Kerr, former aide to McCarthy and now his wife, helped "to launch a recorded television series called Facts Forum. The program was backed by H. L. Hunt, Dallas oil operator, sometimes called the richest man in America. McCarthy was the first guest star on the program. Some say Hunt will eventually back him in a series of reports to the nation on his activities."

According to Frederick W. Collins, Washington correspondent for the Providence (R. I.) Journal-Bulletin, he was asked by Victor Johnston, former McCarthy administrative assistant and now secretary of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, to appear on a Facts Forum program interviewing McCarthy. Collins reported in his paper that Johnston told him Hunt was ready to spend some of his fortune electing "our kind of guy."

Hunt, according to the Journal-Bulletin, is the biggest contributor to Americans for America, an organization that "spent more than $50,000 for the benefit of ultra-conservative Republican candidates all over the country." The head of Americans for America is Gen. Robert E. Wood, chairman of the board of Sears, Roebuck and strong McCarthy backer. Wood is an officer of Facts Forum.

One of McCarthy's most enthusiastic Texas backers is E. M. Biggers, wealthy rancher who took the lead in collecting the money to buy McCarthy a $6,000 Cadillac for a wedding present. Biggers made the presentation to McCarthy and his wife in Washington. In an interview with the Milwaukee Journal, Biggers said, "We had more money than we needed, so we bought all the accessories for the car that we could. Then we still had some money, so we insured it for him. Then we still had some, so we sent what was left to Jean [Mrs. McCarthy] and told her to use it to buy gas for the car."

The Racists Backing McCarthy

Biggers, who also operates a printing plant, seems to dislike Eisenhower as much as he did Truman and thinks that McCarthy is the salvation of the Republican Party, according to the Milwaukee Journal. "The Republicans are all through unless they embrace McCarthyism completely," he said in an interview with the Journal. "This country is in great danger and Joe is about the only one who knows it."

Biggers does not think that Russia is a danger to America. "I don't worry about Russia," Biggers told the Milwaukee Journal. "We could shut them up in 48 hours. Just give 'em an ultimatum." The danger to this country, he told the Journal, is "being swallowed up by liberalism, socialism, or whatever you want to call it." He was quoted in the Journal as saying that a large part of the country's trouble is due to the fact that "there are too many Jews in Washington." Biggers has a reputation as one of the most active and violent of the peddlers of race hatred.

One of the items distributed by Biggers is entitled History of the United States, a four panel cartoon in which the familiar Nazi caricature of a Jewish pawnbroker is shown dethroning Uncle Sam following Uncle's successful rout of the American Indian. (See Page 71.) Biggers has also distributed the bigoted literature of Merwin K. Hart's National Economic Council in New York and the anti-Semitic leaflets composed by Gerald L. K. Smith, one of the best known of the hate-mongers.

Cut out of the same cloth as Biggers is another one of McCarthy's Texas backers, Austin Hancock, a retired insurance executive, of San Antonio. He is the founder of an organization known as the American Heritage Protective Association.

In October, 1945, Hancock issued a 24-page booklet entitled, Unfolding That Fair Employment Practice Plot. To help support his thesis that the FEPC legislation is "communistic" he cited such authorities as Elizabeth Dilling, the notorious Chicago hate peddler. On Page 21 he lumped the CIO and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People with "un-American" and "communistic" groups.

A Hancock booklet issued in November, 1952, entitled Unfolding Social Security, smears the late U.S. Sen. Robert F. Wagner of New York. On Page 6 is found this statement: "This limited scheme of insurance was originated and imported (it is said) from Germany by its original author, R. F. Wagner, New York, U. S. Senator originally from Germany—a staunch New Dealer and author of many un-American bills including that pro-Communist-Socialized Wagner Act. . . . It is unnecessary to give you Wagner's German Jewish ancestry—the race issue has no place in this presentation. Anyway, we do not know Wagner's original name."

This same pamphlet, on Page 44, carries an article entitled, "Jewish United Nations," by Conde McGinley, editor of the notorious and violently anti-Semitic Common Sense.

Richard Wilson, in the previously quoted article in the Dec. 1, 1953, issue of Look, says, "He [Hancock] has said that he hopes to help get the Republican Presidential nomination for McCarthy."

McCarthy has attracted—the recorded facts do not show that he sought—fanatical support from hate groups across the country. The dean of the hate merchants, Gerald L. K. Smith, grows rhapsodic when he discusses McCarthy in the pages of his publication, The Cross and The Flag, and he has made his Christian Nationalist Crusade a distributor of McCarthy speeches and other materials.

The December 1950 issue of The Cross and The Flag said, "We are reprinting another of Sen. McCarthy's speeches in this issue. This fearless young statesman constitutes one of the most hopeful signs that has appeared on the horizon of our national life." Smith has helped McCarthy carry on his feud against President Eisenhower. In the November, 1953, issue, Smith noted the attack made on McCarthy by Arthur Eisenhower, brother of the President.

"Eisenhower hates McCarthy," he said. "The brazen brother let the cat out of the bag in Las Vegas when he referred to McCarthy as 'another Hitler' and as 'Nazi-like.' This quotation from brother Art smells Jewish to me. It increases my dissatisfaction with the Eisenhower family tree. We have tried in vain to find out why the West Point Yearbook referred to Dwight Eisenhower as a 'Swedish Jew' even facetiously if that were the case, but our answers have been very, very unsatisfactory."

McCarthy is also backed by Conde McGinley, the hate-mongering editor of Common Sense, perhaps the shrillest racist publication in the nation today. In April, 1950, McGinley wrote in his publication: "Those Americans who wish to live as free men and enjoy Christian worship as they see best, should thank our good Lord for such a man as Joe McCarthy. . . Those 55,000 admitted Communist party members are only shock troops for the Marxist-Zionists who are the brains and directors of Communism." On Oct. 15, 1950, McGinley warned in a headline, "YIDDISH MARXISTS PLOT U.S.A. DEFEAT BY U.S.S.R." In the same issue, McGinley wrote that the "Yiddish Marxists invented the Zionist movement. Yiddish Marxists developed this Zionist movement into the most subtle instrument for aggression in the history of the world." Another McGinley headline, this one Aug. 15, 1952, shouted, "INVISIBLE GOVERNMENT RULES BOTH PARTIES—ADLAI AND IKE MARXIST STOOGES." (See cut Page 73.)

Frank L. Britton of Inglewood, Calif., is also a McCarthy zealot. His American Nationalist, on Aug. 10, 1953, published the charge that "Jews Plot to Murder McCarthy" and attacked the "McCarthy-hating National Conference of Christians and Jews." Virtually every issue carries laudatory references to McCarthy—sandwiched in between attacks on Negroes and Jews.

Another source of McCarthy support is the Minute Women of the U.S.A., Inc., which was exposed as a fanatical organization by the Houston Post, in a series of articles by Ralph O'Leary, beginning Oct. 11, 1953. Time magazine, on Nov. 2, 1953, reported that the Post series showed the Minute Women to be engaged in "irresponsible vigilantism" and "the most powerful organization of its kind . . . since the Ku Klux Klan." McCarthy wrote Suzanne Silvercruys Stevenson, founder of the Minute Women, May 8, 1952, hailing the organization's work in fighting Communism.

IKE VS. McCARTHY

Eisenhower hates McCarthy. Don't permit anyone to convince you otherwise. He has withheld his expressions of contempt for practical political reasons, because he fears the scorn of McCarthy's following. The President lies in wait, however, hoping and praying that McCarthy will stub his toe or make some slight error which can be blown up and exaggerated to his discredit. Once McCarthy stumbles or falls for a moment, the President and his gang of character assassins will pounce upon the Wisconsin Senator like hungry wolves.

The brazen brother let the cat out of the bag in Las Vegas when he referred to McCarthy as "another Hitler" and as "Nazi-like." This quotation from brother Art smells Jewish to me. It increases my dissatisfaction with the Eisenhower family tree. We have tried in vain to find out why the West Point Yearbook referred to Dwight Eisenhower as a 'Swedish Jew' even facetiously if that were the case, but our answers have been very, very unsatisfactory. Then we have spent much time climbing the family tree, but over there on the old man's side we find that the limbs have been cut off. Then we are led into a nebulous realm where information is not satisfactory. Where do we get all the Davids and Jacobs and the Miltons in this Eisenhower family? Why are they so much more worried about Hitler and Nazis than they are about Stalin and Communists? Why did old Pinko Oxnam refer with much enthusiasm to the encouragement he got for his Soviet propaganda schemes from General Eisenhower?

Nothing has been said lately

Here are the cover of the November issue of Gerald L. K. Smith's "The Cross and The Flag" and an excerpt from the editorial page in which Smith lashed out at Arthur Eisenhower's attack on McCarthy. This is the kind of racist support McCarthy has attracted without publicly accepting or repudiating that support.

There are many others from the shabby and shadowy world of hate mongering who have rallied to McCarthy. There is nothing in the record to show that McCarthy has either solicited or repudiated their support.

McCarthy also has formidable press and radio support from the Hearst and McCormick newspapers and from such commentators as Fulton Lewis, Jr., Westbrook Pegler, Walter Winchell, George Sokolsky, and others.

A distinguishing characteristic of McCarthy's political career was summed up in the complaint filed by the Wisconsin Board of Bar Commissioners asking his disbarment because of his conduct in the 1946 campaign that put him in the U. S. Senate.

"He . . . knowingly and willfully placed the gratification of his personal ambition above the interests of the public," the Board said.

It is eight years since that Board of noted Wisconsin lawyers formed this basic judgment of McCarthy's character. Certainly the documented facts assembled in these pages confirm the accuracy of their estimate of the man. His "win at any cost" approach to public affairs led him to launch his national political career with the support of the Communists, and, as he seemed to reach out for the biggest political prize of all, he completed the circle by attracting the support of the right-wing extremists—the Texas oil millionaires, the Chicago Tribune nationalists, and the racist spokesmen for the hate cult.

SOWING SEEDS OF DISUNITY

Facts on the Extent to Which McCarthy Has Split the Free World and Has Helped To Strengthen the Communist Cause

THE most ironic commentary on Sen. McCarthy's operations is the fact profusely documented on this and succeeding pages—that the man who has made anti-Communism his career has strengthened the Communist cause more than any other single American. As La Croix (The Cross), the French Catholic daily, put it with devastating simplicity June 19, 1953: "Far from being a formidable foe of Communism, McCarthy is fast becoming the precious ally of Communism." And a leading spokesman for American Protestantism, the Christian Century, reported Sept. 23, 1953, that "in the free nations" McCarthyism, "making America an object of derision before the world . . . [is] helping the local Communist Parties"—so much so that McCarthy has become "the best agent Moscow has."

In no area of American political life have McCarthy's operations proved more destructive than in the critical and highly sensitive field of foreign relations. The testimony of American diplomats, journalists, travelers, and of political leaders and publicists in the countries of the free world, is virtually unanimous that McCarthy has actually aided the Communists by creating a widening gulf between our Allies and ourselves.

Consider the background against which McCarthy has operated to divide the anti-Communist nations of the West:

1. The principal strategic goal of the Kremlin—as defined by the late Premier Stalin and the present Premier Malenkov—is to loosen the bonds that hold the nations of the West together under American leadership.

2. It was the awareness of this basic Soviet strategy that led Secretary of State John Foster Dulles to exclaim in a press conference Dec. 1, 1953: "Never in all our history was there a time when good friends and Allies meant so much to us."

Yet it is precisely at this decisive moment in history that McCarthy provides a great deal of grist for the Soviet propaganda mill by damaging his country's reputation for decency and respect for democratic rights. Even McCarthy's supporters are shaken when they see the harvest of ill-will he has sown abroad. Congressman Timothy Sheehan, Illinois Republican and a supporter of McCarthy, told the press when he returned from Europe last fall:

"In all the sections I visited, everyone seemed to know Sen. McCarthy and his investigations. Even during short political discussions, this subject was always broached at the very beginning of conversations. It was unfortunate that the general opinion is that Sen. McCarthy is another Hitler. . ." (Madison, Wis. Capital Times, Nov. 23, 1953)

Rep. Sheehan's conclusion that Europe generally regards McCarthy as "another Hitler" is reflected in scores of editorials in the European press. An analysis of this editorial comment shows that criticism of McCarthy is based in part on the fear that the Wisconsin Senator is crippling American foreign policy and imperiling the security of the Western alliance designed to prevent Communist aggression.

Paris-Match, France's most important weekly newsmagazine, catering to a conservative audience of more than a million, put it this way June 5, 1953: "If the United States is ruled by fanatical, brutal McCarthy, can the British and Western Europe accept the leadership of a furious demagogue? In the general crisis within the Atlantic Alliance, McCarthy has become a weapon for the anti-Americans."

A leading French daily, Paris-Presse, summarized the extent to which McCarthy has confused and weakened U.S. foreign policy when it said May 19, 1953: "The United States has two Secretaries of State—McCarthy and Dulles, and in six weeks McCarthy has created for Dulles most cruel embarrassments. He decapitated the Voice of America, almost torpedoed the nomination of a U.S. ambassador to Moscow, called Dulles a liar, fastened on Dulles a security chief devoted completely to McCarthy, imposed on Dulles a deal with Greek shipowners, forced the firing of two competent officials in Germany, and is now trying to impose a China blockade . . ."

This summary by a French daily friendly to the U.S. is accurate, but incomplete. For it was written some months before McCarthy added a significant new chapter by attacking what Dulles called "the very heart" of U.S. foreign policy in a nationwide radio and television program Nov. 24, 1953.

What most astonished Europeans, a survey of their press discloses, is the fact that while his original targets had been Democrats Truman and Acheson, he continued to blast away at the President and Secretary of State although now they were Republicans Eisenhower and Dulles.

Combat, a French daily, reflected the opinion of many other European newspapers when, in an article entitled, "McCarthyism: The Advance Guard of Fascism in the United States," it said on Apr. 22, 1953: "While the Democrats were in power McCarthy took out after Acheson, but now that McCarthy's own party is in power, far from calming himself he seems to have doubled his zeal and does not hesitate to attack Dulles and Eisenhower." As Stewart Alsop observed in the Republican New York Herald-Tribune Jan. 10, 1954, "McCarthy is, after all, a political carnivore—he lives by attacking. He cannot subsist indefinitely on the corpse of the Truman Administration."

The Eisenhower Administration had been in office only two weeks when McCarthy struck. On Feb. 2, 1953, President Eisenhower delivered his first State of the Union message to Congress. In it he said that "the primary responsibility for keeping out the disloyal and the dangerous rests squarely upon the Executive Branch. I am determined to meet this responsibility." Two days later, Feb. 4, McCarthy initiated the first of a series of attacks on the State Department whose head, John Foster Dulles, had just two weeks before taken his oath of office. By Feb. 22 the New York Times could headline a Washington dispatch this way:

McCarthy Poses Administration Problem
His Wide Swings Are Hitting Dulles
And The State Department

McCarthy's Attack on Charles E. Bohlen

Before the Eisenhower Administration had been in office three months, McCarthy broadened his attack by challenging the integrity of the President, the Secretary of State, and the Republican leaders of the Senate. In February 1953, President Eisenhower nominated Charles E. Bohlen for the key post of American ambassador to Moscow. Bohlen entered the Foreign Service under President Hoover in 1929 and had served his government for 24 years when he was selected for this important ambassadorship.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, as is its duty, examined Bohlen's qualifications for the position. The members of that committee, which included Republican Senators Taft, Knowland, Ferguson, Hickenlooper, and Chairman Wiley, voted unanimously, 15-0, their approval of Bohlen's high qualifications.

Then McCarthy rose to accuse and attack. He charged Bohlen with being a security risk and alleged that there was damaging material in the FBI files on Bohlen. So bitterly did McCarthy attack that a committee of two, Sen. Taft for the Republicans and Sen. Sparkman for the Democrats, took the almost unprecedented step of reviewing FBI's Bohlen file. Sen. Taft then reported to the Senate of the United States:

"There was no suggestion anywhere by anyone reflecting on the loyalty of Mr. Bohlen in any way, or any association by him with Communism or support of Communism or even tolerance of Communism."

Congressional Record, Mar. 25, 1953

While some people had told the FBI that they disagreed with Bohlen's political views, Sen. Taft said that these same people ended up their statements by saying that they had "full confidence in the character, the morality, and the general standing and reputation of Mr. Bohlen."

Thus were McCarthy's charges proven false by "Mr. Republican" himself, as the late Sen. Taft was called. President Eisenhower, in a press conference Mar. 25, also refuted McCarthy's attack. The President said that he knew Bohlen personally, was well acquainted with his philosophy, and believed that he was the best qualified man in the United States for this important post.

For McCarthy, the whole-hearted approval of the President and Sen. Taft and the members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was not enough. The Senator from Wisconsin continued his attacks on Bohlen, charged Secretary Dulles with "untrue" statements, and on the floor of the Senate questioned the honesty of the Senate Majority Leader, William F. Knowland of California.

So malicious were the McCarthy tirades against Bohlen and those who supported him, including the President and the Secretary of State, that Knowland cried out in the Senate: "If we have so destroyed confidence in men in the government of the United States, then God help us."

McCarthy himself was thoroughly repudiated when 74 Senators voted their approval of Bohlen's appointment; McCarthy could find only twelve to join him in a negative vote. They were: Sens. Bricker, Ohio; Bridges, New Hampshire; Dirksen, Illinois; Dworshak, Idaho; Goldwater, Arizona; Malone, Nevada; Mundt, South Dakota; Schoeppel,

Herblock in The Washington Post

"We Have Documentary Evidence That This Man Is Planning a Trip to Moscow"

Kansas; Welker, Idaho, all Republicans; Johnson, Colorado, and McCarran, Nevada, Democrats.

McCarthy was repudiated, but McCarthyism made its contribution to the Communist cause: Ambassador Bohlen's departure was delayed for weeks by McCarthy's attacks at a time when expert American representation at Moscow was important to the new Republican makers of foreign policy. It was the period immediately after Stalin's death when vital decisions affecting grave issues of peace and war were being hammered out in Moscow; the United States alone had no ambassador there. As Clifton Utley told an NBC audience, "Even in the Bohlen matter, where his case was so bad it was foredoomed to defeat, McCarthy essentially commanded the Senate to stand still for two weeks—and it did."

Throughout the non-Communist countries of Europe, McCarthy's effort to obstruct the Eisenhower Administration caused deep concern over the influence he would exercise on American diplomacy. A survey conducted by the New York Times Mar. 29, 1953, found America's allies inquiring whether American diplomats in the future were going to be bullied into making distorted reports to please McCarthy. Anti-Communist leaders were reported as being appalled by McCarthy's attack on Eisenhower's "new team," and American prestige was found to be "visibly tarnished." Senate approval of Bohlen was hailed, on the other hand, by the leading non-Communist papers of Europe. "The influence of Mr. McCarthy in the Senate is clearly diminishing," said a leading French paper, Le Monde, hopefully on Apr. 7, 1953.

Charles E. Bohlen

Other outstanding diplomats have been hounded out of government service by McCarthyism. The Senator has used the State Department and the Foreign Service as a political punching bag. The fact that in doing so he weakens American diplomacy and strengthens Communist diplomacy has never deterred him from irresponsibly assaulting individuals.

The survivors of McCarthy's attacks carry on their duties greatly disheartened. Never knowing who will be McCarthy's next victim, State Department employees avoid responsibility for action and duck decisions which could be distorted into political attacks.

More important, American diplomats must spend time guarding against sudden stabs from McCarthy and his numerous staff of investigators instead of devoting themselves to advancing the cause of the free world.

Americans of maturity and ability have become reluctant to serve the Department of State and its Foreign Service. Young men are dissuaded from even applying for positions by the thought of being future victims of political smears. Foreign Service job applications declined by almost half in the first six months of 1953 compared to what they were in 1952. With a much smaller group from which to choose, standards of ability and intelligence are measurably lowered.

The Christian Science Monitor, June 6, 1953, reported an interview with a State Department official, whose identity it protected, in these words: "The men and women in the State Department don't talk any longer about staying for the good of the service. They want to get out fast. They feel their Department has been ruined beyond repair. . . . Fear, intrigue, and suspicion are now the currency of the whole State Department. No one trusts anyone. No one says anything he can avoid saying. The practices of Fascism have come to the United States."

In a letter to the New York Times Jan. 17, 1954, five of America's most distinguished former diplomats spoke up against the impact of McCarthyism on the Foreign Service of our country without identifying the Senator by name.

The five men who signed the letter were: Joseph C. Grew, who had 41 years in our foreign service and was our ambassador to Switzerland, Turkey, and Japan, and served for a time as Undersecretary of State; Norman Armour, 33 years in the State Department, who held, among others, the posts of ambassador to Chile, Argentina, and Spain, and was an assistant Secretary of State; Robert Woods Bliss, 33 years in the State Department, onetime chairman of the Board of Examiners for the Diplomatic Service, minister to Sweden, ambassador to Argentina; G. Howland Shaw, 27 years in the State

'A Form of American Totalitarianism'

William F. Clancy, associate editor of the Catholic magazine Commonweal, told the ADA of Newark, N. J., that "if McCarthy had never really existed, Communists would have invented him."

Clancy said that, rather than being opposed to McCarthy, the Communists are actually delighted to be able to use his attacks on loyal Americans to spread their own anti-American propaganda here and in other parts of the world.

"McCarthyism is actually a form of American totalitarianism," Clancy said. He pointed out that the two foremost Catholic magazines in this country, Commonweal and America, a Jesuit publication, were both strongly anti-McCarthy.

"If one is truly anti-Communist," he said, "he must of necessity be an anti-McCarthyite. Both are anathema to a free, democratic society."

Quoted in the ADA World
November, 1953

'Steady Now, Pal—Don't Hamstring Me in My Work.'

'We've got the range, now pour it on!'

Department, chief of the Division of Near Eastern Affairs, expert on personnel problems, member of the State Department's Policy Commission; and William Phillips, 39 years in the Department of State, Assistant Secretary of State, Undersecretary, ambassador to Belgium, Italy, and minister to Canada.

Writing of the attacks "from outside sources" on the "loyalty and moral standards" of the Foreign Service, these five retired diplomats pointed out that "with rare exceptions the justification for these attacks has been so flimsy as to have no standing in a court of law or in the mind of any individual capable of differentiating repeated accusation from even a reasonable presumption of guilt."

Among the "sinister" results flowing from these reckless attacks, the five men maintained, was the fact that "the conclusion has become inescapable that a Foreign Service officer who reports on persons and events to the very best of his ability and who makes recommendations which at the time he conscientiously believes to be in the interests of the United States may subsequently find his loyalty and integrity challenged . . . A premium therefore has been put upon reporting and upon recommendations which are ambiguously stated or so cautiously set forth as to be deceiving.

"When any such tendency begins its insiduous work it is not long before accuracy and initiative have been sacrificed to acceptability and conformity. The ultimate result is a threat to national security. In this connection the history of the Nazi and Fascist Foreign Services before the Second World War is pertinent."

After pointing out the extent to which anonymous informers and careless investigations play their part in the type of attacks made on the Foreign Service, the five diplomats ask "whether we are not laying the foundations of a Foreign Service competent to serve a totalitarian government rather than the government of the United States as we have heretofore known it.

"Fear is playing an important part in American life at the present time. As a result the self-confidence, the confidence in others, the sense of fair play, and the instinct to protect the rights of the non-conformist are—temporarily, it is hoped—in abeyance. But it would be tragic if this fear, expressing itself in an exaggerated emphasis on security, should lead us to cripple the Foreign Service, our first line of national defense, at the very time when its effectiveness is essential to our filling the place which history has assigned to us."

This has been the impact of McCarthy and McCarthyism on the agencies of American foreign policy. Communists and fellow-travelers, boring from within, would have difficulty in equaling the wreckage of the American diplomatic service achieved by McCarthy from his Senate seat.

The Greek Ship Deal

McCarthy has not been content to batter and intimidate the men who are charged with our national security, but he has ventured into the field of making foreign policy on his own. As Senator he has not only played at replacing the FBI and J. Edgar Hoover, but also at replacing Secretary of State Dulles and President Eisenhower himself. The making of foreign policy, as clearly understood in the Constitution, is the responsibility of the Executive Branch of our government.

The first of McCarthy's ventures in the making of foreign policy would have been high comedy, based as it was on pure bluff, if it had not contributed to confusion among our allies about the character of American policy.

On Mar. 27, 1953, McCarthy received his first repudiation by his party and the Eisenhower Administration as headlines throughout the nation proclaimed his defeat in the Bohlen appointment. But an hour after he was decisively voted down on the floor of the Senate, McCarthy's office telephoned the press gallery to announce an important press conference the next day. When the Washington correspondents had assembled, McCarthy broke his Greek shipping story.

McCarthy's strategy in leaping from the Bohlen reversal to the Greek ship story was part of the basic pattern of his "battle-plan" described by George H. Hall in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch Apr. 4, 1953: "Attack always, never defend, never explain and never retreat; when in a hot spot, break off the engagement and attack on another front."

McCarthy announced that he had been carrying on negotiations with the Greek shipowners of New York City. As a result he had secured an agreement with the owners of 242 merchant ships to stop all trade with Communist China, North Korea, and Russian Pacific ports. He spoke of the "dismal failure" of the Eisenhower Administration in not stopping this trade and claimed that he was carrying on negotiations with the Greek ship owners of London to reach the same sort of agreement. The "agreement" reached Mar. 25, 1953, was "negotiated" by McCarthy and several of his staff members without the knowledge of his Senate associates on the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations over which he presides.

After McCarthy had made the headlines with his claims, the facts were revealed in small type. The Senator's story was based on a danger which did not exist. The Greek owners told reporters that their ships had not carried any cargo into these ports for at least two years. (New York Times, Mar. 30, 1953). They said they cooperated with McCarthy because they wanted to end "bad publicity." (St. Louis Post-Dispatch Apr. 5, 1953.)

On Mar. 31, 1953, the New York Times quoted the Greek shipowners as saying the vessels have "not taken cargoes of strategic materials to Red China, but have usually arrived empty at Darien from Japan to load coal for Japan and soya beans for India, Ceylon, and Europe. The deals have been made publicly in the Baltic shipping exchange in London." London Greeks also affirmed that ships under their flag were not going to Communist ports and that ships leased to other countries were forbidden to carry strategic materials to Communist countries. (London Times, Apr. 17, 1953) Moreover, testimony before the Committee showed that there were only 26 Greek-owned ships involved in any trade with China, and not the 242 claimed by McCarthy in his first sensational splash in the headlines.

Actually McCarthy claimed credit for something the Eisenhower Administration had already accomplished. The State Department and the Foreign Operations Administration had a few weeks previously, after months of negotiations, reached a pact with the Greek government to ban the flow of strategic materials to Communist countries. The Greek officials took prompt action, and, in deference to the Greek government, the State Department gave no publicity to the achievement.

As a Senator, McCarthy had been told about the Greek pact in confidence following his inquiry to the Eisenhower Administration. He immediately set about to harass the Greek shipowners of New York, and they offered to confirm what their government had already accomplished. McCarthy had made, as a high Eisenhower official frankly stated, "phony claims." (New York Times, Mar. 30, 1953)

McCarthy had not only made phony claims but he had entered into unconstitutional negotiations with citizens of a foreign country. Harold Stassen, director of the Foreign Operations Administration and once a

'Steamroller'

"In Senator Joseph McCarthy's book there is only one side to his story—his side; and woe to anyone who would argue otherwise. They can expect McCarthy to come at them like a clattering, thundering streamroller."

close associate of McCarthy's, bluntly asserted that McCarthy's tactics were "undermining American foreign policy" and were "harmful to our objective." (New York Times, Mar. 31, 1953)

In a letter to Sen. John L. McClellan, a member of McCarthy's Subcommittee, Stassen wrote that McCarthy's action "had these unfortunate effects: It confused the issue of responsibility in the seeking of international action to cut down the flow of goods to the Communists; it increased the difficulties of concluding the necessary agreements with other nations which we are seeking . . . and it has made it more difficult to obtain information and cooperation" in investigating Greek shipowners. (Quoted in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Apr. 5, 1953)

After Secretary Dulles called McCarthy to a conference, a press statement was released by the Eisenhower Administration which pointed to the dangers of Congress unconstitutionally entering the field of foreign policy. This statement McCarthy was unable to challenge and, as the New York Times said, "The Voluntary Secretary of State promised to retire from his unconstitutional role." (Apr. 2, 1953) To reporters McCarthy admitted that the initiative for the agreement had come from the Greek shippers. But the Senator, cornered by his contradictions, refused to discuss the matter further. A few weeks later he was again back at work endangering American foreign policy on other fronts.

Cohn and Schine Leave Trail of Ill-Will in Europe

Europeans who lacked first-hand knowledge of McCarthyism and what it means were brought face to face with its workings in April of 1953. As chairman of the Senate's Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, McCarthy sent his two personal aides on an "investigation" trip through Western Europe. These two young men, Roy M. Cohn and G. David Schine, aged 26, were supplied with a fat expense account out of the U.S. Treasury for a whirlwind trip across the continent. Stopping briefly at key points, they left behind them a trail of denunciations of American officials and a shocked Europe. No time was taken for sober study and investigation. Radio Free Europe's staff of 1,200, for example, was processed by Cohn and Schine in little more than a half hour.

Neither of the men whom McCarthy selected had any knowledge of Europe or of its diplomatic problems. Schine had a background of a wealthy playboy who had written several popular songs, served as a press agent for a dance orchestra, and had chased after Hollywood starlets. Cohn's experience was more serious, but limited to a few years of legal practice. These two of McCarthy's "investigators" appeared in Europe—representatives of the U.S. government—to insult officials and display their buffoonery and ignorance in each city they visited. Their antics in Europe earned them the derisive nickname of the Keystone cops.

Writing in The Reporter, Richard Rovere observed that the trip "was marked from beginning to end by low comedy. In the basic circumstance of the trip there was the ready-made plot for a gorgeous farce—two young men madly and preposterously bent on the ideological purification of the greatest government on earth. And the journey itself, the real journey, had such familiar fixtures of farce as a female spy who was once the toast of Vienna, a contretemps that involved a platoon of diplomats in a search for a mislaid billfold, and an altercation—denied in toto by the principals but sworn to by reputable journalists and in any case firmly fixed now in the profoundest realities of myth—in which young Mr. Schine chased young Mr. Cohn around the hotel lobby swatting him over the head with a rolled-up magazine."

Rovere, who conducted a comprehensive inquiry into the Cohn-Schine expedition, reported that it "appears to have been set up only a few days in advance, and the purpose of it was so obscured that almost everywhere the travelers touched down they gave a different account of why they were traveling. In Paris they said they were looking for inefficiency in government offices overseas. In Bonn they said they were looking for subversives. Asked in Munich which it was, Cohn explained that it was both. 'Efficiency,' he said, 'includes complete political reliability. If anyone is interested in the Communists, then he cannot be efficient.'

"In Rome, a new angle came to light. McCarthy, back in Washington, had told the press that they had been sent abroad to bring back a report on the amount of money that had been spent 'in putting across the Truman Administration' in Europe. This was news to Cohn, but he was equal to it. 'We hadn't heard about that,' he said, 'but anything the chairman of our committee says, if he said it, goes with us.'

"Apparently they had no purpose beyond McCarthy's continuing one of free-style, catch-as-catch-can harassment."

The press of Europe, from conservative to liberal, warned of the ill effect the Cohn and Schine mission had in giving a distorted impression of the United States. The mission gave the Communists a boost in their anti-American campaign, and Communist papers were jubilant over the activities of McCarthy's agents.

One European cartoonist pictured two zoot-suited youngsters lounging over an American official's desk and asking, "Is there anything around here which would injure respect for America?" To this question the official bravely and honestly answered, "Besides you, nothing else!" (New York Times, Apr. 18, 1953)

In Vienna, the usually pro-American Arbeiter Zeitung, after hearing Cohn and Schine's hasty denunciations of American officials, questioned whether McCarthy's methods differed essentially from those of the Communist secret police. In Germany, the independent Munich Merkur expressed horror at the extent to which the McCarthy aides "undermined confidence" in anti-Communist radio broadcasts beamed to the Russian people. "It is not known whether Sen. McCarthy was helping the Soviets intentionally or not," said the Merkur, "but the effect of his activities was such that he will probably be made an honorary member of the Communist Party by the Kremlin soon." (Quoted in the U.S. official HICOG digest of German press comment)

'McCarthy Is a Disgrace To the Name of America'

In Stockholm, Dagens Nyheter, Sweden's largest and most influential daily, said of Cohn and Schine: "What the gentlemen possibly might have discovered they have already spoiled by foolishness and arrogance. They have introduced anti-American propaganda far more effective than what possibly could have been accomplished by the 'Communistic' books and persons they were supposed to investigate . . . The unanimous opinion of Europe is that Joseph McCarthy symbolizes exactly the reverse of what America stands for and what we have learned to appreciate. His name is the arch enemy of liberty, and a disgrace to the name of America." (April 24, 1953)

When the two inquisitors came to London, Lord Beaverbrook's conservative Daily Express said: "McCarthy is seeking to promote bitterness between Britain and America, thereby playing Malenkov's game."

The London News Chronicle said the Cohn-Schine visit might be worthwhile if they should depart with the impression that "for the large numbers of British citizens McCarthyism has done more to bedevil Anglo-American relations than any other single factor."

The ultra-conservative Financial Times lost its temper over the harm done by these two young men and spoke of them as "scummy snoopers" and "distempered jackals."

The usually pro-American London Times, on Apr. 29, described the Cohn-Shine expedition as a "grotesque voyage" and noted that McCarthy had so greatly damaged U.S. interests abroad that he "has become the direct concern of the United States' allies."

Sapping America's Prestige

London

"The Communists' manipulation of European distaste for 'McCarthyism' as a maneuver to divide the United States from its allies abroad has caused concern here.

"British and U.S. students of trans-Atlantic relations believe that the picture, at least partly distorted, of the activities of Sen. McCarthy . . . that is being widely accepted in Europe is being employed by the Communists to sap the prestige and influence of the United States. . .

"Prof. Dennis W. Brogan declared in the current edition of The Spectator: 'It is an exaggeration, but not much of one, to say that the issue of "McCarthyism" is one of the most powerful wedges being driven between the British and American peoples (and between the American and French and other European nations).' "

DREW MIDDLETON in The New York Times

The United Press reported from London Apr. 24, 1953, that The Independent Weekly, publication of the Church of England, referred to "McCarthy's two agents of intolerance and totalitarianism."

The Attack on Attlee

For McCarthy this contribution to the Communist effort to discredit the United States and split this nation from its allies was not enough. In May of 1953 McCarthy poured all his venom into promoting ill-feeling and distrust between the United States and Great Britain. On the floor of the U.S. Senate on May 14, McCarthy attacked the former British Prime Minister, Clement Attlee, as a Communist, calling him "Comrade Attlee," and charging him with insulting the United States and its citizens.

The occasion for McCarthy's assault on an American ally was a speech which Attlee made in the House of Commons as leader of Her Majesty's Opposition. In the course of a long discussion of foreign policy, the former Prime Minister explained the diversity of opinion in the United States and the constitutional limitations placed upon the President of the United States in his relations with Congress.

In contrast to the British system where the Prime Minister derives his power directly from control of Parliament, Attlee pointed out that President Eisenhower "speaks for the Administration, but in America power is divided between the Administration and Congress." Mentioning also that sometimes members of Congress oppose the President, Attlee commented that one "sometimes wonders who is the more powerful, the President or Sen. McCarthy." In the same speech Attlee expressed Britain's gratitude for America's assistance and his admiration of Presidents Eisenhower and Truman. He repeatedly explained that he had no intention of criticizing the American system of government, but was explaining its workings.

McCarthy gave no heed to what Attlee had actually said, but used the occasion of the speech to denounce Great Britain and imply that Attlee, long a leading foe of Communism, was a Soviet sympathizer. Other Senators were irate at McCarthy's blow to Anglo-American friendship. Both Sen. Alexander Wiley, McCarthy's Wisconsin colleague and chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and the next ranking Republican member of the Committee, Sen. H. Alexander Smith of New Jersey, were quick to disavow the attack of their fellow Republican Senator. Speaking of the McCarthy affair, Sen. Smith said, "I can imagine nothing more pleasing to the Kremlin . . ."

In Britain, Attlee hastened to counter the ill effects of the McCarthy speech: "I do not think that anyone in this country judges America by Sen. McCarthy. The British Labor Party and I myself have been vigorously opposing the Communist Party in this country ever since its formation—long before Sen. McCarthy was ever heard of."

The French Catholic Daily, La Croix, said June 17, 1953: "McCarthy's insulting of Attlee earned him the general reprobation of Europe and America (except the extremist papers)." The Paris daily, Combat, put it this way May 15: "McCarthy's indecent attack against Attlee brings to mind a few predecessors in this kind of eloquence. Goebbels never did better on the best day he ever had."

McCarthy Attacks "The Very Heart of American Policy"

At the end of eleven months of McCarthy's constant attacks on American policy and American officials, the Eisenhower Administration recognized the fundamental split between the leaders of the Republican Party and the junior Senator from Wisconsin. In the weeks preceding this step, McCarthy's charges had reached a new peak of violence. At a crucial stage in international negotiations—in fact, on the eve of the Big Three Conference in Bermuda—he was again undermining his nation's representatives.

On Nov. 24, in a nationally broadcast and telecast speech which was ostensibly a reply to former President Truman's indictment of McCarthyism, the Wisconsin Senator, according to the Alsops in the New York Herald-Tribune, "intimated that the Eisenhower Administration's foreign policy is one of 'whining, whimpering appeasement.'"

McCarthy's speech was studded

with phrases like "perfumed notes," "phony truce," and "blood trade." The Tablet, chief organ of the Catholic church in England, warned (Dec. 12, 1953) after the McCarthy outcry, "Unless the President can silence the Senator, the Republicans will be in difficulties . . . The world today could not support anything short of a hard, cold realism guiding the policies of the U.S. The time is too serious for Messiahs of either right or left."

The Chicago Sun-Times (Dec. 3, 1953) reflected the editorial opinion of many middle-of-the-road dailies in this country when it characterized McCarthy's principal theme as a demand for "blackmail, coercion, and intimidation" and "blustering and domineering methods" in the conduct of American foreign policy. Referring specifically to McCarthy's attack on the Eisenhower Administration for not cracking down on allied nations which trade with Communist China, the Sun-Times said: "McCarthy, who professes to abhor Communist methods, would employ those very methods to bring our allies abjectly to heel. He would threaten and browbeat them as Russia does her satellites."

McCarthy's attempt to discredit the Republican Administration for condoning "blood money" trade between our allies and China was answered by Harold E. Stassen, chief of Foreign Economic Operations, who was McCarthy's choice for President in 1948.

Stassen had pointed out on an earlier occasion that the problem involved "a very complex question. If we insist our Allies break off some of their present trade some of them would be in a position to ask, 'How do we stay alive economically?' " On Jan. 9, 1954, Stassen, whose anti-Communist credentials are as impressive as any official's in the Republican Administration, said that increased East-West trade this year would help push democratic ideas through the Iron Curtain and might even improve political relations with Russia.

Stassen declared in an interview, carried by the Associated Press, that the Republican Administration is now inclined to favor East-West trade because Western Europe's recovery has reached the point where such trade can be economically as well as politically profitable. He pointed out that the Administration still opposed trade with Red China, and would at least until peace is restored in Korea and Indo-China, but, he emphasized, a general resumption of East-West trade could "succeed in convincing the people of the Soviet bloc that the free world is pursuing a genuine policy of peace and even force their leaders to be less hostile to the West."

On Dec. 1, 1953, Secretary of State Dulles, after receiving the President's approval, struck back on the broader issues raised by McCarthy in his attack on the Administration's foreign policy. Without mentioning his name, but with direct reference to McCarthy's attack, Dulles repudiated the Senator's recent insinuations that the Eisenhower Administration was appeasing the Communists.

Dulles told the press: "The burden of that criticism was that we spoke too kindly to our allies and sent them 'perfumed notes,' [the McCarthy phrase] instead of using threats and intimidation to compel them to do our bidding." After stating the desire for constructive criticism, the Secretary of State said that these charges [McCarthy's] were attacking "the very heart of American policy."

The Secretary of State went on to discuss the need for the closest cooperation with our allies. These nations had been willing to give the United States air bases on the periphery of the Soviet Union which were essential to protect the American people from sudden air attack. And our allies, Dulles said, were not as McCarthy would have them, satellites on the Soviet pattern. Therefore: "We shall be firm and persistent in trying to secure agreement on what we believe to be right. We shall expect a fair sharing of efforts and burdens. But we shall not try to be arrogant, or to demand of others what we ourselves, if circumstances were reversed, would reject."

President Eisenhower stood fully behind Secretary Dulles in opposing the McCarthy policy of treating our allies in such a way as to drive them into Soviet hands. In his press conference the President said, as paraphrased by the New York Times Dec. 2, 1953: "Such coercion, imposed by us on our Allies, would mark the United States, not as a leader, but as an imperialist power, which is the very charge leveled against us by Soviet propaganda that feeds on Mr. McCarthy's diatribes."

John Foster Dulles

Britain, the nation which has suffered most from McCarthy's attacks, hailed the Administration's step.

The Manchester Guardian Weekly said Dec. 10, 1953: "The rebukes issued by the President and Secretary Dulles to Sen. McCarthy have been reassuring, at least on this side of the Atlantic, because they have set up a barricade of good sense to stem the flood of vituperative politics."

The London Daily Telegraph (Dec. 5, 1953) devoted its lead editorial to denouncing McCarthy's "intensification of the demagogic technique which has inflated him into a figure of worldwide significance . . . Even if the Senator fails to shake the Administration, his campaign will continue to poison American attitudes to friendly nations."

Reviewing the whole episode, ABC, an important newspaper in Franco Spain, said Dec. 4, 1953:

"The intolerant aggressiveness of his temperament and an impeccable instinct for publicity have led McCarthy to believe that the most important man in today's American political life is McCarthy . . .

"Having received for nothing one half-hour on radio and TV networks, worth in normal circumstances several hundred thousand dollars, McCarthy used the thirty minutes not to defend himself against attacks by ex-President Truman but to attack President Eisenhower, the allies of the United States, and those of the Republicans who disagree with the Soviet spy hunt which is foremost in the Wisconsin Senator's political capital . . .

"The simple negation of the obvious is a familiar tactic for the Senator from Wisconsin . . . His world is divided between traitors at the service of Russia and patriots at the service of McCarthy . . ."

In Rome, Giornale d'Italia, the conservative daily, commented that Eisenhower and Dulles took the political risks involved in fighting back against McCarthy because "from too many capitals came alarming reports of the opinion that had been forming in friendly countries about the American conduct of foreign affairs." The Eisenhower Administration, said this Italian paper, felt obliged to act because "in Europe and Asia the impression was growing that McCarthyism dominates Washington."

'The Spreading Poison'

The incalculable damage done by McCarthy to the Western cause in its historic struggle against Communist ideology shows up with great clarity in the sober comments of our friends in Europe and Asia. The central Soviet goal, Kremlin strategy has emphasized, is to drive a wedge between the United States and its allies.

That is why President Eisenhower urgently emphasized Dec. 4, 1953, that "unity among free nations is our only hope for survival in the face of the worldwide conspiracy backed by the weight of Soviet military power." That is why Secretary of State Dulles said Dec. 1, 1953: "Never in all our history was there a time when good friends and allies meant so much to us."

Yet it is precisely at this time that McCarthy creates doubt and division among our friends and holds American institutions up to ridicule and mockery throughout the free world. Few Americans realize how seriously our allies abroad take McCarthy and how deeply he strikes terror in the hearts of our friends.

On July 16, 1953, Joseph C. Harsch reported for the Christian Science Monitor that "Sen. McCarthy is the most frequently discussed American in Europe."

Constantine Brown, columnist for the Washington Star, wrote from Switzerland Oct. 9, 1953: "McCarthyism is more discussed in intellectual circles here than the Soviet threat or Eisenhower's foreign policies."

The New Yorker for May 30, 1953, carried a dispatch from Paris noting that "for the past month American visitors to Europe who are important enough to know important Europeans have been reporting that they are everywhere being asked the same question: 'What are you going to do about McCarthy? What has happened to America?' "

From Rome, Frank Kelley cabled the New York Herald Tribune July 26, 1953, the report that the Italians "are bewildered that a nation so strong as America should be so tolerant of [McCarthy's] fanaticism, of witch-hunting methods in dealing with problems of Communism."

From Paris, Don Cook of the New York Herald Tribune wrote July 26, 1953: "It is a rare Paris diplomatic gathering where a remark is not made to the effect, 'But when we see things like McCarthyism happening to your country, we certainly have doubts about America's capacity for world leadership.' "

In Belgrade, Eric Bourne sent a dispatch to The World, monthly U.S. magazine, for November 1953 reporting that among the forces in world affairs most feared in Yugoslavia is "the influence on U.S. policy of Sen. Joseph McCarthy . . ."

In Tokyo, Prof. Sadayoshi Fukuda, writing in the October issue of the magazine Bungei Shinju, reported that one of the principal reasons for anti-Americanism in Japan is "the red-hunting conducted by McCarthy."

In Delhi, India, The Sunday Statesman wrote Nov. 22, 1953, of "McCarthy's special nose for politics by smear" with this observation: "While it would be foolish to suggest that the American mind has been paralyzed by McCarthy, its slow poison has spread fairly wide and deep."

In a series of articles in the Christian Science Monitor in July 1953, Joseph C. Harsch made these significant comments while studying conditions in Europe: "In each European country anti-McCarthyism takes its own separate form based on national experience . . . In Germany the German mind has found what it regards as a release from its own sense of guilt about Hitler. From the day Hitler achieved power, Germans have winced under the charge of having lacked the political wisdom and the moral courage to stop Hitler before it was too late. To the German of 1953, Sen. McCarthy is reason to say to an American, 'Now practice what you have preached.' Sen. McCarthy has become the German's vindication of his own sense of guilt about Hitler." (July 22) "If the future generation of Europeans turns again to Communism, the turn will be dated from the spring of 1953 when McCarthyism discredited anti-Communism in Europe. Europe cannot be held against Communism without the support of its intellectuals and its working classes. In those areas the damage [done by McCarthy] has been devastating." (July 23)

It is strikingly significant that all anti-totalitarian political groups in Europe are opposed to McCarthy. The New York Herald-Tribune for May 22, 1953, put it this way: "He is criticized as much from the extreme Right as from the extreme Left, and the Center regards him as a threat to the world it is trying to create."

On July 22, 1953, Joseph C. Harsch of the Christian Science Monitor expressed much the same conclusion in these words: "There are literally no defenders of Sen. McCarthy in Europe except for the occasional individual who always hated America anyway . . . Such a person says, and I

A 'Fearful Thing'

"The voice of McCarthy was abroad in the land and it is now, as it was in the beginning, a poisoned and fearful thing. It went on forever making unproved charges, forever irresponsible, forever merely free of libel; it went on exploiting the insecure, the anxious, the confused, and the afraid.

"It told no truth, and held no answers. . . . We have known demagogues in our political history but this is a special kind—an evil kind, a deliberate kind. It adds falseness to the already false.

"It represents the other side of the election coin. It is the spurious and the counterfeit. It would be legal tender nowhere in any world where reason was and where intelligence was operative."

The Commonweal
Catholic weekly magazine

have heard it, 'I like McCarthy. He proves how barbarous America really is.' "

Even more significant than this universal loathing of McCarthyism by the democratic forces of Europe is the fact that the Communist press alone makes little or no genuine protest against McCarthy, for it is in the totalitarian interest to have America's good name besmirched by the junior Senator from Wisconsin. A survey of the French press, conducted by Lionel Durand, former foreign editor of Paris-Presse and more recently editor of the official organ of the World Veterans Federation, showed that over a sample period of two months in 1953 papers of all but one political and religious complexion—conservative, middle-of-the-road, Catholic, Protestant, and independent—expressed alarm and disgust over McCarthy's operations. The one exception was the French Communist daily, L'Humanite, which alone made no direct attack on McCarthyism.

Aiding the Communists

Americans know that McCarthy is not running the United States, despite the fact that he wields tremendous influence, and that the traditions of American freedom and democratic procedure are still strong.

"Feel Free To Write Whatever You Want"

"I Hear He's Going to Demand Equal Time in the White House"

But outside of the United States it is the reports of McCarthy's charges which give the distorted impression of his power. And when, as in the case of the Cohn-Schine mission, outstanding officials are discharged after being subjected to McCarthy's attack, McCarthy's rule of terror seems stronger in the eyes of outsiders than it really is. As the Washington Post pointed out Oct. 3, 1953, the very fact that "McCarthyism seems to have reached such heights of intimidation is almost as damaging as if the intimidation were a fact."

So great has been the adverse impact of McCarthyism on U.S. foreign policy that the U.S. government has officially recognized the barriers which McCarthy has created to bar the successful functioning of that policy. The National Security Council, the most important strategic planning body in the United States, made up of the military and diplomatic chiefs, has had to concern itself with a detailed study of the effect of McCarthy in undermining confidence in America. (Washington Post, Nov. 21, 1953)

But it is the aid McCarthy gives Communism that chiefly concerns our friends abroad. Adlai Stevenson, for instance, reported in Look magazine Sept. 23, 1953, that "one of Western Europe's most responsible and respected leaders told me that McCarthyism has done America more harm in eight months than Soviet propaganda has done in eight years."

Bill Baggs, columnist for the Miami Daily News, reported a conversation with a Norwegian who emphasized that McCarthy "makes these times hard for us. He promotes hysteria. When he promotes hysteria, the Communists use this against America in Europe."

In Italy, a Christian Science Monitor correspondent found that Italian Communists owed "a vote of thanks" to McCarthy because his attacks on the U.S. Information Service led to the removal from their library shelves of some of the most effective anti-Communist propaganda ever to appear in Italy.

In Canada, the Montreal Star reported that McCarthy "has become a symbol in many parts of his own country and abroad of the worst kind of American. Enemies of the United States joyfully proclaim this, and many friends of America have had their faith in American leadership weakened by the presence of such a man in the Senate."

A representative report on British opinion was written by Philip Drew, special correspondent for the Cleveland Plain Dealer, from London Dec. 5, 1953: "The other day an English friend who watches international doings, and particularly Anglo-American doings, pretty closely, shook us considerably with this one:

" 'If the Soviet Communists hope to weaken the Western Alliance, and most especially the Anglo-American part of it, they will never succeed. But they can satisfy themselves there is a man unconsciously doing a much more efficient wrecking job than anybody in the Kremlin would ever have chosen. The name is Sen. Joseph McCarthy.'

"Just to set things straight the man who said this is no bug-in-the-head Bevanite. He is not even a socialist. He is a conservative who is sick to death of reading every day in British and American newspapers little things and big things that add up to the souring of Anglo-American feelings. And he is not alone. It is what an alarming number of Britons are thinking."

Constantine Brown, columnist for the Washington Star, was obliged to report from Switzerland Oct. 10, 1953, that Communists were effectively spreading wild rumors about the degree to which McCarthy is now able to control American thinking. One of the "concoctions" of "poisonous propaganda against the United States" shows the extent, Brown reported, to which the Communists have exploited fears of McCarthyism.

"A sample of this concoction was served with cigars and coffee after a dinner attended by this reporter: 'McCarthyism is actually an American form of Hitlerism. McCarthy's impact on the frightened American mind of today is no less powerful than Hitler's was before he came to power 20 years ago. He has created the bogey of treason in the government and has slurred the reputations of men whose only guilt was to think, years ago, differently from the present American thinking.' "

Reports of this kind by commentators as conservative as Constantine Brown, who are not identified as anti-McCarthy, make it clear how joyfully the Communists have been boosting McCarthy's reputation as a way of creating doubt and suspicion of America among European friends. These rumors developed and circulated by Communists had reached so many in pro-American Switzerland that one of Europe's outstanding newspapers, the Swiss Neue Zuricher Zeitung, pleaded with Americans to realize "what kind of impression is created abroad by those tendencies which are characterized by the name of McCarthy. Persons whom we had become used to admiring have been helplessly subjected to the most debasing investigations." (Quoted in a Geneva dispatch to the New York Herald Tribune July 26, 1953)

In an Austrian estimate of McCarthy and his works, the Neue Wiener Tageszeitung said Apr. 19, 1953: "McCarthy's influence and his methods of action of 'making politics' run counter to the whole of the past character of the United States and to the spirit actuating this democratic country. They are unheard of, because his method of approaching the problem is not serious, and offends the sacred principles of fair play."

Another Austrian estimate of McCarthy, this one by Dr. Oskar Pollak,

The Challenge

chief editor of the militantly anti-Communist Arbeiter-Zeitung, on Apr. 14, 1953, characterized McCarthy as "the best ally the Communists have in the United States." On another occasion (May 20) this leading Austrian daily put it this way: "Looking at the total of McCarthy's activities, one sees that in foreign affairs he has always—with few exceptions—played into the hands of the Communists."

Said the Arbeiter-Zeitung in a leading editorial Apr. 14, 1953: "The methods of the McCarthy G.P.U. are a mockery of the liberties of an American citizen—liberties of which the citizens of the whole free world are proud. It is the worst and most ineffectual weapon against Communism —to copy its G.P.U. No one indeed needs to warn us in Austria . . . what Communist infiltration means and how it should be fought. That is why we protest against McCarthy and his terror. It makes the battle harder for America—and for us."

La Croix, the Catholic daily of France, not only described McCarthy on June 19, 1953, as "fast becoming the precious ally of Communism" (see p. 76) but went on to say editorially: "Led by another man than McCarthy, the Committee to investigate the danger of Communism would certainly have appreciable results. Unfortunately that is not the case . . . It can never be said too often how much that war (between McCarthy and the whole Democratic Party, half the Republican Party, the State Department, and perhaps even the White House) has done to America and the whole world; that war of lies, of groundless attacks, slander, and pompous declarations that McCarthy has waged with pitiless violence . . . McCarthy doesn't care a bit about results. What interests him is the publicity these affairs bring him. His only fear is to fall into obscurity. His only desire: attract attention."

On another phase of McCarthy's operations, La Croix noted that "in accusing indiscriminately the innocent and the guilty, McCarthy does enormous harm to the former and gives a manifest advantage to the latter. But far from wishing to change his methods, he has a tendency to worsen them. He lies. He accuses with no proof. He starts with the idea that the public is too stupid to prefer a complex truth to a simple but spectacular lie . . . Let us hope that in the interests of the United States and of the entire world they [the American people] do not take too long to discover the truth about Joe McCarthy, Senator and witch-hunter."

Another French daily, the influential France-Soir, a moderate paper, said on Nov. 4, 1953: "Sen. McCarthy specializes in the most far-fetched accusations, launched under the cover

"Haven't You Heard? McCarthy's Declared War on the Army"

If McCarthy Were a Witness . . .

A well-known British journalist, for three years a Washington correspondent, last year tried his hand at reporting a hypothetical Senate hearing where the witness, rather than the inquisitor, was Senator McCarthy—but where the method was still strictly McCarthyite. The remarkable result, reprinted below, was published in the famous English magazine, Punch (June 10, 1953).

CHAIRMAN. Well, Senator, picking up our questioning where we left off yesterday, you will admit, I take it, that when you defeated the late Sen. Robert LaFollette in the Wisconsin primaries in 1946, you had the support of the Communist and fellow-traveler vote?

McCARTHY. What of it? As I said at the time, Communists have votes, don't they?

CHAIRMAN. Please answer the question, Senator. Did you have the support of the Communist and fellow-traveler vote against LaFollette?

McCARTHY. I believe so.

CHAIRMAN. Right. Now would you also agree that LaFollette, whom you defeated with the aid of this vote, though holding strong liberal views, was intensely anti-Communist, long before you or most other professed anti-Communists of today thought of taking up such a position?

McCARTHY. I'm not familiar with the late Senator's record.

CHAIRMAN. It's not within your knowledge, then, that he was one of the very few members of the Senate to see, in advance, the appalling dangers of the mood in which President Roosevelt approached the Yalta Conference, to the point that he actually went to see the President before he left for Yalta to plead with him to take a tougher and more realistic attitude towards the Russians?

McCARTHY. No, it's not.

CHAIRMAN. You see what I'm getting at, though, don't you, Senator—that the Communists and fellow-travelers in Wisconsin had very good reasons for wanting to get LaFollette out of the Senate and you in, and were delighted when you succeeded?

McCARTHY (banging the table, thereby stimulating a new burst of energy on the part of the photographers). If that is so, they've had every reason subsequently to regret it.

CHAIRMAN. Are you so sure?

McCARTHY. I'd like to read into the record a resolution passed by the American Communist Party and published in the Daily Worker to the effect that Senator Joseph McCarthy is one of the bitterest and most unrelenting foes of Communism. . .

CHAIRMAN. You can read anything you like into the record, Senator, but did you help to draft the resolution?

McCARTHY. Did I help . . . that's ridiculous. We're both grown up, aren't we?

CHAIRMAN. Answer the question.

McCARTHY. No, I didn't.

CHAIRMAN. Now another question. Have you got any present or former Communists on your staff?

McCARTHY. I . . .

CHAIRMAN. The question, Senator.

McCARTHY. My staff has been carefully selected and screened.

CHAIRMAN. What we want to know is whether there are any present or former Communists among them.

(A pause.)

McCARTHY. Two former Communists who . . .

CHAIRMAN. Good. For the record, the Senator employs two former Communists. He was elected in Wisconsin with Communist and fellow-traveler support. He denies being as of now a member of the Communist Party, but it is a matter of public knowledge that his activities since he became a Senator have greatly benefited the cause of Communism here in the United States and abroad.

Furthermore, it can be said with a certainty that, if he were an undercover party member, chosen for that reason to oust LaFollette (particularly dangerous, from the Communist point of view, because a progressive himself, and bearing a name famous among progressives, and at the same time intensely and knowledgeably anti-Communist), everything he has done and said subsequently would support such a hypothesis.

of parliamentary immunity against high officials and eminent persons. His accusations are always made in the most sensational form. In general, these accusations are not followed by real proof, but the noise made by the Senator shatters the most solidly established reputations and has already resulted in the destruction of careers of men well known in the United States."

The right-wing Paris daily, Aurore, made this comment on June 9, 1953: "Since Sen. McCarthy launched the witch-hunt, the United States, which had been until then sure of its strength and of its institutions, lives in a tense atmosphere with the press each morning denouncing new plotters and the radio revealing each night new conspiracies."

In Norway, Arbeidernes Pressekontor, news service of the Labor Party which serves 45 Norwegian newspapers, carried an article Nov. 11, 1953, by Anders Buraas, who had just completed a five months fact-finding trip through North America. Referring to McCarthyism, Buraas concluded: "The loser is American democracy. In the opinion of the rest of the world the prestige of America has been weakened . . . Democracy has survived many a tough fight, but somewhere there must be a limit to what democracy can endure."

Also in Norway, Kontakt, a middle-of-the-road monthly magazine, observed in June 1953: "McCarthy managed to cripple the information machinery of the Voice of America at a time when America had most use for it, namely during the period of Stalin's death . . . The result of McCarthy's investigations is a crippling demoralization of government employees . . . Nobody dares make a major decision any more. . . He creates fear among Americans . . . It is the same foundation on which Hitler built his Germany . . . McCarthy is the most power-hungry and unscrupulous politician of the century."

Aktuell, independent news magazine that is printed in Norway and circulates throughout all Scandinavia, wrote May 23, 1953: "Among those who make it most difficult to be a friend of America, Sen. McCarthy is number one. He destroys more good will than the Information Service can possibly build. When he is caught lying, he answers by spreading more poison."

'Guerrilla Warfare'

"There is today no challenge to the latent greatness of the American people that so demands action than the problem of legislative investigating committees which conduct political guerrilla warfare . . . and in the process besmirch private citizens, public officials, and each other . . . It is here in the growing misuse of the investigative process that the rights of the individual are being most grievously assaulted."

WILLIAM T. GOSSETT
Vice President
The Ford Motor Company

Dagbladet, largest daily in Norway, warned its readers Mar. 20, 1953, that the United States was mistaken in feeling that Fascism was a purely European disease. "Hitler had less support in Germany when he took over than McCarthy has in America today. It was rather difficult in the 1930's to make people understand what type of a man Hitler was. Those who tried to tell the truth were told they were hysterical if not something worse."

In Sweden, Dagens Nyheter, Stockholm's largest daily, commented editorially June 19, 1953, that "McCarthy's position in American political life is alarming in more than one sense . . . These reactionaries with taints of Fascism have succeeded, although to a limited degree so far, in discrediting the principles of any living democracy. They have succeeded in pressing President Eisenhower and other high officials in a manner which in our eyes has weakened the present American government, and America . . . If any group in America is engaged in un-American activities it certainly is Sen. McCarthy and his followers."

In Italy, John P. Leacacos, a conservative European correspondent for the Cleveland Plain Dealer, cabled from Rome Dec. 4, 1953: "Dirty espionage linen being washed in public back home has lowered esteem for the United States and indirectly enhanced Russian prestige. Accusations that former American officials were once Reds is used by the Communist press to brag: 'See, even in capitalistic America there are important proletarian patriots who believe in Communism.' "

Leacacos reported that scoffers who dislike the United States are able to capitalize on the operations of Americans like McCarthy by being able to say: "Willy nilly, the United States is taking on vices of its arch enemy, Communism. Fear imbued by Red terror in its victims is allegedly duplicated by fear and uncertainty instilled in American citizens by 'smear' charges."

In Germany, the Frankfurt Allge-

Our Reliance—'The Love of Liberty'

Below is the Lincoln quotation which McCarthy, in a radio address to the nation Nov. 24, 1953, garbled and distorted to produce exactly the opposite of Lincoln's point:

"What constitutes the bulwark of our own liberty and independence? It is not our frowning battlements, our bristling seacoasts, our Army and our Navy. These are not our reliance against tyranny. All of those may be turned against us without making us weaker for the struggle.

"Our reliance is in the love of liberty which God has planted in us. Our defense is in the spirit which prized liberty as the heritage of all men, in all lands everywhere. Destroy this spirit and you have planted the seeds of despotism at your own doors. Familiarize yourselves with the chains of bondage and you prepare your own limbs to wear them. Accustomed to trample on the rights of others, you have lost the genius of your own independence and become the fit subjects of the first cunning tyrant who rises among you."

meine, an independent conservative and one of the most important dailies in Western Germany, on Nov. 13, 1953, warned that the "spread of McCarthyism" would "fill America's friends with increasing anxiety." On Dec. 2, 1953, that German daily editorialized that it "is an illusion" to believe that McCarthy's chief objective is to expose spies. "What is really going forward has emerged into clear light in McCarthy's challenge to President Eisenhower. Forces are growing in America with which we have long been familiar in our less fortunate continent. No country is protected against fascistic germs . . . If these forces should continue to gain ground in America, the leading Power of the Western World, there would be reason for the gravest anxiety."

On Dec. 22, 1953, Der Kurier, a French-licensed daily in Berlin, one of the most influential Christian Democratic publications in Germany, in a review of the Anderson-May book on McCarthy, commented that McCarthy "sees Communists everywhere, as a delirious alcoholic sees white mice." The review wonders if "not the least important explanation of McCarthy's . . . following in the U.S.A. is the fact that Americans saw only from afar" the tragedy of the rise of Hitler.

This theme that McCarthyism might be a stage in the development of Nazism is contained in scores of warnings in the German press. The Wesser-Kurier, an independent publication, said that if Goebbels were alive, he "would have appreciated McCarthy," and the Allgemeine of Frankfurt professed to see in McCarthy "a united loudspeaker to give voice to the anti-liberal, anti-Semitic, and anti-British forces . . . in America."

The exposure of the frightful price the United States is paying for McCarthyism comes not only from American correspondents abroad and foreign editors, but from American travelers and GIs stationed overseas. Two comments from Americans abroad are representative of countless others like them. One is from an American soldier, the other an American woman.

Joseph V. O'Brien, now a civilian after 12 years of active military and combat duty in Europe, Africa,

To What Low Levels?

Fitzpatrick in The St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Japan, and Korea, was on a furlough in Copenhagen, Denmark, during the summer of 1953. In a report to the Milwaukee Journal, Dec. 26, 1953, O'Brien wrote that he met a Chinese Communist who told him that "Sen. McCarthy is one of Communism's best friends in America.

"I asked why, to which the Chinese replied: 'Your Sen. McCarthy generates and spreads suspicion, doubt, and distrust of your public officials, military leaders, your religious, educational, and scientific institutions, neighbor against neighbor. We care nothing about who McCarthy talks for or against, so long as he generates and spreads confused thinking and widespread distrust. Your Sen. McCarthy supplies us indirectly with endless propaganda material which we use to our great advantage and to the detriment of America.' "

The American woman is Josephine Quirk. She traveled in Europe on a confidential mission during the summer of 1950. She reported her findings in an article in the October 1950 issue of Father Baker's Victorian, a Catholic monthly published by Father Baker's Homes for Charity (National Shrine and Basilica of Our Lady of Victory) at Lackawanna, New York. Here is what this woman who has spent 15 years lecturing in this country on Communism had to say about what she heard in Europe:

"Even if every man accused [by McCarthy] of Communism is really a Red, it will never justify the weapon he has given Moscow to blast and misrepresent us.

"The Senator is the 'darling' of Moscow. They hope he goes on forever. Wherever there is a Red leader, the Senator's accusations are hailed and passed on to the people as actual proofs of the power of the Kremlin in the most important department [State] of the U.S. government . . .

"The Russians, no matter what we think of them, are no dopes about gauging the sensitiveness of Europeans. They have been watching the effect of McCarthy's foaming charges with very shrewd interest and have been exploiting them to the hilt."

It would be possible to go on indefinitely with comparable quotations. All of them hammer home the same conclusion—that McCarthy has seriously impaired the functioning of American foreign policy, reduced our capacity for leadership in the free world, sown seeds of doubt and disunity among our friends and allies, and strengthened Communism in the world struggle of ideologies. Just as significant as the multiplicity of anti-McCarthy comments by anti-Communist forces abroad is the scarcity, if not the downright absence, of such quotations in the Communist newspapers of Europe. These papers regard McCarthy as their helper because his irresponsible attacks undermine confidence in the men and institutions that are most dangerous to the Communists.

'As Great a Threat As the Kremlin'

Perhaps the most striking commentary on the extent to which McCarthyism parallels Communism in its threat to freedom came from Father Leon Sullivan, a Catholic missionary who was imprisoned by the Communists in China. Writing of his experiences in The Commonweal, the Catholic weekly, Nov. 14, 1952, Father Sullivan said: "I would rather return to my Chinese Communist prison cell than avail myself of Senator McCarthy's 'protection.' He is as great, if not a greater threat to American freedom than the military might of the Kremlin, and, believe me, I do not underestimate either the Kremlin's might or its cleverness."

'The Big Truth'

Our Great Hope Is a Fighting Faith in Freedom, Not the Fear Generated by McCarthy

THE DOMINANT reality that emerges from the documented record of McCarthy in action is the fact that this man who has made anti-Communism his political career has contributed dangerously to strengthening the Communist cause. If the Kremlin could succeed in planting one of its own agents in the Senate of the United States, it could hardly hope for greater results in creating doubt, disunity, and fear in America than it has gained from McCarthy's operations.

If this judgment seems harsh and extreme, we can only reply that the hard facts painstakingly assembled in this issue of The Progressive make it clear that—

- McCarthy has struck violently at the very principles of freedom and fair play which distinguish democratic self-government from Communist regimentation.

- McCarthy has sown seeds of suspicion and disunity among the nations of the free world at the very moment they most need unity against the threat of Communist aggression.

- McCarthy has flagrantly demoralized the civil and military establishments of our government at a time of unparalleled world crisis.

By substituting headlines and hysteria for facts and evidence, McCarthy has so successfully harnessed Hitler's concept of "The Big Lie" to his own purposes that many decent Americans actually believe he has exposed a Communist plot in our government and rescued the Republic from betrayal by traitors.

Many Americans who share this belief say they find McCarthy's methods repulsive, but they feel that in tense times like ours we need someone to do "the dirty work" of exposing the subversives in our midst.

This widely held feeling might be more understandable if McCarthy were in fact exposing Communists in government and saving us from a Red plot. But fact piled relentlessly on fact in this issue of The Progressive shows that the evidence does not in any way support such a conclusion.

In the pitifully rare cases that he has focused his sights on what may have seemed like a worthwhile target, McCarthy has so totally distorted the evidence and overplayed his hand as to render his "revelations" less than useless. In his eyes honest mistakes, misjudgments, or misunderstandings become part of a sinister pattern of conspiracy.

The evidence seems to us overwhelming that if we overlook methods because it is results we say we want, McCarthy has not in any measurable way contributed to strengthening the security of our country against spies and saboteurs. More than four years of hit-and-run accusations have yet to produce a single conviction of a Communist in government on evidence uncovered by McCarthy.

Some Americans who know of no specific achievements in McCarthy's record of Red-hunting are still loath to criticize because they think his activities have been worthwhile in dramatizing the evils of Communism and alerting the nation to the menace. However, as Elmer Davis so crisply put it recently, "This amounts to saying that nothing brings the danger of fire more to the attention of the public than turning in false alarms all over town."

But means and methods are important to people who love liberty and cherish principles of tolerance and fair play. It is the contrast between our means and methods, and those of the totalitarians, whether Communist or Fascist, which mark one of the great gulfs between them and us.

As America Goes, So Goes the World

Allan Nevins, one of our foremost historians, summed this up with great clarity recently when he said:

"The fact is that in the protection of basic human rights, method is everything. The Spanish Inquisition justified torture on the ground that it was in a good cause, and was a mere matter of method. The Russian secret police justifies the knock on the door at 3 a.m., the summary sentence, and the pistol shot or deportation to a slave camp on the ground that all this is in a good cause and is a mere matter of method."

The right of Congressional committees to investigate and the need for the most comprehensive surveillance in guarding the nation's security are not at issue; what is at stake is the urgent necessity for exposing and combating the dangerously un-American character of McCarthy's one-man show before it completes the corruption of what is finest in the American system of law and justice.

Learned Hand, one of the wisest of American jurists, who has retired as Chief Judge of the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals after 42 years on the bench, warned his countrymen of this very danger in a memorable address a year and a half ago. Said Judge Hand:

"I believe that that community is already in the process of dissolution where each man begins to eye his neighbor as a possible enemy, where non-conformity with the accepted creed, political as well as religious, is a mark of disaffection; where denunciation without specification or backing takes the place of evidence; where orthodoxy chokes freedom of dissent; where faith in the eventual supremacy of reason has become so timid that we dare not enter our convictions in the open lists, to win or lose.

"Such fears as these are a solvent which eat out the cement that binds the stones together; they may in the end subject us to a despotism as evil as any that we dread; and they can be allayed only insofar as we refuse to proceed on suspicion, and trust one another until we have tangible ground for misgiving."

In his nightly newscast Feb. 24, 1954, Edward R. Murrow quoted

David Schoenbrun, CBS chief in Paris, on precisely this point. Commenting on the shocked response of our friends in Europe to the capitulation of the U.S. Army to McCarthy, Schoenbrun told Murrow: "They [our friends] don't think a line can be drawn between objectives and methods, particularly when methods, as in the McCarthy case, are so spectacular and destructive that they obviously achieve objectives far removed from the avowed one.

"It is a case of burning down the barn to catch a rat, one French editor told me, pointing out that it is ridiculous to say you approve rat-catching, although you deplore the fact that the barn burned down. You cannot separate the two, any more than you can say that you approved Hitler's aims while deploring his uncouth methods. Hitler's aims may have been to eradicate Communism in Germany and destroy the Soviet Union, but what his methods did in fact accomplish was to eradicate democracy in Germany and destroy France—not Russia."

II

We live in a dangerous age, and surely one of the greatest dangers that confronts us is the counterfeit philosophy of Communism and its appeal to the underprivileged of humanity. But we do not begin to meet that menace by burning books, by crushing dissent, and by creating an atmosphere of hysteria.

"How can we defeat Communism," President Eisenhower asked at Dartmouth last year, "unless we know what it is? What it teaches—why does it have such an appeal for men? . . . . We have got to fight it with something better."

Here is the heart of our problem in this dangerous age—the challenge to oppose Communism with something better. This we can never hope to do if we abandon our most cherished democratic principles and embrace the very methods we abhor in Communism. This process of diluting precisely those qualities which distinguish us from those we oppose is dangerously far advanced in McCarthyism. McCarthy's daily activities carry us perilously close to the Kremlin concepts that trial by jury must be replaced with trial by mere accusation; that honest, human error of judgment is equivalent to criminal offense; that dissenters are traitors, and that every friendly foreign nation must become our regimented satellite or suffer our wrath and reprisals.

The first battle in the struggle against Communism is within ourselves—to strengthen our own dedication to democracy by living its compelling principles in our daily lives.

If we are to be true to ourselves and effective in action with others, ours must be more than a mere negative adherence to anti-Communism. A fighting faith in freedom, not cringing fear of Communism, alone will qualify the United States of America to lead the free world in the historic clash of ideologies that is the dominant fact of life in our time.

We of The Progressive are convinced that our best chance to keep the lamps of hope and liberty burning brightly in a world hungry for light and leadership is to deal head-on with the conditions which create the doubts and fears on which McCarthy and Malenkov thrive. The first great stride down that road of hope must be to replace "The Big Lie" of Communism and McCarthyism with "The Big Truth" of a working democracy.

schools to which he can conveniently send his children; then is the time when the illusory appeal of Communism assumes great proportions. . . . If the farmers are content, the threat of Communism will be reduced to the point of impotency. . . . I strongly urge the powers-that-be to pay more heed to the humble requests of the Thai farmer. One hundred baht spent on irrigation may save ten thousand baht at the front." (The baht is the unit of Thai currency.)

In recent months members of parliament for the northeast provinces have repeatedly warned the government that political unrest and agitation is most likely to begin there, in the areas close to Laos. "Northeast suffering from drought". . . . "Poverty in N.E. Luring Reds". . . . "Water Scarcity Causes Disease." These are typical newspaper headlines in recent months. In one district in Ubol Province, 900 elementary school boys had to stay away from school because there was no rice to eat at home. A former minister of agriculture has stated that he fears "there will be a crisis in Thailand at the end of the year because farmers cannot sell their rice and they have no way to get money."

To all these complaints the government has no reply except a few vague promises. Opponents of the government are therefore asking two leading questions: (1) What will be the use of U.S. military aid if the people are discontented and apathetic? (2) How can the present government be entrusted with economic aid when it failed so miserably to make good use of the wealth that poured into the country during the postwar years? A socialist member of parliament (one of the mere handful of opposition members) with whom I discussed these problems told me that he believes the United States is helping the wrong people.

"You Americans and British alike have supported the selfish reactionary elements in Indo-China and see what it has brought you," this lawmaker observed. "You will support Bao Dai in Vietnam, and corrupt governments in Cambodia and Laos and so bring Communism right up to our frontiers. In Guatemala the United States found a way to help its friends who overthrew the government. Give us liberals and socialists the same sort of support and you will soon see a big change here. Otherwise, more and more of the opposition will be driven to the same conclusions as Pridi Panomyong—that our only salvation lies in cooperation with Red China."

I asked him whether there are in Thailand today men who could lead a progressive democratic government that could pull the people out of their apathy and give them something positive worth fighting for.

"Yes, of course," he replied. "There are liberals like Seni Pramoi, and Khuang Aphaiwong who held the premiership in governments just after the war, and socialists like Prasert —all men of integrity and loved by the people. If there were genuinely free elections tomorrow, they would be voted into power without a doubt. But there never will be free elections in Thailand—the present rulers and their friends have too much to lose."

"What about the danger of political conflict opening the way for Communism?" I asked.

"The British don't seem to be so afraid of that in Malaya!" was his reply. "And there you have actual war going on with the Communists. Yet still they are pushing ahead for elections and real self-government, all known to the police. Government has become a joke to our people. But when the people begin to see the government doing something for them, then there will be a quick change and confidence will return."

This man, and other politicians with whom I have spoken, convinced me that an alternative government with a positive program is a possibility. Such a program would be based on free election of all members of parliament, the development of local government, and long-term economic projects backed by advice and assistance from the United Nations. It is still not too late for such a policy to be put into effect and as a first step the United States and British governments might advise the present Siamese rulers, in the strongest possible terms, that really free elections should be held as soon as possible. Otherwise Thailand may soon become another Indo-China.

Even before the recent call by Pridi Panomyong from Peking to the people of Thailand to overthrow the present government, his supporters had been slipping out of the country to join the Free Thai movement in Laos and China. There is now evidence that regular contact exists between the left-wing opposition in Thailand and the Free Thai organization outside the country. Agents are coming and going with increasing frequency. Only a few days after the broadcast of Pridi's appeal over Peking radio, verbatim copies were printed in Bangkok and secretly distributed to every newspaper and to every member of parliament.

An ever-increasing number of Siamese liberal and socialist patriots, believers in democracy, are giving up all hope that anything can be done to help their country under the present regime. If their voice is not heard by America and Britain they will surely turn to Red China. Continued reliance on the military strengthening of Thailand, to the exclusion of political, social, and economic reforms long overdue, will not resolve the tragedy of Thailand. It can only weaken the will of the people to resist the clever promises of the Communists and make the true defense of the country vastly more difficult.

How Murrow Does It

By Irwin Ross

THE disparate fates of Edward R. Murrow and Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy, in the last seven months, ought to still a few of the alarmist cries over the fate of freedom in America. Last March, it will be recalled, Murrow mounted an uninhibited television attack on McCarthy and all his works. Murrow was widely applauded at the time, but there was a lot of doleful head-wagging along Madison Avenue. This time, it was suggested, the intrepid Murrow had gone too far: his previously indulgent sponsor, under pressure from the McCarthyite claque, was likely to dump him when the session was out.

For Murrow had assailed the Senator in a "controversial" manner unprecedented on radio and television. He pulled no punches, withheld no judgments. He pinned the McCarthy phenomenon to the screen—and cooly set about dissecting the Senator's deceit, bombast, and demagogy. The stuff of the show was McCarthy's own words and actions, recorded on film and on tape, interspersed with Murrow's astringent comments. The audience saw the Senator in almost every sequence, his bull-dog vigor oddly contrasting with his self-conscious, rather unctuous laugh. A more devastating portrait could hardly have been sketched.

The predictions of disaster were of course unfounded. No injury befell Murrow. Instead, the Peabody committee honored him for the fifth time; he lectured to the cadets at West Point, and added several additional testimonials to the sixty-odd citations and awards he already possessed. And he has continued to assail the Senator with unimpaired vigor.

As for McCarthy, the ensuing months have brought him an unending series of embarrassments and disasters—so much so that there is some danger he will soon be cast in the role of underdog.

By this time, Murrow's polemical forays have been endlessly celebrated in print. What is in many ways more interesting is his technical virtuosity. With a vigor and imagination which no one else has equalled, he has regularly brought the raw stuff of history into the living rooms of America—neatly packaged and deftly chronicled, with all the tang and reality sealed in.

Murrow occupies so much air time on the Columbia network that he has become known as "the intellectual's Arthur Godfrey." (And next to Godfrey he is CBS' most profitable property.) He does two weekly TV shows and two daily radio shows—one of them a 15-minute news broadcast. Last year his take-home pay was $240,627.

Murrow's TV programs differ markedly. See It Now, currently in its fourth year, is basically a news documentary, sober in intent though generally executed with dry wit. Person to Person, which is considerably more casual in its approach, is a novel kind of interview program that has Murrow, in a studio, chatting successively with two celebrities who are in their homes—anywhere from one to 3000 miles away.

For See It Now Murrow, who scorns sedentary broadcasters, frequently goes along as a working reporter. His tall, stoop-shouldered figure—clothed in elegant Chesterfield, or ratty trench coat, or army field jacket, depending on the occasion—is as familiar a sight to his fans as is his lean and handsome and slightly somber face.

Murrow and his co-producer, Fred W. Friendly, have always conceived of See It Now in rather spacious terms. They maintain five full-time camera crews, four here and one in IRWIN ROSS, special writer for The New York Post, is the author of the book "Strategy for Liberals." His articles have appeared in Harper's, Commentary, Reader's Digest, Pageant, and American Magazine.

Europe, and enjoy nothing better than dispatching them, in a day or two's notice, to India, Hong Kong, Dutch Guiana, or the Suez Canal. Their sponsor, the Aluminum Company of America, puts up $23,000 a week for production costs, but Murrow and Friendly have not always been able to keep within their budget, in which case CBS foots the extra bill—often not without some grumbling. Both men tend to regard financial considerations as intolerable restraints on their creative spirit, particularly when some big project is underway—like sending a camera crew to India to interview Nehru, or several crews to document a hot war in Korea or a cold war in Berlin. And they normally get their way.

See It Now has never suffered from a poverty of ambition, any more than of money. A couple of years ago, the Air Force proposed a program on our coastal anti-aircraft defenses, to spur recruiting for the ground-observer corps. Murrow and Friendly regarded it as old hat. After some deep thought, they came up with the suggestion that the Air Force provide See It Now with nothing less than a mock bombing of New York—"enemy" bombers, American interceptors, and all the rest. The Generals finally agreed, but wanted the "enemy" planes to take off from the U.S. No good, said See It Now. If there was going to be an attack, it had to be realistic, with at least one B-29 crossing the Atlantic—and with a See It Now cameraman and reporter along, of course. And so it was arranged. The mock bombing made a dramatic show: the cross-Atlantic hop, the B-29's approach over the Maine coast—close to the ground to get under the radar screen—then brief combat with the fighter planes, and finally the bomb run down the spine of Manhattan.

However varied its subject matter, each number of See It Now displays the distinctive Murrow style—understatement, wry good humor, with here and there a touch of acid wit. Commentary is sparing: the pictures carry the story. Everything is unrehearsed. "We just hold up the camera," says Friendly, "and people talk into it. That little box is the most perceptive instrument ever devised." They often concentrate on close-ups, where a twitch of the shoulder or a flick of an eye becomes a bravura gesture. If a man is insincere, he can damn himself in 45 seconds flat.

An unvarnished view of reality has always distinguished the program. Instructing the crews that covered the fighting in Korea, Murrow cautioned against "razzle dazzle fancy gadgets and exciting switches . . . It is our intent to capture the sound of combat by coming back with the little picture. The best picture we could get would be a single GI hacking away at a single foxhole in the ice of a Korean winter . . . We're anxious to know how you change a spark plug when your hands are too numb to coordinate. Or a close-up of what frostbite looks like." By the time they were through, they had many such "little pictures"—around 50,000 feet of film, slimmed down to 5,000 for a special hour-long show.

The "little picture," the off-beat view that captures the essence of a situation, is a Murrow specialty. Reporter Joe Wershba once caught a wonderful bit of political nonsense when he covered an Eisenhower meeting in Baltimore during the 1952 campaign. Before Ike was to go on, a man from a Manhattan ad agency got up on the stage to instruct the audience in how and when to applaud. While in the middle of the "warm-up," a colleague hastened across the stage and hauled the instructor into the wings. Apparently, his timing had gone awry—there still were several minutes before air time. Later, at the propitious moment, the warm-up was resumed, the house rocked with applause, and the show went on. The regular newsreel photographers paid no heed to this amusing sequence but See It Now's cameras kept grinding away. The result, on TV, was an oblique glimpse of campaign operations which most Americans never see.

The atmosphere around the See It Now shop has all the frenetic quality of a college newspaper at edition time. The New York staff is small—Murrow, Friendly, a handful of film cutters, and a few office people—and the technical problems are immense. Film is often shot halfway across the world 48 hours before show time; it has to be flown back to New York, processed in the laboratory, screened in the projection room, cut to size, and fitted with commentary. For a normal program, around 25,000 feet of film are shot, of which about one-tenth is used. Just viewing 25,000 feet takes many hours. Friendly and his crew often have to work a straight 36 hour shift—from Monday morning clear through Tuesday night, knocking off when the show ends at 11 p.m.

One problem See It Now doesn't have is sponsor trouble. Indeed, the sponsor, the Aluminum Company of America, treats Murrow with a deference that is altogether rare in the trade. He has the authority, which he frequently employs, to drop the middle commercial if he thinks it conflicts with tone or continuity. ALCOA never interferes in program selection, and often doesn't know what's going to appear until the program is on the air. "The agreement was that they'd make the aluminum, and we'd make the show," says Murrow.

See It Now gets some of its best effects because of its willingness to waste film. There was the time See It Now shot Sen. and Mrs. Estes Kefauver toiling over a receiving line during the New Hampshire primary fight in early 1952. The last guest had left, and a tired and troubled Kefauver, unaware that the camera was still on him, was seen complaining to his wife that he had done so poorly that night, he could barely get his words out, and she kept trying to reassure him. Here, in a few moments of film, was all the boneweariness and pathos of the politician's lot.

See It Now thrives on controversy. It had a glorious romp with the last Presidential campaign, documenting our extravagent political folkways in a fashion no other program has tried. To present the essence of the major debates, Murrow and Friendly developed a technique of quick "cuts"—juxtaposing contrasting statements from Ike and Steve on the same subject. It was an oddly effective device, highlighting the absurdities of political rhetoric and also giving a sharp sense of the real differences of views. Being highly selective, it was a difficult technique to employ without being charged with unfairness. But Murrow carried it off with surprising success; the mail indicated that partisans of each candidate thought he favored their man. (And even today Murrow refuses to say whom, if anyone, he did favor. He will answer any other question from a reporter, but he will not put a political label on himself.)

Amidst the solemnities of a political campaign, Murrow could not deny himself an occasional satirical thrust. At one point he had an extended sequence on the imaginative lengths to which candidates would go to prove their local affiliations. First there was Stevenson, solemnly recalling to an audience in Louisville, Ky. that his grandparents hailed from there. Next, one saw Eisenhower, making the point that he was born in Dixie. Quick cut to Stevenson: his grandfather spoke here in Richmond 60 years ago this week. Cut back to Eisenhower: he had met his wife in this state (Texas). Stevenson again, in Connecticut: "My son is also a student in Connecticut." Ike again, in Iowa: "My Mamie is an Iowa girl."

Murrow has a talent for spotting dramatic potential in a controversy that most people would overlook. He saw an insignificant item or two in the New York papers, saying that the American Civil Liberties Union had been having trouble in getting a meeting hall in Indianapolis, because of the opposition of the American Legion. A local Catholic Church had finally taken the wandering brethren in. Murrow suddenly saw the episode as a kind of test tube conflict between the impulses promoting and squelching freedom in this country. He rushed the cameras to Indianapolis, and they returned with one of his most memorable shows—including a fascinating sequence of "cross-cuts" between the ACLU meeting and a simultaneous protest meeting held by the Legion.

No controversy is too strenuous or too ticklish for Murrow to plunge into. Normally, he tries to present both sides as fairly as possible, but it is impossible to interpret the news without an editorial slant—and Murrow's slant is always toward the free and open society. He expresses it with vigor—and never with greater effect than when he reported, last fall, on the strange case of Lt. Milo Radulovitch.

Radulovitch had been suspended from the Air Force reserve as a "security risk." No charge of disloyalty had been made against him personally—rather allegations that his father and sister had Communist leanings. Radulovitch made a spirited defense, arguing that he could not be held responsible for the derelictions of his relatives. But it availed him nothing.

At this point Murrow got interested in his plight. A three-man camera crew was dispatched to his hometown of Dexter, Mich. They interviewed everybody in sight—all the Radulovitches, the lieutenant's lawyer, several townspeople. The Air Force would not talk, but the local American Legion head, the town dentist, and the police chief said some pretty bitter things about the absurdity of "guilt by relationship." It all made an absorbing presentation of a novel slice of Americana, whose moral Murrow pointedly drew: "we believe that 'the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father,' even though that iniquity be proved beyond all doubt, which in this case it was not."

Several million Americans were listening. So, apparently, was the Air Force. A few weeks later Lt. Radulovitch was reinstated with Air Force Secretary Harold Talbott going on See It Now to announce the happy news.

See It Now has its relaxed moments, but Murrow's lighter side is regularly on display only on Person to Person, his Friday night interview show, co-produced by John Aaron and Jesse Zousmer. Murrow delights in coupling on one program such contrasting personalities as Adlai Stevenson and a fashion model; Eva Gabor and V. K. Krishna Menon, India's chief delegate to the U.N.; Joe Louis and Sir Roger Makins, the British Ambassador.

The viewer sees Murrow in the studio, and the guest in his or her home. Sometimes they are chatting together on a split screen, at other times only Murrow or the interviewee appears, although the other's voice is heard. It is a most informal affair, in which Murrow asks about the celebrity's hobbies, work schedule, mementoes. The guest generally takes Murrow on a tour of his home, walking around with considerable freedom by virtue of a wireless mike (developed by Person to Person at a cost of $5,000 each) pinned to lapel or shoulder strap.

The show is "all live" and completely unrehearsed. This makes dullness a normal hazard, if the guest turns camera shy, and indeed some of the 11-minute chats seem of endless duration. But, at its best, the show is sprightly and often unexpected in its revelations. Krishna Menon was grim and disdainful, almost snarling at Murrow, who happens to be a friend of his. James Caeser Petrillo provided a wonderful moment when he forgot he was on television and almost took a swipe at a grandson, who was tugging at his cornet; then he recovered and patted the youngster pleasantly on the head. Elsa Maxwell was uproariously funny when Murrow ran down a list of famous people and asked if she knew them. She knew almost everybody. "Eisenhower?" "Yes, I love him." "Mr. Churchill?" "Oh, I love him, wonderful man, known him 30 years." "Queen Elizabeth?" "Presented once." "Peter of Yugoslavia?" "Too well." "Henry Ford?" "Love the great industrialist."

Off the air, Murrow gives the impression of imperturbability — a smoothly efficient human machine, swift in his movements, measured in his speech, a bit on the dour side but also capable of suddenly turning the switch for a half-hour of genial relaxation. But even in his most easy-going moments, he seems to have himself under tight control—and he often betrays an undercurrent of tension. He is a compulsive smoker, and a line of sweat is always breaking across his brow—even in the coolest rooms.

Murrow has reason to be tense. He carries such a burden of work that his waking hours have to be organized as tightly as a railroad time-table. On Tuesday and Friday nights he is at the studio presenting See It Now and Person to Person, and he normally allots Monday and Thursday nights, as well as many daytime hours, to helping whip the shows into shape. Weekdays he also has to devote himself to his radio news program, broadcast at 7:45 p.m. (EST). His Person to Person colleagues, John Aaron and Jesse Zousmer, aid him with research for the news show and prepare the first six or seven minutes of "hard news," but Murrow composes the end commentary himself. He generally tinkers with the radio show at odd moments during the day and works uninterruptedly at it from around 5 p.m. to 7:30. In addition to these chores, his voice is also heard at 5:55 p.m. (EST) each day, introducing a series of personal testaments called This I Believe. It is a recorded program, and from time to time Murrow trots off to a sound room to read a batch of introductions.

Murrow does not precisely batten on work. At 46, he has enormous resources of energy and can carry on for days on three or four hours' sleep. He is liable, though, to look hollow-eyed and cadaverous and altogether the worse for wear. But, however fatigued, his mind seems to click along at a furious rate. "He's the only man I know who doesn't lose his mental acuteness no matter how tired he gets," says William S. Paley, the board chairman of CBS and an old admirer of Murrow's. But the strange thing about Murrow, most of his friends agree, is that he seems to enjoy fatigue. He is always pushing himself to the edge of exhaustion, for reasons which are in some dispute. "A simple masochistic drive," one colleague will tell you. "The boy likes to suffer—it's the only way he can feel worthy of all the dough he makes."

"The explanation is less complicated," another friend says. "Murrow does his best work when he's under pressure. He will purposely while away the afternoon chatting with visitors—and then have to whip himself into furious concentration to get his radio script out on time. He apparently thinks it'll be a better script. And he gets a boyish thrill out of proving what a daredevil he is with a deadline."

Another CBS colleague, who has known Murrow intimately for many years, says, "Ed does everything as if it's the last thing on earth that he's going to do—whether it's smacking a shot down the fairway or reading a script on the air. Always the anxiety, the fierce concentration. That's a great part of his strength. Other commentators, when the news is dull, will often betray a note of boredom in their voices. But not Murrow."

The note in Murrow's cultivated baritone is always one of controlled tension. His measured, deliberate tones and "pregnant" silences seem to invest every event, however routine, with a portentous significance. This mildly somber quality is Murrow's trademark; the wags around CBS call him the "Voice of Doom."

Murrow's radio performance is otherwise distinguished by a modesty of intent uncommon among broadcasters. He dislikes to call himself a commentator. Too pretentious. He's a reporter, he insists, and he also does not think he should exploit his "monopoly position" to force his own views down the public's throat. On his first broadcast of his current radio show, back in 1947, he said, "This program is not a place where personal opinions should be mixed up with ascertainable facts." Not that he often does not express a personal opinion—but it is labeled as such, and is at the end of the program, clearly separated from the "hard news."

Politically, Murrow can best be described as an unritualistic liberal. Over the years, his radio broadcasts have favored the Democrats on foreign policy questions; in domestic affairs he hews to a line pretty much down the middle. If he were a British citizen, he told me on one occasion, he would have voted for Labor in 1945 and for the Conservatives in 1951. He likes to think of himself as a mugwump.

Murrow has an oddly pessimistic cast of mind. From time to time, he will privately express a pious conviction that the republic will survive, but he generally regards our immediate prospects as pretty bleak. While his grim view of the world seldom changes, Murrow's own moods are subject to wild fluctuations. Some mornings his staff is delighted to find him in a state of almost manic affability, wreathed in smiles and crackling with small jokes. On other days, an impenetrable gloom will settle over him, and he will barely communicate. If he has a lunch date with a friend, he is likely to sit through the meal without saying six words. But if he is introduced to a stranger, while in one of these funks, Murrow's charm is suddenly galvanized. He will make small talk and be altogether agreeable. "Question of politeness," an associate says. "Murrow can't bear discourtesy. He'll act out his miseries only with his friends."

Murrow's style of life is in rather ornate contrast to the nostalgia with which he speaks of his simple origins. He dresses with quiet elegance in suits made by Anderson and Sheppard, Ltd., Savile Row, London; he inhabits a large and handsome Park Avenue apartment and a three bathroom "log cabin" in Pawling, N.Y.; he regularly dines at such elevated establishments as "21" and Voisin. Yet his conversation is filled with memories of his rugged logging days, and one gets the impression, at times, that Murrow primarily thinks of himself as merely one of the most accomplished compassmen ever to tread the Washington woods.

He is contradictory in other ways as well. He has a connoisseur's taste in wines, but virtually no interest in food. He has gone into New York's Le Pavillon, possibly the best French restaurant in America, and ordered scrambled eggs and bacon. Wasn't hungry. "Probably also wanted to shock the captain," says his wife.

With his solemn mien, and clipped, decisive manner of speech—sprinkled with a few rugged epithets and an occasional, well-calculated grammatical error—Murrow often gives the impression of being a very tough fellow. The truth is that he's a soft touch, with a vast well of sentimentality that is immediately tapped whenever an old London hand comes into the office.

Murrow has been in the big time for 17 years, ever since he was sent abroad to head CBS' European service. With Hitler on the prowl, and Europe about to crack at every seam, it was a happy assignment for a budding reporter. Murrow, however, was no reporter; he had spent most of his career in educational uplift work, and he had never even covered a police beat. But he was adaptable.

Murrow's success story, standard in other particulars, is deficient in the early nurture of some driving ambition. He never had any precise ambition: he was just a young man who wanted to get on, and he was not in any great hurry. He came from a poor and entirely non-intellectual family; his father was first a farmer in North Carolina and then a locomotive engineer in Washington. Murrow went to a small high school at Edison, Wash.; after class and during summer vacation, he used to pick up loose change working in a nearby logging camp.

At Washington State College, where he won a Phi Beta Kappa key, his interests expanded considerably. He took courses all the way from animal husbandry to historic costuming, majored in history and speech—and started to read furiously, mostly in the ancients. He had no interest yet in contemporary history. No career line, either, though in his junior year he thought vaguely about becoming a lawyer. But two important things happened to him: a female speech teacher took a flattering interest in his voice, which underwent its first vigorous training; and in his senior year he became president of the student body. This led to his attendance at a number of national student conferences, where he impressed the delegates sufficiently to get elected president of the National Student Federation of America. He took up his duties after he graduated from college in June 1930.

With the presidency came a small office in New York, a salary of $25 a week, and a decision, since he lacked any more promising alternatives, to pursue a career in education. After two years Murrow moved on to the Institute of International Education, as assistant director, largely concerned with arranging student and teacher exchanges between America and Europe. He also served with a committee to aid "Displaced European Scholars" — finding teaching berths in the United States for academicians exiled by Hitler. "For me, it was a year's revolving seminar with some of the best minds of Germany," Murrow recalls. His consuming interest in politics, and his obsessive concern with the hazards democracy faces in the modern world, date from this period.

In 1934, Murrow married Janet Huntington Brewster, late of Mt. Holyoke College, whom he had met a couple of years before on a train bound for New Orleans, where they were both to attend a student conference. The following year Murrow, who by this time was quite well-known in educational circles, was offered a job by CBS to head up a new department, "Talks and Education." Still the amateur academician, but now he could look forward to more than a professor's affluence.

Murrow did an impressive job as CBS' emissary to the egg-heads, arranging programs and propagandizing radio's merits as an educational medium. (But no one ever suggested that he approach a microphone.) He was rewarded, two years later, by a transfer to London and the title of European Director. Apart from secretarial help, he had no staff—but this was to be the real beginning of his career.

He soon hired a jobless newspaperman named William Shirer to help him with his managerial chores, which largely consisted of squiring notables to the studio and shortwaving string quartets to New York. No hint of radio reporting, but the following year Hitler invaded Austria, and Murrow and Shirer bounded to the microphone, broadcasting the news to a gasping world. They were on the scene—and there was no time to corral big names.

When war came closer, Murrow was given an ampler budget and he started to recruit a staff of bright and unknown young men—such current luminaries of CBS as Charles Collingwood, Bill Downs, Richard C. Hottelet, Larry Lesueur, Eric Sevareid. With Shirer, they were the first "Murrow boys" and under their patron's shrewd tutelage they pioneered CBS's foreign service and made it one of the best in the business—long on interpretation, short on histrionics, as dispassionate and objective as possible.

The war made Murrow a household name in America; the staccato breathlessness of "This is . . . London," which began each night's show, conjured up an image of wailing sirens, night battles high over the Thames, and a British courage as implacable as it was undramatic. Murrow took a microphone up on the rooftops to record an air raid and down in the streets to follow the progress of the rescue squads. Murrow's best estimate is that he was on 25 bombing missions over the continent. The first two or three missions made good copy for his show, but thereafter his friends were baffled as to why he kept risking his hide. Murrow had a variety of explanations — he was sore because people back home thought the raids were milk runs, and he was going to tell them differently; it was a matter of "sheer individual arrogance" —his resolution against the fates; and finally he couldn't say no when some youngsters, with whom he had flown before, would call up to ask him along. They obviously thought he was lucky.

He was. Not a scratch in the air or on the ground. Three times his London offices were bombed out. They were close to the BBC, a great convenience but also a great hazard, for the Germans gave it frequent attention. After the third bombing, Murrow wanted to move his office into his apartment building, which had never been hit although it was also near the BBC, but his wife vetoed that inspiration. How far can you push your luck?

He finally came home in 1946, his family by this time having been enlarged by the birth of a son. Murrow was promptly made a member of CBS' board of directors and a vice-president in charge of its whole news operation. It was fitting recognition for his distinction as a reporter, but he soon chafed at the enforced silence. The general impression around CBS is that he was an uninspired administrator, but William Paley denies it. Murrow has said he felt imprisoned in his plush office, and anyway he hated to fire people. Eighteen months later he was back at the microphone, still a board member but no longer a V-P. He hasn't strayed far from that mike since.

I See by the Papers

By ROBERT LASCH

THE ELECTION campaign now closing has not been so heated as the Presidential race, but it is a safe bet that in many communities some candidates and their supporters are unhappy over the treatment they received in the newspapers.

The notion that the press slants the campaign news to favor one party or the other has gained ground steadily in recent years. There is no unanimity on which party gets the advantage. Though most of the complaints come from Democrats, the charge has been made—by the late Sen. Robert A. Taft, for one—that a New Dealish taint among reporters produces a bias in the press against Republicans.

It is easy to be wrong in imputing bias to news coverage, especially when one's feelings are exacerbated by the frenzy of a campaign. With President Eisenhower, Vice President Nixon, Speaker Martin, and sundry lesser personages beating the bushes in behalf of the GOP during the past few weeks, a great many voters may have received the impression that the newspapers were giving the Republicans a decided edge on news coverage of this campaign.

The advantage may have existed, but it does not follow that it was the result of biased news treatment. The truth is that a President, a Vice President, and a Speaker of the House do make news which has to be reported, whether a political party benefits thereby or not. Where to draw the line between news and propaganda? How to judge whether the press is handling an election campaign on the basis of honest news values, or on the basis of front office favoritism?

This question of bias in news coverage has always been primarily one of determining the facts. No newspaper is precisely like another any more than individuals are like each other, and generalizations from a few examples are dangerous. There were so many bitter complaints about press performance during the 1952 campaign that some attempt should have been made long since to determine the facts about it.

But many editors were touchy on the subject. A committee appointed by the journalism fraternity, Sigma Delta Chi, concluded that nothing in the way of an investigation should be undertaken because there was just no way to get the facts. The American Society of Newspaper Editors repeatedly ducked the issue, mostly on the same questionable grounds. The publishers' trade associations scarcely deigned to notice the controversy at all.

Nathan B. Blumberg, assistant professor of journalism at the University of Nebraska, a former reporter and editor, has performed a most useful service by trying to find out just what the facts about press coverage of the 1952 campaign were. He could not, of course, survey the performance of every newspaper in every town. Nor could he render an absolute judgment on the press as a whole. But he could and did study 35 representative newspapers of varying circulation in every section of the country, and through them he has tried to throw some light on the 1952 campaign coverage. His findings are reported in a book just published by the University of Nebraska Press, called One-Party Press?

Mr. Blumberg's method was to study every issue of the 35 papers for one month of the campaign—the final 30 days, from Oct. 6 to Nov. 4. He measured the number of column-inches devoted to campaign news and pictures of each party on the front page and on selected inside pages. He noted the number and size of photographs and the number and size of headlines. This gave him a quantitative analysis which he then sought to supplement by qualitative judgments. For example, he discounted the heavy news play for one party resulting from a visit to a particular city by one of the candidates, since here the "local angle" would distort national news values. He made subjective judgments as to which party should be credited with a particular news item. He made allowances for special local conditions affecting news values, and so on. His conclusion is that while bias in news coverage cannot be scientifically measured, the existence of bias can be determined.

II

Of the 35 newspapers studied, Mr. Blumberg decided that 18 showed no evidence of partiality in the news columns. Fifteen of these papers supported Eisenhower, two Stevenson, and one took no stand. Here is the list:

Baltimore (Md.) Sun.
Birmingham (Ala.) News.
Boise (Idaho) Daily Statesman.
Burlington (Vt.) Free-Press.
Des Moines (Ia.) Register.
Hartford (Conn.) Times.
Memphis (Tenn.) Commercial Appeal.
Miami (Fla.) Herald.
Minneapolis (Minn.) Star.
New York (N. Y.) Times.
Philadelphia (Pa.) Evening Bulletin.
Portland (Ore.) Oregonian.
Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch.
Wilmington (Del.) Journal-Every-Evening.
Jackson (Miss.) Clarion-Ledger.
Salt Lake City (Utah) Deseret News.

In addition to these papers which get Mr. Blumberg's clean bill, he lists 11 others in a kind of twilight zone. Evidently they bothered him, for one reason or another, but all he wants to say about them by way of final judgment is that they showed "no conclusive evidence of partiality in news columns." Seven supported Eisenhower, three Stevenson, and one took no stand. They are:

Bangor (Me.) News.
Dallas (Tex.) Morning News.
Denver (Colo.) Post.
Detroit (Mich.) News.
Omaha (Neb.) World-Herald.
St. Louis (Mo.) Post-Dispatch.
New Orleans (La.) Times-Picayune.

Finally, Mr. Blumberg concludes that six out of the 35 newspapers definitely showed "evidence of partiality in news columns." Four of these supported Eisenhower and two Stevenson. The list:

Chicago (Ill.) Tribune.
Indianapolis (Ind.) Star.
Los Angeles (Calif.) Times.
Sioux Falls (S. D.) Argus-Leader.

Thus Mr. Blumberg in effect gives an "excellent" rating to roughly half of the newspapers he studied, a rating of "poor" to about one-sixth, and of "not so good" to the rest. That is a much better showing, I imagine, than many critics of the press would have expected.

There are, of course, shortcomings in this survey which the author would be the first to acknowledge. You cannot, as he says, measure news play accurately with a yardstick. The column inches you add up do not tell you anything of the biased headlines which may have been used, such as the Phoenix Gazette's amazing line at the top of Page One which converted that daily newspaper into a handbill: "IKE WILL ARRIVE AT MONTGOMERY STADIUM AT 9:25 TOMORROW MORNING: LET'S BE THERE TO SAY 'HOWDY'." Nor does sheer space begin to indicate the relative treatment accorded similar stories, as in the case of the Los Angeles Times, which gave Stevenson's arrival in that city a restrained one-column headline, and Eisenhower's arrival a joyous four-column headline, with trimmings.

Nevertheless the amount of space devoted to a particular party or candidate day after day—especially on Page One or in other prominent positions—does have some significance, and must be regarded as one indicator, if not the only one, of a newspaper's fairness or bias in a campaign. Space, after all, is the common commodity which all newspapers deal in. It can be measured and it is the same for all papers. While an extraordinary proportion of it, as measured by an acceptable standard, is consistently devoted to one side of an issue or a campaign, the public is entitled to draw at least a provisional conclusion of bias.

My principal criticism of Mr. Blumberg's valuable work is that it seems to lack a definite standard by which to measure the performance of his 35 newspapers. In the comments he gives on each newspaper, explaining and evaluating the statistical study of its campaign coverage, he comes very close at times to making the assumption that an Eisenhower paper proved its impartiality if it gave the Democrats the larger news coverage, and vice versa. Of course the party a newspaper supports has nothing to do with the fairness of its own coverage. An Eisenhower paper which slanted the news for the Democrats, or a Stevenson paper which gave the Republicans the break, would be equally guilty.

Nor can it be assumed that the

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY
WASHINGTON, D. C.

JAN 23 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Vice President
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I just had the pleasure of viewing the film, "A Tale of 2,000 Cities," which you have so powerfully narrated.

After seeing this film and having seen "The Whites of Their Eyes" on several occasions, I am impelled to add my most sincere thanks for the distinguished contribution that you are making to our efforts to build up the United States Army Reserve.

I believe you have been informed that "The Whites of Their Eyes" has appeared on almost every television station in the United States and has been given several thousand group showings in our communities. We look forward to an even better audience coverage for the most recent film.

You may be interested in knowing that I have recently written a personal letter to the Mayors of major municipalities (350 in all) requesting their local cooperation with our Reserve defense needs. We plan to ask each Mayor who responds favorably to sponsor local showings of "A Tale of 2,000 Cities" because of the particular aptness of this picture.

I have been informed that you have also narrated "Fire Power" which is now in the final production stages. I am indeed looking forward with pleasure to previewing this in the near future.

Once again, may I express our gratitude to you for the help you are giving the United States Army Reserve.

Sincerely yours,

Hugh M. Milton II

JAMES T. SHOTWELL
PRESIDENT-EMERITUS

April 6, 1954

Dr. Frank Stanton,
Columbia Broadcasting System,
485 Madison Avenue, New York.

Dear Dr. Stanton:

Some comment has been made in the press lately about Edward R. Murrow having been associated with a group of "Marxists" who are said to have met in my home for a period of time in the early 1930's. The intimation has been that, if Ed was not a Marxist himself, at least his thinking was closely allied with theirs. This same group was referred to by Frederick Vanderbilt Field in a letter which he wrote in 1938, and which was printed as part of the hearings before the Senate subcommittee which investigated the Institute of Pacific Relations in 1952. Field talked of a group of "about 18 or 20 people" who met at my house and ate my food one evening a week for about four months, and said that he arranged matters so that out of a meeting of 20 persons, "there were 19 Marxists or pseudo-Marxists and one violent anti-Marxist, Shotwell himself."

This is a completely distorted picture of what went on. At that time, I was Chairman of the Committee on Intellectual Cooperation of the League of Nations, in which post I succeeded Dr. Millikan. In connection with my work on the Committee, I formed a discussion group, quite informal, of young people. It was this group to which Field referred. The group changed from time to time and was not, by any means, composed only of Marxists. Field was one of the group, and of course was a Marxist. There were a number of others whom he brought in, of the same stripe. There was also a strong group of anti-Marxists, however, which included Ed Murrow. The group met at my home, and there were extended discussions on Marxist theory in which Ed and the other anti-Marxists -- including myself -- debated the fallacies in the Marxist theory of economic history. All this discussion was on an entirely theoretical plane and there wasn't even discussion of practical Marxism.

The group broke up finally, principally because of a spoofing of the left wing group. I arranged to have a microphone wired from an upstairs room into the family radio set and then made an elaborate pretense of getting a Stalin broadcast on short wave, the actual "broadcasting" being done in Russian by a White Russian member of the anti-Marxist group. Translated, the broadcast was an attack by J. V. Stalin on Field and his associates, accusing them of being harmful to the Communist cause, and nothing but a group of parlor socialists. The spoof (which was the way we looked at it)

This is the true story behind Field's 1938 letter, and one which clearly is no discredit to Ed. I have known Ed since 1931 or 1932 and the suggestions which have come from certain quarters during the last few weeks that he is, or ever was, a Marxist or Communist sympathizer are absurd. My only interest is to see that the record is set straight on this, and if this letter will be of any use to that end, you have my permission to use it n any manner which you see fit.

Very truly yours,

James T. Shotwell

Dear Ed:

As Secretary, I am writing to transmit to you officially a copy of the following resolution:

The Association of Radio News Analysts at a regular membership meeting on March 18th:

NOTING that Senator Joseph McCarthy of Wisconsin has questioned the veracity and personal integrity of our distinguished fellow member Edward R. Murrow; and

MINDFUL of the fact the Association in Article I of its code of ethics "expects and requires of the radio news analyst painstaking accuracy in his public statements" and under Article II "expects and requires of the radio news analyst the exercise of sound judgement and good taste and the avoidance of sensationalism in both the substance of his broadcast material and the manner of its presentation";

RECALLING Mr.Murrow's long membership in this Association, the Association therefore puts itself on record as completely convinced that Edward R. Murrow in his controversy with Senator McCarthy has continued to uphold the ideals and ethics of this Association.

Be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to Mr. Murrow and to Senator McCarthy.

CODE OF ETHICS

of the

ASSOCIATION OF RADIO NEWS ANALYSTS

The Association of Radio News Analysts, desiring to maintain the independence and prestige of the profession and to improve the standards of analytical broadcasting and to protect the best interests of the public and the industry, has adopted the following Code of Ethical Practice:

I.

The Association expects and requires of the radio news analyst painstaking accuracy in his public statements.

II.

The Association expects and requires of the radio news analyst the exercise of sound judgment and good taste, and the avoidance of sensationalism in both the substance of his broadcast material and the manner of its presentation.

III.

The Association believes that the inclusion in any radio news analysis of commercial, or "institutional" advertising material in the guise of news or personal opinion is undesirable.

IV.

The Association believes the reading of commercial announcements by radio news analysts is against the best interests of broadcasting. It requires its own members to refrain from this practice. The Association deplores the interruption of a news analysis by commercial announcements.

V.

The Association endorses the standards of the National Association of Broadcasters restricting the time allotted to commercial announcements in connection with news broadcasts.

VI.

The Association opposes all censorship of broadcast material.

February 26, 1954.

Dear Fred:

After seeing the Tuesday night show, I want you to know how much we appreciated your coverage of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearings in Akron, Ohio on Charter Review. The subject is one that is close to the Secretary's heart and is of real importance to us. By the way, I felt that you did an effective job in sustaining interest in what could be a pretty dull subject; and I feel more encouraged about the possibilities of success when the "See It Now" technique is applied to intangibles that are difficult to understand by their very nature.

Best regards.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It has long been my desire to compliment you on your fine television programs, "SEE IT NOW" and "PERSON TO PERSON".

Unfortunately, I did not view your program presented on Tuesday, February 2, 1954, which, I understand was from Lawrence, Massachusetts.

In discussing this program with Congressman Leon H. Gavin, whose Congressional District is faced with the same unemployment problem as Lawrence, he suggested that I communicate with you and request that you furnish each of us with a transcript of this particular part of your program.

Your cooperation in advising whether it will be possible for you to comply with this request will be appreciated.

Expressing to you my sincere hope for your continued success in factual reporting of the news, and in the television field, I remain

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The other evening at the time of your television broadcast, "Christmas in Korea," I was flying back to Washington and was unable to view it. I was very disappointed in not seeing it, and now that I have heard so very many laudatory comments about it I am especially sorry that I missed it.

I do want you to know, however, that as Secretary of the Army I sincerely appreciate the service you rendered both to our troops in Korea and to the American people. I know that our men in the front lines appreciated the fact that you spent your Christmas telling their loved ones back home what a fine job they are doing. At the same time, you helped to remind the nation that there is still an important job to be done and that our fighting men still need and merit the constant support of all of us.

I realize how much you must have wanted to be with your own family on Christmas, and for that reason I appreciate your timely broadcast all the more. Thank you again.

Certainly the importance of the submarine problem cannot be overemphasized and with your cooperation it has been brought dramatically to the attention of the American people.

Your television program and also your two radio broadcasts from the USS GILBERT ISLANDS indicated your quick grasp and keen appreciation of the problems which the Navy faces in its relentless efforts to control the Seas.

Dear Fred Friendly:

It has been a long time since I have talked with you, but I am presuming to write you in the belief that you are always interested in ideas.

In my opinion, "You Can See It Now" is just about the best thing on TV. Among the things I have liked best have been your documentaries, conspicuously, of course, the one on Korea.

I should like to suggest that you do a documentary on Albert Schweitzer and his work in French Equatorial Africa. If there is a saint living today it is Dr. Schweitzer, and the value of his work at the medical mission at Lambarene is both for its actuallity and as a symbol, a very great contribution in easing the terrible tensions in Africa. You probably know his beautiful short book, "Out of My Life and Thought." Life magazine has done him twice, once on the occasion of his appearance at Aspen, Colorado.

I am convinced that an intimate view of the old man -- he is nearing 80 -- still at work in his hospital in the jungle, with the whole background developed in the documentary, including the great musicianship which he has preserved along with everything else, would be a tremendous inspiration to Americans. To me it is a little as if St. Francis of Assissi were still living and there were an opportunity to record his life.

I know this would be costly, but I do believe it would be rewarding.

Sincerely yours,

Marquis Childs

My dear Mr. Friendly:

During the past month we have corresponded with Mr. Ed Murrow, relative to the possibility of his making the principal address at a post meeting of Omaha Post No. 1 on Tuesday, April 14th, at which time we are going to salute the flood fighters of both Omaha and Council Bluffs for the splendid job they did in holding back the "Big Muddy" last April.

I realize, as do the members of this Post, the busy schedule you and Mr. Murrow have cut out for yourselves. I realize all too well you have undoubtedly hundreds upon hundreds of requests to appear at different civic functions throughout the country and will understand if you will be unable to help us out during this post meeting.

I received a wire today from Mr. Murrow, in which he advised it would be impossible to be here on the 14th, but he said he would look into the possibility of making a film for our post meeting. Here is what I hope you and Mr. Murrow will be able to do:

Our Commander, Mr. Ephraim Marks, during the program would say that our guest tonight, by means of the magic of film, is Mr. Edward R. Murrow. We, of course, would kill the lights and flash Mr. Murrow on the screen. He would say "thank you, Mr. Marks, and good evening members of Omaha Post No. 1 and their guests". He could say a few words about the work done by the boys of Omaha and Council Bluffs and introduce some of the shots he took here on his "See It Now" program. At the conclusion if we could have a close-up of Mr. Murrow saying it was nice to be with us, etc., it would make the program so far as this office is concerned and I think I speak for every member of this.....The World's Largest Legion Post.

The above suggestion is very, very rough as you no doubt can tell, but that is the general idea of what we would like to have. Any suggestions you may have along this line will be very much appreciated.

My sincerest thanks in advance for whatever you will be able to do for us.

Best regards,

To Serve Those Who Served Their Country Is the No. 1 Aim of Omaha Post No. 1

Every month an average of 700 veterans and veterans' families come to the Service Office of Post No. 1, seeking some sort of aid or counsel. Many of them ask for advice rather than money, but it costs the Post more than $20 thousand a year to handle these eight thousand cases . . . and to maintain a similar service at the Veterans Hospital in Omaha.

War widows face countless problems, which Weber helps to solve.

Post Honor Guard is always available to give military rites to departed comrades.

Burned-out family starts all over again with emergency aid from the Post and the Post Auxiliary.

Christmas baskets for needy families form a big project for Post volunteers.

Cornhusker Boys' and Girls' State at Lincoln attracts the cream of the high school crop. The Americanism program is 100 per cent Legion sponsored.

Early Training Builds Useful Citizens
Post's Youth Program Is Practical Workshop of Americanism

Everyone knows about American Legion Junior Base ball and its great success in Omaha. Fewer know about the Post's sponsorship of Boys' and Girls' County Government, or about Cornhusker Boys' and Girls' State in Lincoln to which the Post sends scores of high school juniors each year. Fewer yet are familiar with the Post's 16 annual School Awards for outstanding young citizenship, or the yearly oratorical contests on the U. S. Constitution which focus so much youthful attention on Americanism.

Fair play and good sportsmanship are integral in Legion ball. Omaha Post sponsored two Little World Series in Omaha. Thousands of Omaha boys participate in Legion ball each year.

An outstanding ROTC cadet proudly receives Legion medal. Omaha Post No. 1 presents scores of medals to outstanding cadets every year.

Fellow Veterans:

Here, in picture and caption, you have the Legion Story for 1953. You can clearly see why you owe it to yourselves as Americans, as veterans of three great wars, and as residents of Omaha, to join with us in the World's Largest — and Greatest — American Legion Post, Omaha Post No. 1.

I'm ex-Army myself, but I always liked the greeting they gave us when we went aboard ship. The Navy boys said, "Glad to have you aboard!"

We hope we will have the opportunity to extend the same greeting to 20,000 of you in 1953.

And I'm sure that if you come with us, you will respond, in Navy style, "GLAD TO BE ABOARD!"

Ephraim L. Marks

Commander, Omaha Post No. 1

Fellow Veterans:

This message is addressed to the 22,000 veterans who are not members of either Omaha Post No. 1 or any of the other fine Legion posts in this area. We are naturally proudest of our own Post, and to be counted among us offers so many advantages that, frankly, I find myself wondering why any of you would want to remain apart.

Is it simply because you have never been approached for membership? If that is the only reason, it is soon remedied. Fill out the enclosed application blank and send us your $4.00!

Is it for a deeper reason, perhaps because you, like myself, do not agree with all of the policies pursued by the American Legion? If that is so, the best and perhaps the only way to remedy this is to join up and be active in Legion affairs and bring about a change in those policies.

We veterans have a tremendous stake in the future of America. The clearest and most respected spokesman for the veterans is the American Legion. It is a democratic organization. You cannot afford to remain outside.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I wish to express my appreciation to you for the fine film sequence on the manufacture of ammunition which appeared on your "See It Now" program on Sunday, April 5.

The business of making ammunition is one not well understood except by a relatively few men who have devoted their lives to it. Certainly the complexity of it is not generally understood by the American public, for it is a business for which there is no civilian counterpart.

Your film sequence served to partially explain this complex industrial process, though I am sorry that time did not permit identification of the firms where the operations were taking place. These are fine companies and deserve a great deal of credit. I believe them to be representative of the many good manufacturers which we have under contract.

Though I realize that this is a difficult story to present through the medium of television in an interesting way, there has always been something heart-warming to me about the way American Industry has turned from making such things as pots and pans, railway cars, and television sets, to strange new items that go into rounds of ammunition.

The photography on your show was excellent, and was of particular interest to me because motion pictures of these processes have seldom been attempted on such a scale, and where attempted have not been done too successfully.

Because these films could be of tremendous value to us for morale and educational purposes, I have asked that inquiry be made as to whether prints might be obtained for these uses, and, if so, on what basis.

When this inquiry reaches you, if it has not done so already, I hope that you will see fit to make them available to us.

Thanks for the kind words. I, too, thought the shot of Ike and Mamie singing was one of the most appealing of the many that we have produced. Incidentally, it was exclusively ours, but I can't ever bring myself to use that word on the air.

We have-- if I do say so and shouldn't-- an unequalled file of film starting with that God-awful day in Abilene and ending with the inauguration. Sometime I shall try to put it all together in sequence and send it down to you. Dear Ed:

Thanks a million for your continuing efforts to recruit additional ground observers. Your program yesterday should contribute directly and substantially to this country's air defense.

Once again Murrow is way out front in helping to make America informed, alert and effective in these times.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I wish to thank you very much for your invitation to spend a day with Sir Gladwyn Jebb and Lord Caldecote as your guest at the Dutchess Valley Rod and Gun Club. I had a most delightful day with fine and successful shooting and enjoyed the very friendly hospitality extended to me by everyone in the club.

I would also like to take this opportunity to tell you how much I appreciated your TV show at 3.30 p.m. Sunday on CBS channel 2 which I followed with great interest. I think I can say it was one of the most interesting hours I have ever spent before my TV set, watching programs on international matters and problems. I would appreciate it very much if you could find an opportunity to convey to all the participating CBS correspondents my sincere appreciation.

Yours sincerely,

Trygve Lie

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It has been my privilege from time to time to view your program, "See It Now", and I have thoroughly enjoyed your consistently excellent, informative and timely presentations.

With particular reference to your show on Sunday, October 26, 1952, I should like to express my appreciation and that of the Department of Defense for the public service you rendered in the presentation on voting by members of the Armed Forces overseas.

The Office of Armed Forces Information and Education has endeavored in every way possible to disseminate voting information to all service personnel and it is felt the various programs have been effective. However, there are, as your program dramatized, several states which either have no provisions or very restrictive provisions for absentee and/or soldier voting. Much progress has been made in our efforts to correct this situation; however, these provisions being wholly under state jurisdiction we can only try to educate the state legislators and hope that in time appropriate legislation will be enacted. It is felt that your pointing up this fact in your program last Sunday will be of great assistance.

The entire presentation was well done and we in the Department are grateful to you.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I would like to express my appreciation for the excellent job you did for the Air Force on your Sunday, 29 July "See It Now" Television show.

Your presentation of the problems and procedures of the Air Force Air Defense Command did much to explain to the public how their air defense is conducted and to stimulate interest in Ground Observer volunteers which we need so badly.

The success of this production must, undoubtedly, also be attributed to the spirit of your staff. The officers in my office who worked with your people tell me Mr. Fred Friendly, Ed Scott, Bill Thompson and many others, worked long hours to make this program a success.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I should like to compliment you and thank you for your very effective presentation on the mission of the Air Defense Command during your "See It Now" program Sunday, June 29th.

I was particularly impressed with your recognition of our urgent need for civilian volunteer ground observers to supplement the defense of our country.

The recruitment of these people to assist this nation in vigilance against enemy aerial attack must be increased three-fold to avert catastrophe in the event of emergency. Public awareness of this need is our primary concern. Since "See It Now" has such a tremendous audience, we feel a long stride has been taken toward that objective.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your excellent presentation of the Air Defense Command GCC problem last Sunday rates high praise in this headquarters.

General LeMay, with whom I watched the show, afterwards remarked about your accurate and intensly interesting approach to the subject.

From a professional standpoint, I can only say that if the efforts I know you put into recording this piece on film are evenly matched by an increase in recruiting of observers, ADC should have people ten deep at all posts.

We at SAC were happy to assist you in our small way.

Thanks for your gracious letter of the 30th. I had hoped we had made the need for additional ground observers clear and intended to give more details, but as you probably saw, we got mixed up with the projector breaking down and I just didn't have time at the end.

The show is off the air for the next nine weeks, but you can count on us to continue to do what we can in this area when we resume operations. Again my thanks for writing as you did.

Dear Ed:

General Clay and I watched with great interest last evening your presentation of the mock Bomber Attack on New York, and we both felt that you did an impressive job. I have, however, one comment which my Civil Defense responsibilities lead me to pass on to you. The need for additional ground observers was clearly implied in the development of the script, but I am afraid that very few viewers, even if sufficiently moved, would have known where ground observers and filter center operators were required or how to go about volunteering for service.

As you know, the Air Force has ordered the activation of the ground observer system effective 14 July and although we, in New York, with over 600 ground observation posts and four filter centers, are completely organized and, I think, more adequately staffed than other states, we are still far short of having sufficient volunteers to man all these posts twenty-four hours a day, day in and day out.

Consequently, if the occasion should arise, you would be doing Civil Defense and the Air Force a great service by spending a half minute or so giving specific directions as to how and where volunteers should enroll.

Again, my sincere congratulations on the excellent job you did.

With best regards,

Sincerely yours,

ADDRESS OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS TO AMERICAN EMBASSY

New Delhi, India, March 17, 1952

Dear Ed Murrow:

Enclosed is a memorandum outlining the Point Four program we are hoping to have in India. It is built around the idea of making India self-sufficient in food in the next four years.

A great part of this increase in food production is to come through a village to village program of agricultural extension work (on the American model), public health work including the elimination of malaria, and adult education. We hope that one-third of India's villages and 120 million of her people can be reached in four years. American aid in each individual project would be limited to a four year period, at the end of which time the area should be fully self-supporting with a substantially higher level of food production.

We are currently carrying on discussions with the representatives of the Government of India on this proposal. Progress has been very good so far and we expect to reach agreement within a few days. We have, of course, made clear at every point that only the U.S. Congress can make the final decision on how much American assistance should be granted to India.

I understand that there has been some talk about sending Bill Costello out here. He is a first class correspondent and can make a tremendous contribution to improving understanding between India and the United States. This is a key place in the free world today and it needs all the coverage it can get. I certainly hope that Bill can come out here.

I hear wonderful things about your television program. I can't tell you how many people in the States told me that it is the one reason they are sure they really should have a television set in their homes. I am sure that your program is going to have a tremendous role in the forthcoming campaign and I very much regret that we won't be able to get to see any of it over here. I wonder how long it will take before that will be possible.

My very best wishes.

Sincerely,

Chester Bowles

This TCA program would be the biggest all out attack on poverty yet attempted on a village to village basis. And yet the cost to us would be less than our economic aid to Greece over a four year period.

I am also enclosing a memo that I prepared for some member of Congress. If you can't come to India – at least give these memos a good look!

My sincere thanks for the recognition which you gave women in the service on your "See It Now" program of February 24. We consider this one of the finest tributes paid to women in uniform since the campaign for additional recruits was initiated in November. Dear Mr. Murrow:

During the past several months, since the inception of "See It Now," your cameramen have shot a great many feet of film in Korea. In our opinion, this footage, together with your commentary, provides some of the most comprehensive and objective coverage of the Korean conflict.

It would be very desirable if a duplicate of this film and tape material could be made available for reproduction and placement in Department of Defense film libraries. It would then be shown in schools and colleges and used for reference and training purposes within the military services.

We would appreciate learning your reaction to our proposal at your convenience.

Attention: Mr. Edward R. Murrow

Gentlemen:

I noted with great interest on your broadcast "See It Now" Sunday, January 20th, the film taken in Korea. Of particular interest was the interview with the returning patrol from the 45th Division, a former National Guard unit. The remarks of the men interviewed indicated very graphically a basic violation which military people have been trying for years to correct in patrol leaders, namely, "bunching up" of key personnel in the platoon.

It would be of untold value if such graphic portrayal could be shown to men currently being trained in the National Guard, and accordingly, I wonder if it would be possible for our unit to procure on a loan basis a copy of that particular film (16 mm if possible) so that we may utilize the lessons so graphically portrayed in the conduct of our own training.

1. The Secretary of the Navy takes pleasure in transmitting to the Commanding Officer, officers and men of the USS SABLEFISH the expressions of appreciation received from Mr. Edward R. Murrow for the cooperation given in the production of televisision program SEE IT NOW.

2. The following extract from Mr. Murrow's letter, which was addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, is quoted for information:

> "I must take this opportunity to tell you of the excellent cooperation the officers and men of the SABLEFISH gave our television crew. From each of our reporters and technicians I received the impression that the conduct, willingness to work at all hours and the general spirit of the SABLEFISH personnel created a strong, new respect for the men of the submarine service and the Navy. I should appreciate any effort you might personally make to acquaint the men of the USS SABLEFISH with our sincere appreciation for their outstanding cooperation under difficult conditions. We are encouraged by our reception on the SABLEFISH to schedule television programs from other Navy ships sometime in the future".

3. The spirit of willingness and cooperation which brings forth such expressions is a source of gratification to the Secretary of the Navy and merits a commendation for all hands concerned.

I was very much interested in Ed Murrow's show yesterday because of the Republican Finance Committee dinner. The material was used very effectively, and I think I voice the sentiments of all concerned when I say we are appreciative.

But what interested me most on the show was the very fine job you and the camera crew did on the coal town. That was an excellent portrayal of the men involved, community life and feeling. It seems to me that it had a lot of the flavor and deep feeling that was contained in the program you and Don Hollenbeck did on the passing of The Sun two years ago. It is my pleasure to enclose a copy of my remarks on the floor of the House under date of June 27, 1951, in response to a recent radio broadcast you gave suggesting the establishment of the VOICE OF AMERICA as an independent agency equipped with highly competent personnel to win public support the world over for the truths that will bring peace and dignity to men.

With all good wishes for your continued success as one of our highly respected radio commentators, I remain an agency of sufficient prestige to cooperate with the State Department, the Army, Navy, Air Force, and other departments in the formulation of a consistent policy that will win congressional support.

George Washington, with an eye to the main chance, organized a propaganda bureau during the Revolutionary War. So important did he consider this effort that he picked men of the stature of Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, and Benjamin Franklin to provide it with winning ideas. They managed to get guerrilla pamphlets behind the British lines, and sold 6,000 Hessian troops on the advisability of deserting.

We need to be reminded that it was politics almost as much as force of arms that won victory in World War I. We drove a wedge between the Kaiser and the German people by dropping leaflets from planes and balloons that reassured the people as to our intentions. "Germany," said General Ludendorff, "failed in the fight of intellects."

When World War II broke out, we did not try to minimize the value of psychological warfare. With encouraging realism, we set up a full-bodied agency under the name Office of War Information, and staffed it with the best minds we could get. That it helped to soften up the enemy's aggressive will is beyond question.

Why is it that in the present crisis that will go on for a long, long time, whether it be hot, cold, or expediently under wraps, that we let communism hold the initiative? Up to now we have not acted but reacted. We dance to their tune, usually waiting for them to call the play before we adopt countermeasures.

All the while we are missing our one big opportunity.

By setting up an iron curtain around his vast heartland, Stalin has admitted his one great fear. It is that the truth reaching through to his own people will encourage them to take matters into their own hands and bring the prison walls of communism down into the dust.

Why do we hesitate?

Is American energy, intelligence, and imagination afraid of itself?

Military, economic, and diplomatic measures do not round out the formula necessary for survival as long as we omit or neglect the compelling duty to contact the Russian people and convince them of the better life outside that is being withheld from them by their masters, of our earnest desire for peace and mutual helpfulness, and of the hard fact the we are rearming only to defend ourselves from the very same tyranny that now enslaves the Russian people.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. GATHINGS. The gentleman is making a very fine speech. I commend him wholeheartedly, especially on that part of the speech in which he stated that we ought to go behind the iron curtain and bring our American ideals to those people who live back behind the curtain, even in Russia.

Mr. LANE. I thank the gentleman from Arkansas for his contribution.

The Soviets use the forum of the United Nations to spread the big lie in the United States, but seal us off from all touch with the Russian people and deny us the opportunity to bring home our factual side of the story to them.

The free exchange of information is as vital to us in our dealings with the peoples of other nations as it is in promoting understanding among groups and individuals here in the United States.

When any government refuses to extend to us the rights that we grant to it, there is but one recourse left. We must deliver the news of our actions and intentions, by every conceivable means, directly to the people of Russia.

For that job the Voice of America needs more money for material, facilities, and skilled personnel.

More than that, it needs the status of an independent agency, with a voice of its own in the shaping of those policies that will win cooperation and friendship for us throughout the world.

Stalin is not scared by the strenuous efforts being made by an aroused United States to rearm itself and its allies. This fits in with his theory that we will suffer an economic breakdown in the process. But it does give him the jitters to think of a revolt by his own people.

In the years from 1921 to 1941, there were more than 30 separate uprisings against the Soviet regime. Although they were poorly organized and soon crushed, they were symptoms of chronic discontent. Even today there are some 15,000,000 Russians in the concentration camps of their own government. It looks like Stalin fears a lot of his comrades.

We cannot win the friendship of the Russian people, or the Chinese people, or any others unless we communicate with them, and the VOA is the one remaining lifeline by which we can reach through to them now and as far as we can see into the uncertain future.

Many others have gambled with their lives to escape the clutch of communism. These people are the ones who can speak for the free Russia that millions of their kin must long for. They can inspire and guide the anti-Communist underground because they speak for Russia and against the oppressors in the Kremlin.

The Voice of America is a light in the dark that beams news to the Russian people past every obstacle that is calculated to keep the people in ignorance. Hour after Mrs. Kasenkina jumped from a window of the Soviet consulate in New York, rather than return to the so-called Communist paradise, word-of-mouth chain reaction to the story was spreading through Russia, thanks to the VOA. Expand this by a continuing stream of facts, and the day will come when the Communist tyranny will be overthrown by the Russian people themselves.

We have the best product in the world to sell to the Russian people. It is the hope of help from the free world to liberate them and give them the opportunity to attain the kind of life that they want —at peace with themselves and their neighbors.

We have the potential apparatus to get this message across to them. We possess all the means and methods if we but use them.

What is stopping us?

The Voice of America is the victim by association of the suspicions which, rightly or wrongly, are directed against the State Department. It also suffers from its junior status because it is not consulted in the shaping of the high-level policy that it is supposed to implement.

Free the Voice of America by making it an independent agency. Give it an appropriation that will permit the use of highly competent personnel to win public support the world over, for the truths that will bring peace and dignity to man.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

When your program about The New York Times came over the air, I was out and missed it. Since then I've been out of the city and haven't had a chance to hear a recording of it until just now.

May I congratulate you on it. I've heard about it from several of my friends, who have all been unanimous in thinking well of it, and I certainly associate myself with their point of view. I thought it was first class. Once again, my congratulations.

Faithfully yours,

I shall show your letter of May 29, to my colleagues who work on HEAR IT NOW. This is high praise indeed. I have read the text of your testimony before the Senators, and you read like a statesman. Your task, as I see it, is as much that of educator as aviator, and I think on this occasion you performed magnificently. Again my best thanks for your generous and gracious comments.

Dear Ed:

The documentary on the B-36 which you included in the April 27th program of your "Hear It Now" series was a truly outstanding contribution to public understanding of the function of this aircraft in the defense of our nation.

Your follow-up program of May 4th in which you paid tribute to the valor of the B-36 crew members who were the unfortunate victims of a mid-air collision was not only the epitome of good taste but displayed a deep understanding of the role our airmen are playing often at very high stakes, in protecting America's security.

On behalf of the men and women of the United States Air Force I would like to express wholehearted appreciation for this latest example of your continued efforts to interpret the mission of the Air Force with authenticity, rare talent, and creative skill.

Sincerely,

I want to drop you a note to apologize for what seems to be neglect or failure to respond to your telegram of November 9th askingfor my opinion on certain matters that are either pending before the Congress now or will be coming session.

I was away from home for a few days immediately following the election and when your telegram reached me, I felt that it would then be out of date to answer.

I did want to acknowledge the telegram, however, and say that if you are in Washington at any time drop in. I think all America is appreciative of the great service you have rendered in charge of news reports for Columbia Broadcasting.

My dear Mr. Murrow:

I deeply appreciate your letter of November 21. You outline a notable project which I think is well worthwhile. I want to help in any way I can. But, frankly, I am afraid it is impossible for you to count upon my personal participation in your broadcast. I am still far from well. My stubborn convalescence still pursues me with aches and pains. Just between us, I do not know what I can do if I return in January as is my fondest aspiration. Certainly I shall be on "limited service" for a while and I know my Doctors will absolutely prohibit any outside activities. Therefore, I would not dare to let you rely upon my personal participation in your program.

I know how well you do these documentary things. I had the pleasure yesterday of listening to the record (which you were good enough to send me) particularly covering the Harding-Coolidge era. It was really wonderful. It reminded me of the fact that I had something to do with initiating the use of direct quotations in radio recordings. You may recall that I had a rather sensational (at the time) radio "debate" with President Roosevelt in the 1936 campaign, in which I let him speak for himself (from other available radio recordings) and then answered him.

I am glad CBS is undertaking the project you describe. My untimely illness has kept me out of the bi-partisan foreign policy debate for more than a year. The opponents have pretty well confused the country on the subject. The President himself has not helped any by his resurrected habit of castigating the "no good 80th Congress" when I was Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He has tried to somewhat discriminate between domestic and foreign policies in this respect; but it has been a feeble discrimination which has left a sadly erroneous impression with the country. Of course I am prejudiced but I think the 80th Congress made the greatest of all records in projecting a new foreign policy for the United States and a new national unity on foreign policy through nearly fifty major issues in which the Committee invariably voted 13-0 with totally unpartisan concept and results. If the 80th Congress was "no good" (without exceptions) then the United Nations and the Greek-Turkey program and the ECA and the Rio Treaty (to mention just a few items) were "no good," - and that isn't just true even in the President's own book. Needless to say, these comments are entirely personal and confidential to you for your own background thinking. They are not quotation or attribution.

C O P Y

I think the greatest libel on our "bi-partisan foreign policy" is the repetitious charge that we Republicans were operating on a rubber stamp "me too" basis, for the Truman Administration. Nothing could be farther from the truth. In every instance we completely explored every project submitted to us (which included no Asiatic projects except in ECA). There was the fullest disclosure to our Committee. We made many criticisms and corrections. I personally practically re-wrote the original ECA legislation. Thus we anticipated most of the hurdles. Thus we had true bi-partisan and unpartisan consideration of these matters. Thus we got our votes of 13-0. There was no "me too" in it. I hasten to add that the State Department and the President fully cooperated in these respects.

In my opinion the great achievement was to create confidence in our foreign policies both at home and abroad. In my opinion there is vital need - greater than ever - to recreate this procedure (expanded to cover all major foreign policy considerations) and this resultant unity. It will be more difficult because our critics have had a lively vocal season. Some of our friends have not helped - as witness the President's "no good" speech and the Secretary's "anti-revisionist" speech. Of course foreign policy must be under constant review and even "revision" if required. There is nothing in true bi-partisan foreign policy which calls for a gag, or which discourages the utmost vigilance on the part of Republicans. In holding the Administration to strict accountability for all of its acts and projects. The grave need is to find a "meeting of minds" which will reassure our own country and the world that our democracy can function in times of crisis. The need is to consult national rather than political destiny.

These are some of the thoughts I would have given you upon this subject in a personal interview, to which you are welcome at any time. I am entirely at your service in any way I can be helpful within the limitations defined above. I shall look forward to your CBS featurewith the deepest interest.

With warm personal regards and best wishes,

How can we impress upon the television broadcasting companies the importance of continuing the United Nations programs? During July and August the Council was presented every day, and many women in my neighborhood alone became regular visitors to view the sessions. It is so important to keep the general public aware of the struggle we are making to keep the peace. I do hope you can pass on to CBS our hopes for a daily program.

Dear Mr. Forrestal:

After careful consideration I am obliged to decline the proposal you made during our very pleasant luncheon last week. I am persuaded that satisfactory significant service could not be performed in a matter of ninety days and my current contractual commitments make it impossible for me to free myself for even so short a period of time.

I am not insensitive to the honor you have done me in suggesting that I work with you. This decision stems from no reluctance to serve my country. Repeatedly during the war I applied to Generals Eisenhower and Donovan for reinstatement of my reserve commission and each time was told that such contribution as I might make to the war effort could best be achieved with a microphone. I hope that the same may be true in these days of uneasy peace.

It is unnecessary to tell you, I am sure, that if I can be of service to you or your staff, either here or in Washington, you have but to command me.

Congratulations upon the very high honor which you have received from the experts of your own craft, in the award of the radio editors to you.

Personally, I regretted the fact that you had left the editorial for the executive field when you came back from your remarkable war reporting abroad. I also welcomed you back on the air for I had missed you. Your analysis last night was particularly strong. It was penetrating and well-balanced. It also displayed vision. I decided to drop you a line this morning, even before I heard the late announcement of the award to you.

At a time when hysteria is sweeping over the country, a steady voice, with high purpose and obvious American spirit, is of the greatest value.

If at any time you are in Washington, do run out and have lunch with me if you can.

Dear Ed Murrow:-

I am glad you are shifting your work, so that we may again hear your carefully chosen words and your well thought out themes. Verbum sapienti:

In time of heavy stress the public mind inclines towards dogma. When the pressure is lessened that mind becomes querulous when it is told what to think; it wants to be informed, not directed.

This is a preamble saying that the broader, more objective you can make your news, the better service you will be rendering.

I think the day of the commentator-- narrow, didactic, pseudo-authoritative - has gone by. The oracle is resented; the informer is welcomed.

I am sure you will do well whatever you are called upon to do.

My warm regard.

1,100 LEADERS OF NATION HONOR EDWARD R. MURROW AT FETE TOMORROW

More than 1,100 of the nation's leaders of thought and action gather tomorrow evening (Tuesday, December 2) to honor Edward R. Murrow, chief of the Columbia Broadcasting System's European correspondents, at a testimonial dinner in the Waldorf Astoria, New York City.

Murrow returned to the United States last Monday (November 24), after a gruelling wartime assignment which kept him at his post in London since February, 1939, and thrice saw him bombed out of offices and apartment in the British capital.

Murrow's first formal and entirely uncensored address since his arrival aboard the liner Excambion from Lisbon is to be broadcast from the banquet scene over the nationwide facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System. Other speakers to be heard on this broadcast (WABC-CBS, 9:30 PM, EST) are: William S. Paley, CBS president; Archibald MacLeish, Librarian of Congress; Toastmaster Elmer Davis, CBS news analyst, and William L. Shirer, author of "Berlin Diary."

Among the distinguished guests are: Lieutenant Governor Charles Poletti, of New York; James L. Fly, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission; Alfred E. Smith, the Most Rev. J. Francis A. McIntyre, Chancellor of the Archidiocese of New York; Acting Mayor Newbold Morris, Paul B. West, president of the National Association of Manufacturers; Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press; Joseph V. Connolly, president of the International News Service and King Features Syndicate; Hugh Baillie, president of the United Press, and Robert Sherwood, playwright.

To save America from the Communist Conspiracy —

DON'T PATRONIZE REDS!!!

This Tract tells how YOU can do it!

In 1947, in a speech in Hollywood, Myron C. Fagan, famous Playright-Director-Producer, charged that the REDS had acquired absolute control of Hollywood and Broadway — and transformed our Stage, Screen and Radio into the Communist Conspiracy's most effective Fifth Column in America . . . that the RED Stars, Directors, Writers and Producers of Hollywood were the chief supporters, financial and otherwise, of Communist propaganda in America . . . that many films made by the Hollywood REDS were being used by Moscow in Asia, Africa and throughout the world to create hatred of America and Americans . . . that other films were made to craftily glorify COMMUNISM and ONE-WORLD-

ISM . . . and still other films that deliberately created dissensions and hatreds between Negroes and Whites, between North and South, between Minority Groups and Americans.

That speech startled the nation. The Hollywood Moguls frantically denied everything. That brought the House Un-American Activities Committee into action. Their Hearings in Hollywood and Washington fully confirmed all the (Fagan) charges against the industry and all the named Stars — and sent the notorious "Hollywood Ten" to jail. That ROCKED the nation! The people, infuriated, began to "blacklist" the theatres showing those REDS and the Red Films. Panic swept through the entire industry—it chased Charlie Chaplin out of the country—it drove SCORES of other REDS off the Screen . . . and, far more important, it closed THOUSANDS of theatres!

THAT did the job! . . . it hit the Moguls in their most vulnerable spot: their pocketbook! — and all their "'righteous" denials changed to piteous pleas for forgiveness. They piously promised that "never again would they employ any REDS" — that "never again would they produce RED-propaganda films" and for a time they seemingly kept their promises—they even barred all tainted Stars from "Oscar" honors.

But actually they were merely waiting for the people to forget. And even while "waiting" they were scheming and conniving how to keep those REDS "alive" — and finally bring them back into public favor . . . they continued to employ RED writers, (even the "Hollywood Ten") under fictitious names . . . they secretly financed pictures made in Europe by banished American REDS . . . other RED Stars were "taken care of" in Broadway plays . . . then, as it grew in stature and importance, TELEVISION became their greatest sanctuary!

And, tragically, the people did begin to "forget". And, gradually, the Marches, the Robinsons, the Milestones and all the other REDS began to creep back into Hollywood . . .

Mr. Eduard R. Murrow
New York City, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow;

I am a six grade teacher in the Portland system and one of my students brought the inclosed article to class for current events. Needless to say the class was very disturbed when they saw what they considered their favorite actors and actresses on the list. I was very much surprised when I saw your name and also that of Chet Huntley.
Todays school children are very much aware of what Communism is and have very definate feelings concerning it. When they see names like Danny Kaye and others on such a list what are they to believe?
I would like to reassure these children and know that others who read these pamphlets know the truth.

Any information I receive from you will be read to the children. I am sure you realize that no answer at all would indicate to these children, and to others who read the pamphlet, that the information it contains is true. I sincerely hope you can restore some of the shattered faith these children have for their necessary heros. We all anxiously await your reply.

Sincerely,
G Robert Stockmann

1. INTRODUCTION

Events of recent years have made it obvious that there is no foolproof way of detecting a Communist. The Communist individual is no longer a "type" exemplified by the bearded and coarse revolutionary with time bomb in briefcase. U.S. Communists come from all walks of life, profess all faiths and exercise all trades and professions. In addition, the Communist Party, USA, has made concerted efforts to go underground for the purpose of infiltration.

If there is no foolproof system in spotting a Communist, there are, fortunately, indications that may give him away. These indications are often subtle but always present, for the Communist, by reason of his "faith" must act and talk along certain lines.

The following chapters contain some of these indications which may help in recognizing as such the individual who belongs to the Communist Party as well as the sympathizer and fellow-traveler of all shades.

2. THE "COMMUNIST LANGUAGE"

In LENIN's writings, there are repeated references to the "Aesopian Language" which he assertedly used to evade arrest and punishment as a revolutionary under the tsarist regime. The term is derived from AESOP, famed fabulist of ancient Greece, who attempted to hide the contemporary significance of his fables by satirizing animals rather than human beings. In LENIN's case, the term described the method of "writing in hints" in order to fool the censors. Ever since 1917, Communists in all countries have taken up and practiced the art of "Aesopian Language" and, wherever possible, have refined it.

Through this process of refinement, Communists in the United States have developed what might be called a "Communist Language." It is not defined in dictionaries or taught in schools but can be of considerable help in identifying a Communist. The two distinguishing marks of this language are sentence structure and vocabulary.

The Communist's eternal preoccupation with Marxist theory appears to prod him to constant imitation of Marxist style at its most involved. This imitation is not limited to purely political discussions or writings and finds its way into the Communist's private life. Here are some sample sentences taken at random from Communist publications:

"The American go-getters counted on getting these resources into their clutches and exploiting them in the grand colonial manner, by taking advantage of the weakness of the tsarist government and the venality of the tsarist officials."

"If we stand at the brink of destruction, we also stand at the brink of something else, at the brink of a new dawn, in which the human race, in all of its complex and fascinating difference, will come to the conclusion that it must live in a peaceful brotherhood that will include this multitude of difference."

"It is rejection of finality, rejection of the idea of knowing the truth, rather than seeking it; it is the elasticity and experimentalism that come with this which, ..., is at the heart of the finest American tradition, is the essence of true radicalism."

While a certain heaviness of style and preference for long sentences is common to most Communist writings, a distinct vocabulary provides the second and more easily recognized feature of the "Communist Language."

Even a superficial reading of an article written by a Communist or a conversation with one will probably reveal the use of some of the following expressions:

integrative thinking	hoolinganism
vanguard	ruling class
comrade	demagogy
hootenanny	dialectical
chauvinism	witch-hunt
book-burning	reactionary
syncretistic faith	exploitation
bourgeois-nationalism	oppressive
jingoism	materialist
colonialism	progressive

This list, selected at random, could be extended almost indefinitely. While all of the above expressions are part of the English language, their use by Communists is infinitely more frequent than by the general public.

In speaking of a "Communist Language" it must be clearly understood that the use of certain terms and structures can never constitute proof of a charge as serious as subversion. Nevertheless, since the distinguishing marks of that language are in fact part of the American Communist's life, they might well be considered as a danger signal.

3. THE "COMMUNIST RELIGION"

The proverbial devotion to the "cause" found in most hard-core Communists and many sympathizers is more than merely an intellectual response to an idea. The case of the ROSENBERG atom spies and the appearance of numerous Communists before Federal and State Committees show that most of these men will sacrifice their careers and families and some their lives if required by Party discipline.

While it is generally believed that Communists are atheists as a result of their political indoctrination, it appears likely that many find in Marxist philosophy a substitute for religion in which they had previously lost faith. William R. KINTNER writes in his book "The Front is Everywhere:"

> "Communism has become a faith to warlike men cut adrift from certainty in an unbelieving world. The faith appeal of Communism has important implications. It should lead us to reject the notion that all Communists are crackpots, although many of them may be."

Once the Communist has accepted his new faith, he rejects all others as a rule, and his attitude toward organized religion becomes one of hostility. Nevertheless, when speaking or writing for the public, he will usually pretend to be indifferent rather than hostile. William Z. FOSTER, National Chairman of the CP, USA, recently wrote in a Communist publication:

> "I find that the dialectical materialist viewpoint fully satisfies me in meeting the everyday problems of life, as well as in confronting the perspective of eventual natural dissolution by death. In my outlook on life there is no place for religion."

The tell-tale signs of this "Communist Religion" are not easy to detect. There is, above all, a rigidity in views insofar as they pertain to the Communist doctrine. This is not to say that the Communist lacks persuasiveness or variety of expression. It does mean, however, that he will stubbornly cling to the "line" even when proven wrong in debate. The Communist has implicit faith in Marxist philosophy and in the truth of the "line" as transmitted from Moscow. Because of this faith, he cannot and will not give ground when challenged on basic Marxist issues or political pronouncements made by his leaders. The possibility of compromising on these issues is utterly beyond his comprehension.

Frequently, the Communist's slavish adherence to Moscow edicts becomes absurd. A classic illustration is the "Daily Worker" edition of 23 August 1939. On this day, when the USSR concluded a non-aggression pact with Nazi-Germany, the Communist newspaper's columns were filled with denunciations of "Hitlerian barbarism." On the very next day, after receiving the news of the pact, the "Daily Worker" spoke glowingly of Hitler's "peaceful intentions" and sharply condemned those "imperialistic jackals," Great Britain and France. There is no indication in this and many other cases that the frequent changes in the "line" evoke any doubt or even wonder in the minds of U.S. Communists.

His "religion," then, can give away the Communist. His naive and unquestioning acceptance of the "line," his refusal to accept criticisms are excellent indications. Last but not least, the Communist feels a strong compulsion to spread his "faith" and can frequently be spotted by his never-ceasing attempts at conversion of others.

4. THE COMMUNIST'S LOGIC

The Communist's logic is a natural product of his "religion" which has been discussed in the preceding chapter. His peculiar logic is based on a rigid mind which serves merely as a storehouse for pre-conceived and pre-digested ideas.

This logic is diametrically opposed to our own. Thus, the Communist refers to the iron curtain police states as "democracies", and any defensive move on the part of the Western powers is condemned as "aggression." The Communist thus builds for himself a topsy-turvy world with a completely distorted set of values. For this reason, it is practically impossible to win an argument with a hard-core Communist. For one thing, he is trained to accept unquestioningly the ready-made views disseminated through the national party organization. In addition, the Communist mind cannot and will not engage in a detached examination of ideas. Talking to a Communist about his own ideas, then, is like listening to a phonograph record. His answers will invariably follow a definite pattern because he can never admit, even hypothetically, that the basis for his ideas may not be sound. This attitude is typical not only for the individual but also on a national scale. Western protests against incidents provoked by Communist nations invariably meet with the same stereotype answer asserting that the complainants are completely wrong while they, the Communists, are just as completely right. This answer is final and no arguments are permitted so far as the Communists are concerned.

The Communist, then, is not really "logical." The finality of his arguments and the completeness of his condemnation marks him clearly, whether as a speaker, a writer or a conversation partner.

5. THE COMMUNIST'S APPROACH TO OTHERS

The fact that the Communist has a very rigid set of values has a profound influence on his approach to others, whether as an individual or as a member of a group. For this reason, it is possible to some extent to predict and generalize Communist techniques.

In general, two aspects of Communist tactics are plainly distinguishable. Excessive condemnation is one. The Communist, when criticizing, goes all out in condemning a situation, an idea, or an individual. He will not admit to a single good aspect of anything which has been selected as a target by virtue of the "line." This procedure is in sharp contrast to non-Communist critics who frequently realize that admission of "good" points only increases the weight of their arguments against others. The hard-core Communist, then, denounces ALL of the U.S.' foreign policy, ALL of a piece of legislation or ALL members of an organization which he dislikes.

Another general Communist principle is the customary procedure of seizing on any, even the most insignificant occurence or issue to create uncertainty and unrest. Thus, the arrest of a Negro (for perfectly legitimate reasons) has given rise to an organization against "police brutality," and a case of a suspended college professor (for lawful reasons) has provoked well organized propaganda campaigns, charging "suppression of academic freedom."

In addition to these very general principles common to Communist tactics, a number of specific issues have been part of the Communist arsenal for a long period of time. These issues are raised not only by Communist appeals to the public but also by the individual Party member or sympathizer who is a product of his Communist environment. They include:

"McCarthyism"
Violation of Civil Rights
Racial or religious discrimination
Immigration laws
Anti-subversive legislation
Any legislation concerning labor unions
The military budget
"Peace"

While showing standard opposition to certain standard issues, the U.S. Communist has traditionally identified himself with certain activities in the hope of furthering his ultimate purposes. Such hobbies as "folk dancing" and "folk music" have been traditionally allied with the Communist movement in the United States. Groups of Communists and sympathizers have been formed for the express purpose of following these hobbies. The reason for their choice is not altogether an attempt to hide political activities. The Communist's fondness for everything that comes from "the people" is not an entirely theoretical preference and has found expression in his everyday life. Most Communists are likely to show preference for group activities rather than such bourgeois forms of recreation as ballroom dancing.

In discussing the Communist's tactics, a mention of outright Communist propaganda is indicated. The Communist knows well that a direct approach would most likely meet with hostility among a population alert to the Communist danger. Consequently, the direct approach has largely been abandoned in favor of bringing up issues which have no direct bearing on Communist philosophy. The Communist correctly assumes that this procedure makes it extremely difficult to differentiate between Communist and non-Communist inspired arguments.

6. THE COMMUNIST'S AFFILIATIONS

Communism as a social philosophy becomes meaningful only when practiced in groups. The individual Communist, "security-conscious" as he may be, will at one time or another engage in group activities. The nature of the groups with which he affiliates can then serve as a good indication of his own convictions.

The Communist Party itself has largely gone underground. Meetings therefore have definite characteristics. Only a very few members, sometimes not more than three or four, assemble at one time. Meeting places are street corners, automobiles, private homes and even public places such as restaurants, department stores and railroad terminals. In all cases secrecy to avoid detection by law enforcement agencies is the primary concern of all who attend the meetings.

Both CP members and sympathizers who are not Party members frequently belong to one or more organizations referred to as "Communist Fronts"." Some of these have been declared subversive by the U.S. Attorney General under Executive Order 10450 or cited by Congressional Committees. Many others carry on their work of disseminating the CP line without that stigma. Generally speaking, it is well to be wary of those organizations which stand for wholesale condemnation of the U.S. Government, a legitimate political party, or groups of individuals. Communist fronts have consistently shown preference for such issues as "Civil Rights," anti-subversive legislation and restrictions on immigration. In addition, these groups frequently seize on any controversial subject from fluoridation of drinking water to "police brutality" in order to promote their nefarious schemes.

Membership in one or more of such organizations is another danger signal. It is to be noted that many of these groups spring up spontaneously and go out of business after a comparatively short time only to make room for others.

7. CONCLUSION

A study such as this can lead to only one certain conclusion: There is no sure-fire way of spotting a Communist. Certain criteria, some of which were discussed above, provide clues in determining an individual's political leanings. They never provide proof.

It is obvious, then, that the job of "spotting a Communist" is a highly responsible one. The principal difficulty involved is the distinction between the person who merely dissents in the good old American tradition and the one who condemns for the purpose of abolishing that tradition.

In attempting to find the answer to the question: "Is this man a Communist?" a checklist such as this can prove helpful, although in itself it cannot provide the answer:

Does the individual use unusual language? ("Communist Language")

Does he stubbornly cling to Marxist ideals without being willing to question them?

Does he condemn our American institutions and praise those of Communist countries?

Does he pick on any, even the most insignificant occurences in this country for his criticism?

Is he secretive about certain of his contacts?

Does he belong to groups exploiting controversial subjects?

Above all, the approach to the problem of discovering Communists must be detached and completely free from prejudice. Using some of the clues mentioned in this study in connection with a factual approach provides the best system at present of spotting a Communist.

Dear Ed:

Half Century of Struggle Against Marxism

Who are the Czechoslovak National Socialists?

Half Century of Struggle Against Marxism

WHO ARE THE CZECHOSLOVAK NATIONAL SOCIALISTS?

Published by the Executive Committee of the
Czechoslovak National Socialist Party

NEITHER MARXIST NOR NAZI.

Czechoslovak National Socialists have nothing in common with either Nazism or Marxism. The party was founded in 1897 under the name of the National Labor Party. In 1898 the name was changed to the National Social Party and again in 1920 to the Czechoslovak National Socialist Party.

It was Hitler who used the same name and abused it. The Czechoslovak National Socialists always fought Hitler.

Nor have they anything in common with those who, under the name of the Czechoslovak Socialist Party, are collaborating with the Communists in Czechoslovakia at the present time.

True adherents of the Czechoslovak National Socialist Party are steadfast in their underground struggle against the Communists and their stooges, and have already made great sacrifices in property, liberty, and life in the cause of democracy.

Those Czechoslovak National Socialists who managed to escape from captive Czechoslovakia can and do fight freely and openly for the resurrection of freedom and democracy in Czechoslovakia.

Ceaseless attacks on the representatives of these Czechoslovak National Socialists in exile by the Communist regime in Czechoslovakia best serve to prove that this fight is effective.

WHO ARE THE CZECHOSLOVAK NATIONAL SOCIALISTS?

When an American asks a Czechoslovak political exile to explain the program of the Czechoslovak National Socialist Party, the exile can give several realistic illustrations.

He can tell, for instance, how Hitler cried to the world in 1938 "Entweder Herr Beneš oder Ich" (Either Beneš or I). Eduard Beneš, then President of Czechoslovakia, had been Vice-President of the Czechoslovak National Socialists until 1936, and was co-author of the party program. When Hitler occupied Czechoslovakia in 1938, previous membership in the "Beneš-Partei" was sufficient reason for arrest by the Gestapo. In fact, the Nazis found the National Socialist program obnoxious enough to execute 2,400 party members and to place 10,000 others in concentration camps.

Or the exile can relate how the Communists seized the office and printing shops of the Czechoslovak National Socialists three days before the February 1948 putsch. All along the Communists had tried to weaken the party's influence by depriving thousands of National Socialists of their jobs and offices. Loyalty to the party program has cost many members their lives. Even before the death of Jan Masaryk, the miner Herod, a National Socialist, fell or was pushed from a window of the Ostrava police station and was killed. Another National Socialist, a member of the Cabinet, Minister of Justice Prokop Drtina, was seriously injured by a fall from his window in an attempt to commit suicide.

On the list of National Socialist heroes belong the names of Milada Horáková, a national martyr, who was executed by the Communists; Member of Parliament Jaroš and trainman Zajíček. Nor is possible to forget the martyrdom of František Loubal and that of many others now in Communist uranium mines, concentration camps and prisons.

The National Socialist Party continues to be a nuisance and threat to all Czech and Slovak fascists, to these "pathological dregs," as President Masaryk so aptly called them in 1927—a threat, too, to the various separatists and to the Nazis among the transferred Germans. Because the party is a source of threat to these people, Peter Zenkl, Chairman of the Party, Hubert Ripka, former member of the Government, and other National Socialists are continually denounced before the American authorities. This goes on in spite of the fact that, ever since 1945, Zenkl is considered enemy No. 1 by the Communists who attack him and his party ceaselessly in the Czechoslovak press and radio.

This brochure is addressed to those interested in the history of the party and in the National Socialist program.

FOR A CZECH STATE AGAINST MARXISM

The National Socialist Party was founded in 1897 by Czech workingmen, who stated in the very first sentence of their program: "We want to live in freedom both as members of the working class and as a nation." Another sentence was directed against the national and political oppression of the Hapsburg monarchy: "We want the Czech nation to live as an independent and equal member among the European nations, not as a downtrodden nation languishing in bondage."

The party was founded in opposition to the Marxist policy of the Czech Social Democrats, who were dependent, ideologically and politically, on the German Social Democrats of Austria. The Czechs living in Austria-Hungary could never forget that they had once had an independent state. Since the nineteenth century they had struggled, first against Hapsburg centralism and then against Austro-Hungarian dualism, to assert their state rights. The Czech Social Democratic Party, until 1897 the sole representative of the Czech working class, was ruled by the Viennese Central Committee of the Austrian Social-Democratic Party. It fell under the influence of the Austro-German party members and gave up the program for state rights. The National Socialist Party was founded in protest to this situation. The National Socialist workingmen even then realized that the Hapsburg monarchy, and Austria-Hungary as well, had forsaken the cause for which they had come into being and that the Czech nation must look to safeguarding its existence outside the confines of the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

The first program of the Czechoslovak National Socialists of 1898 was an expression of certain aims rather than of a dogma. It showed the feeling and ideas of the Czech workingmen in that it was clearly anti-Marxist and national. It has remained so to this day. It is absurd if the reactionary and especially the fascist groups, in an attempt to hide a pro-Nazi past behind a false and chauvinistic front, point out the "socialist" character of the National Socialist Party. The genuine patriotism of the National Socialists has always stood in the way of these groups. Even more paradoxical are certain Social Demcrats who, taking advantage of uninformed Americans, pose as mild social reformers and proclaim that the National Socialists are radically opposed to private ownership.

THE IDEALS OF THE FRENCH AND AMERICAN REVOLUTION AGAINST FEUDALISM

Ever since its new form in 1902, the National Socialist program has stood clearly for national self-determination. The National Socialists were proud and grateful to the United States of America when at the close of World War I, largely due to President Woodrow Wilson, self- determination of nations became the spiritual heritage of civilized man.

The National Socialist program had as its aim the resurrection of the Czech State with full legislative powers. As early as 1905, Františka Zeminová, Vice-Chairman of the Party, spoke publicly of an independent Czechoslovak Republic. (Later, in the days of the Republic, she was elected to Parliament as a National Socialist; recently she has been condemned to prison by the Communists).

Prior to World War I, the antimilitarism of the National Socialist Party weakened considerably the war machine of the Hapsburg monarchy and consequently the Prussian military potential. In this way it contributed to the victory of the Western democracies; moreover, thousands of party members fought in the foreign legions, alongside the Allies, in France, Italy and Siberia.

As mentioned earlier, opposition to the Marxist theory of inevitable class warfare has always been the main tenet of the National Socialist Party since its beginnings in 1897. In its early life, the party checked the disruptive anti-national and anti-humanitarian tendencies of Marxism in the Czech working class by establishing, in 1903, its own trade union headquarters — the Czechoslovak Workingmen's Trade Union—whose basic principles were very similar to the corresponding American. The National Socialist Union headquarters was suppressed by Hitler in 1939. After the war, the Communists with the left-wing of the Social Democrats prevented the re-establishment of this trade union.

The Czech National Socialists have worked for over fifty years in organizing and educating the citizens of Czechoslovakia, especially the working class. It is no exaggeration to say that this party is in large part responsible for the failure of Nazism in Czechoslovakia, and likewise for the failure of Communism to this day. Moreover, Communism can never take permanent possession of Czechoslovakia. The National Socialists have kept alive in the hearts of the common people the tradition of humanitarian democracy and the ideals of the French and American revolutions.

FOR CONSTRUCTIVE WORK AGAINST RADICALISM

In reviewing the work and achievements of the National Socialist Party in the years 1918 to 1938, it can be seen that the party, formerly a radical opposition party, committed itself wholly to the constructive state policies of Presidents T. G. Masaryk and Eduard Beneš. In the interest of peace in Europe and that of cooperation within the League of Nations, it never permitted itself to be provoked by other parties to national radicalism.

Until the coming of Hitler, the Czechoslovak Republic had no serious conflict with the Weimar Republic of Germany. The National Socialist Party was responsible in no small measure for a policy of peace. It supported President Masaryk when, in view of national, chiefly German minorities, he wisely recommended that the Czech and Slovak language be considered the official, but not the state language.

It was the chairman of the formerly anti-militaristic National Socialist Party who, nevertheless, became the Republic's first Minister of National Defense; the army organized by him, together with the Sokol volunteers, drove back Béla Kun's Communist invasion of Slovakia and thereby checked the expansion of postwar communism in Central Europe. This formerly radical party willingly served T. G. Masaryk's humanitarian ideals and worked toward religious tolerance. With the support of this political party Eduard Beneš, then Minister of Foreign Affairs, negotiated in 1928 a modus vivendi with the Vatican, despite the fact that only a few years earlier "Away from Rome" had been the party's revolutionary motto expressing the program of the first Czechoslovak Government viz., to separate the church from the state.

The party rejected radical nationalism and likewise refused to follow the social radicalism spread by the Communists. When the Communist Party was established in 1920 following the split in the Social Democratic Party, the National Socialists might have profited from this split. They directed their efforts, however, toward consolidating the disorganized Social Democratic Party. As a consequence, they suffered a loss in the elections. For the National Socialists, the welfare of the state, not party aggrandizement, was the prime consideration, and in support of its ideals the party sacrificed its own interests to stem the growth of the Communist Party.

FOR FREEDOM AGAINST HITLER

During the occupation the Czechoslovak National Socialists were foremost in the struggle against the Nazis. The present chairman of the party, Peter Zenkl, was one of the first to be arrested; like thousands of other members of his party, he was held prisoner for six years in Nazi concentration camps, until liberated by the American Army. Abroad, in the London Government in exile and in the State Council, members of the party played an important part; Hubert Ripka directed the entire propaganda and participated in every diplomatic negotiation of importance. Thousands of rank and file members voluntarily joined the Czechoslovak Foreign Army and the Allied Armies to fight in the Middle East and in France. At home, the National Socialists were strongly represented in the non-Communist underground, in which Vladimír Krajina played an important part. For instance, their regular secret information service, transmitted by radio, was given full recognition by Winston Churchill and Lord Vansittart for its importance to the Allied Supreme Command.

The toll of Czechoslovak National Socialists in the struggle against Nazism was heavy. More than 10,000 party members were held prisoner in Nazi prisons and concentration camps; 2,400 members were executed, among them Member of Parliament Františka Plamínková, one of the co-founders of the International Council of Women. Of the twelve members of the Board of Directors only three survived, two of whom had spent the entire war in concentration camp. Of the ten women members of party headquarters, four were executed. When the Prague uprising took place in 1945, Otakar Machotka, a National Socialist, was the Vice-President of the National Council of the Revolution leading the uprising.

The Communists made it practically impossible after 1945 to evaluate the part played by non-Communists in the national struggle against Nazism. It is clear, nevertheless, that the Czechoslovak National Socialists have always stood in the front ranks in the liberation of their country. Proof of this is the fact that as soon as they were free of the Nazi oppressor, they took on the struggle for the preservation of democracy against Communist dictatorship. This explains why there are more National Socialists among the political exiles than members of any other party and why the National Socialists at home are subjected to a most cruel Communist persecution.

FOR DEMOCRACY AGAINST STALIN

The roots of Czechoslovak postwar difficulties go back to the period of Munich in 1938, to Teheran in 1943, and to Yalta in 1945. Another factor was that Prague had been "liberated" by the Red Army, with the American forces standing nearby. In May 1945, President Beneš and his London Government returned from London to Prague via Moscow, not via Paris, and as a result, the so-called Košice Government and the Košice Program were forced upon Czechoslovakia by Moscow.

From the beginning of the struggle, the National Socialists stood clearly on the side of freedom. Minister Jaroslav Stránský, a National Socialist, resisted the Moscow dictate to the Czechoslovak Government until the very end of the negotiations. As early as May 28, 1945, with the Red Army still in the land, National Socialist Youth, 100,000 strong, manifested their will at a public demonstration in Prague. This anti-Communist demonstration gave new courage to the citizens, frightened by the atrocities of the Red Army. It was a signal to arms in the battle against the Communists.

The political situation being what it was, there was nothing left for the National Socialist Party but to join the National Front formed in Moscow. Since the working and lower middle classes asked that all Socialists stand together, the party entered the so-called Socialistic bloc. The life of this political bloc, however, lasted for one meeting only, as the National Socialists were quick to see through the Communist ruse and by their abstention made its further existence impossible. It should be pointed out, moreover, that Peter Zenkl and Hubert Ripka, who are now attacked with particular vehemence, were not present at the negotiations of the Košice Program, either in Moscow or in Košice.

The results of the 1946 elections, in which the Communists polled 38% of the votes, were in no way the fault of the National Socialists. In fact, these results came as a very disagreeable surprise, especially in the villages. Despite terrorization and the concerted attack of the Communists, the National Socialist Party received 18.02% of the total vote, that is, 1,290,000, becoming thereby the strongest anti-Communist party in Czechoslovakia.

How the Communists felt about the National Socialists is best illustrated by the plot framed in September 1947 by Alexej Čepička, the present Communist Minister of National Defense. Besides Jan Masaryk, he singled out two other victims for assassination, two National Socialists—Peter Zenkl and Minister Prokop Drtina. The chairman of the Communist Party, Klement Gottwald, best described the course of action of the National Socialists between 1945 and 1948 when he said in November 1947: "The leaders of the National Socialists actually ask to be judged by their fellow members not only by what they have accomplished in the government but by what they have prevented. In other words, they are blocking us deliberately."

Communist Minister Vlado Clementis expressed his party's feelings even more pointedly in 1949: "The non-Communists accepted the Košice program with reluctance. They could not oppose the program openly unless they knowingly were willing to commit suicide. What they could not do openly, however, they did secretly; they weakened and loosened our bonds of alliance with the Soviet Union and bound us by political and economic agreements to the West, which, to them, was their real ally. Their representatives in the government made use of every opportunity to worsen our relations with the Soviet Union."

For this policy the National Socialists are now being attacked by those whose only contribution to the struggle at the time was silence. The National Socialist Party never gave up the idea of alliance with the West, to which Czechoslovakia has always been bound culturally and politically. The party did its best to promote close ties with both East and West, in the spirit of the public declarations of American and British statesmen at that time.

The National Socialists never did reconcile themselves to communism; on the contrary, they repudiated communism completely. It was the National Socialist Party which impeded Communist forces and undermined Communist positions, until the day the enemy finally took complete control under the shadow of Soviet bayonets in February 1948.

At the jubilee party convention in 1947, the chairman, outlining its program, stressed that the party would pursue a democratic course in the Czechoslovak tradition, according to the teachings of Thomas Masaryk.

Although years have elapsed and new situations have arisen since the 1947 party convention, there are not many principles requiring change. Obviously in the international field, policies are formed on the basis of existing conditions; yet, throughout, the policies of the National Socialist Party have been—and are—in accord with those of the Western powers. The present fate of all states behind the Iron Curtain raises the question as to whether there were any other means of saving democracy. Each of the states tried its own way and each succumbed.

The program adopted at the party's jubilee convention of 1947 was the program of a democracy, not of pseudo-socialistic totalitarianism. From the ideas of the French Revolution the party stressed the word "fraternité" in contrast to the communist motto of class warfare. It was a program of evolution, not a dogmatic program of force. It was, above all, a program which placed the national idea and the pluralistic economic system first. Both ideas were planned to serve humanitarian democracy.

FOR THE LIBERATION OF THE NATION AGAINST COMMUNISM AT HOME AND ABROAD

Two days before the Communist putsch in 1948, the chairman of the Communist Party Gottwald declared, "On the basis of bitter experience I cannot trust—and here I shall name one person—Zenkl; I cannot be with him in the Cabinet. And logically, I cannot be in the Cabinet with anyone whom Zenkl would trust."

To this day the Czechoslovak National Socialists in exile are the chief target of Communist assaults, while the National Socialists at home are the victims of the worst kind of Communist terror. Plain figures tell the cruel story:

In the last election in 1947, there were twenty-six members on the Board of Directors. One of these members died and one has failed the party by collaborating with the Communists. Of the remaining twenty-four members eight were or still are, in prison; eleven are in exile (Political Secretary Julius Firt, Ivan Herben, Ota Hora, Secretary General Vladimír Krajina, Deputy Chairman Alois Lysý, Otakar Machotka, Růžena Pelantová, Hubert Ripka, Deputy Chairman Jaroslav Stránský, Peter Zenkl, Jarmila Batková-Žáčková). Nothing has been heard of the last five members. This means that at least 80 percent of the Board members have been persecuted by the Communists.

Of the fifty-five National Socialists who were Members of Parliament, one died, eighteen are in exile, and nineteen are in prison. Two members of Parliament, Milada Horáková and Alois Jaroš, were executed. Thus of the fifty-five Members of Parliament thirty-nine, or 75 percent are victims of Communist persecution. As of today, fifty-five Members of Parliament from all non-Communist parties have escaped from the country. Of these, eighteen, the largest number from any party, are National Socialists.

It is not possible to ascertain exactly how many National Socialists have escaped from Czechoslovakia. According to the questionnaire of the Council of Free Czechoslovakia in 1951, Czechoslovak exiles in the area surveyed were divided among the different political parties as follows:

Czechoslovak National Socialists	62.3%
Czechoslovak Social Democrats	13.3%
Czechoslovak People's (Catholic) Party	13.7%
Czechoslovak Agrarians	1.7%
Czechoslovak National Democrats	1.0%
Czechoslovak Businessmen's Party	1.2%
Slovak Democrats	4.1%

From these figures it is apparent that the Czechoslovak National Socialists are numerically the strongest component of the exile. They do not, however, ask for privileges or advantages on the strength of this numerical preponderance though they are fully aware of the responsibility devolving from the fact. Nonetheless, the party members would be justified if they were to complain of the undeserved and unfair criticism and the denunciations heaped upon them.

In the spirit of our tradition, outlined here in brief, the Czechoslovak National Socialists in exile wish no better than to perform faithfully their duties in the struggle against Communism and to work for the early and complete liberation of the people of Czechoslovakia.

REDS CALL ANNIE LEE MOSS A RED

'Victim' of McCarthy Is Still Employed by The Pentagon

By EDWARD J. MOWERY
(In the Newark, N. J. "Star Ledger")

Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, who denied under oath at the tempestuous 1954 Army-McCarthy hearings that she was a Communist, was revealed last week to have been exactly that—a dues-paying Communist Party member, then entrusted with classified messages in the sensitive Pentagon coderoom.

This revelation was contained in a Sept. 19 report of the Subversive Activities control Board and made available to Alice Widener, publisher of the weekly "U.S.A." magazine.

The report, based upon a rehearing of the Moss case on orders of the U. S. Court of Appeals (to examine pertinent F.B.I. files), disclosed that testimony before the Senate Permanent Investigations Subcommittee by Mrs. Mary Markward (who put the finger on Mrs. Moss) has been completely substantiated.

No Plans to Fire Her

A Pentagon spokesman said that Mrs. Moss will remain on duty in her clerical accounting job in the Chief of Finance office and there are no plans to remove her.

Mrs. Markward, a veteran undercover F.B.I. agent who joined the Communist Party, traced Mrs. Moss' Communist activity back to 1944. Mrs. Moss, after the hearings, was hailed as a victim of Congressional witch-hunters and featured in articles and one C.B.S. telecast as a kind of martyr.

The Subversive Activities Control Board's rehearing and findings are a direct result of a Supreme Court decision to make F.B.I. confidential files available to an accused subversive.

The Communist Party has been fighting efforts of the Attorney General to require it to register as a subversive organization for years and has carried the case to the Supreme Court three times. In the Moss case the Communist Party appeared in the role of respondent, attacking testimony of Mrs. Markward against Mrs. Moss as perjurious.

However, when the F.B.I. records confirmed Mrs. Markward, the ruse backfired and Mrs. Moss was tagged as a Red by the Communist Party's own records.

In its belated report the board said those records gave the lie to Mrs. Moss who repeatedly denied she belonged to the Red conspiracy.

Reds Charged Perjury

"Mrs. Markward's F.B.I. reports being 12 in number," the report declared, "corroborate (her) testimony in the Moss security hearing. The situation that has resulted . . . is that the party's own records and the authenticity of which it (Communist Party) does not dispute . . . show that Annie Lee Moss, 72 R St., S.W., Washington, was a party member.

"Yet the Communist Party on several occasions charged that witness Markward committed perjury . . ."

Immediate repercussions of the board's report, which was issued as a "recommended decision" of member Francis A. Cherry, are certain to bring into new light the Army's screening policies for security risks and the possibility of a perjury indictment against Mrs. Moss.

Testimony in the Moss case during the '54 Senate hearings disclosed that Mrs. Moss' Communist background was known (via F.B.I. reports) to the Civil Service Commission, the Army and various "loyalty" boards long before she was identified as a Red in open Senate hearings.

In her testimony on March 31, 1954, Mrs. Markward said she became a key official of the Communist Party in Washington, knew all the Communists in that area and, as membership director of the party, knew the name of Annie Lee Moss as a dues-paying member.

Her reports to the F.B.I. continuously revealed the activities, names and addresses of party members. And to dispel any doubt that there was more than one Annie Lee Moss involved, Roy M. Cohn, subcommittee chief council, told the Senators: "There is only one Annie Lee Moss F.B.I. file, and only one Annie Lee Moss Department of Justice file."

Cleared in 1948

Despite the available background on Mrs. Moss, the testimony showed she was "cleared" by the loyalty board in '48, her case was post-audited by the Loyalty Review Board in '49, and she was transferred to the office of the Signal Corps' chief signal officer on Dec. 15, 1950.

On Jan. 21, 1951, at a new "loyalty" hearing, she was rated "eligible" for the sensitive Pentagon post of receiving and transmitting coded or cleared text messages "from stations all over the world."

The messages "originated overseas" or came from the State Department, Army Security Agency, Central Intelligence Agency, General Staff, etc. And it was developed that the coding involved classified material.

F.B.I. Director J. Edgar Hoover, whose warnings concerned Mrs. Moss were ignored by the various security agencies, needled them consistently to take action. Mr. Cohn told the subcommittee:

"Our information is that on Sept. 11, 1951, J. Edgar Hoover sent a memorandum to the Army and Civil Service.

The message said, "We have been advised that you have found this Annie Lee Moss to be loyal and are allowing her to continue on this job. We wish to call your attention to the fact that Mrs. Markward . . . is now available to come forward and testify."

Loyalty Board, Army Indifferent

An F.B.I. report to the commission was formally submitted 16 days later. The commission merely referred the vital report to the Army on Nov. 24, 1951.

Sen. John L. McClellan (D.-Ark.), a subcommittee member, remarked:

"The loyalty board did not review it (the F.B.I. material) or take any further action, but merely referred it to the Army, which took no action. And she is still in the service."

Mrs. Markward, her testimony disclosed, was ready to document her allegations against Mrs. Moss in formal testimony at any loyalty hearings. They ignored her. She testified only before the House Un-American Activities Committee.

At another point in the subcommittee hearings, Sen. McClellan commented:

"Any of these persons (Moss, etc.) whom Mrs. Markward named today as members of the Communist Party, have been known to the F.B.I. . . . to the head of any agency who now have such a person in their employ. They did know it and were warned of their Communist connections."

In lengthy testimony, Mrs. Moss denied:

She was ever a Communist Party member, ever seeing a Communist Party card, ever attending a Communist Party meeting or paying dues, or ever talking to a Communist. She never heard of Karl Marx.

Symington Stand

Sen. Stuart Symington (D-Miss.), a committee member and former secretary of the Air Force, accepted the Moss testimony. He said:

"Mrs. Moss . . . I may be sticking by neck out and I may be wrong . . . but I have been listening to you testify the truth. If you are not taken back into the Army (employment), you come around and see me, and I'm going to see that you get a job."

Mrs. Moss, suspended by the Army on Feb. 25, 1954, was reinstated March 29, again suspended on Aug. 4 and rehired by the Army in the Fall of '55 for a "non-sensitive" job.

She is STILL on the Army payroll.

"Dear" Ed,

What do you have to say about this your phony b—?

After you read the enclosed article, if you do, please forward it to Sanctimonious Stu Symington, as I my sense he'd be embarrassed

CAPITOL REPORT . . . . . By FULTON LEWIS, JR.

TO EDW. R. MURROW

McCarthy Was Correct

WASHINGTON — Another chapter in that period of American history characterized by liberal historians as the "Reign of Terror" has come to a close. And once again it ends with the conclusion that the late Senator Joe McCarthy was correct, and those who screamed "witch-hunt" and "smear" were wrong.

In February and March of 1954, Senator McCarthy's investigating committee, headed by chief counsel Roy Cohn, conducted hearings in Washington and Fort Monmouth, N. J., on subversion in the Army Signal Corps. It was a sensational investigation, complete with the Fifth Amendment witnesses who clammed up when asked whether or not they were committing espionage for the Soviet Union.

J. E. HOOVER

In Washington, the committee questioned a frail Negro woman by the name of Annie Lee Moss. She was a Pentagon employe, decoding and transmitting classified messages from the State Department, the CIA, the Army Security Agency and the General Staff regularly.

When Senate investigators began checking Mrs. Moss' background they noticed she had had more than her share of loyalty screenings and hearings. And she had passed all her "screen tests" before Truman loyalty boards with flying colors.

Mrs. Moss had passed her loyalty checks, however, despite numerous warnings from FBI chief J. Edgar Hoover. He told the security agencies in question that a former FBI undercover agent, Mrs. Helen Markward, knew Annie Lee Moss to be a card-carrying Communist while Mrs. Markward was a high-ranking Party official in Washington. None of the agencies heeded Mr. Hoover's warnings. None called Mrs. Markward for testimony about Annie Lee Moss.

McCARTHY'S COMMITTEE did call Mrs. Markward. In a dramatic open session she named Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, under oath, as a dues-paying Communist.

And when Mrs. Moss denied that she was a Red, that was enough for America's liberals. Obviously, they declared, she wasn't a Communist. That she had denied, and that was enough proof for them.

The liberals had been hunting for a martyr for a long time. There had been other Reds exposed by McCarthy, and the hysterical carrying-on about McCarthy's "threats to the American way of life" hadn't impressed the people. Annie Lee Moss became their martyr.

MRS. MOSS WAS A WOMAN, "persecuted" by a powerful U. S. Senator. She claimed she was innocent, which necessarily made her so. And she was a Negro, although nobody could possibly have called Joe McCarthy anti-Negro.

Edward R. Murrow did his share by devoting a whole TV show to Annie Lee Moss, proving that she was a simple woman being "destroyed by McCarthyism." The New York Post jumped into the fray by running a feature story on McCarthy's "latest victim," depicting her as a very religious woman with Bibles all over her home and a "God Bless Our Home" sign on the wall.

The Daily Worker picked up the ball by denouncing Mrs. Markward as a "perjurer" and a "paid informer." To the Worker and to the liberal press there was never a chance that it was Mrs. Moss who was the perjurer.

BUT McCARTHY HAS NOW been vindicated. Based on official Communist Party membership rolls, the Subversive Activities Control Board has issued a report which declares that Annie Lee Moss was a card-carrying dues-paying member of the Communist conspiracy.

In March of 1954 Wayne Morse and Stuart Symington and Hubert Humphrey ranted and raved in unison about McCarthyism and Annie Lee Moss. But following the Subversive Activities Control Board's report they are strangely silent.

They all refuse comment.

Oppenheimer Record Speaks for Itself

By Fulton Lewis Jr.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.

THE wail of the anti-anti-Communist propagandists about the urgency of restoring their hero, Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, to scientific sainthood, so he can mastermind the outer-space program, has its noxious moments.

The cliches about "Mr. Atom" are becoming threadbare. And when Max Ascoli, in the Christmas edition of his Reporter magazine, says that Oppenheimer is to be compared with Jesus Christ, reason seems to be a little out of hand.

FULTON LEWIS JR.

Fortunately, President Eisenhower is not impressed. So far as he is concerned, he says, the Oppenheimer case is settled and an issue of the past. There is not the slightest move to bring him back into government service.

Chairman Lewis Strauss says the Atomic Energy Commission will consider any new evidence that may be developed, but so far he has heard of none.

In the light of the martyr propaganda, it seems appropriate to review and catalog some of the evidence already on hand on the little doctor. For those who seek to deify him, I present some of the incontrovertible facts from the sworn record:

For many years, he contributed money to the Communist Party.

His ties with Communists continued AFTER the Nazi-Soviet Pact and the Soviet attack on Finland.

Communist Links

His wife and younger brother and later his mistress were all Communists.

Virtually all of his close friends of record—friends of his own choice—were Communists.

Except for professional affiliations, all of the organizations of record to which he belonged were Communist organizations.

Most of the people he recruited for service in the wartime atomic energy project in Berkeley were Communists.

Most of the people he later recruited for service at the Los Alamos atomic bomb plant in New Mexico, were Communists.

Outside of the activities of the atomic project, he was instrumental in recruiting members for the Communist cause.

Over a period of many years, he was in frequent contact with Soviet espionage agents.

He repeatedly gave false information to Gen. Leslie Groves, the overall head of the wartime atomic operation, known as the Manhattan Project.

During the same period he repeatedly gave false information to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

His Stand on H-Bomb

He was a vigorous supporter of the hydrogen bomb program up until the day the first atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima (August 6, 1945) at which time he personally urged all senior scientists in the field to refuse to do any further H-bomb development.

He was active in persuading military development and research authorities and the Atomic Energy Commission to suspend H-bomb developments beginning mid-1946, and to keep them in suspension until it was discovered that the Russians were ahead in the same field.

Yet, says his fawning claque, this is the same man who must be inducted into the competitive contest with Russia for outer space.

Mr, Morrow,

How can you expect any of us to have anything but contempt and disgust for you when all you have in your heart for this Commie Oppenheimer is love and admiration?. How doyyour justify your attitude for the Pinko' and all the Unamericans?. Why don't you clarify this issue some night and hold a Person to Person broadcast with yourselfon both ends. Answer these pertinent questions. The Communist Chinese have killed 15 000 000 subjects. So stated Mr. Lodge in the U N. The Russian Commies slaughtered 3 000 honorable men in the Katyn Forest in Poland. Vorisholov murdered 1100 Loyal Officers during the revolution after they laid down their arms at his guarantee to return these men to the their famalies and homes. You are considered a Pinko, How can you born of Christian parents hold anything but revulsion and hatred for these Atheiests?.

An American

Who Promoted Moss?

In one of his principal battles against the Communist enemy entrenched in our official and public life, Senator McCarthy vainly sought to determine who promoted Fifth-Amendment Communist Irving Peress. His search was not one of recrimination against the soldier but because he suspected the promotion was another instance of what a Senate committee called the interlocking subversion going on behind-the-scenes in our government. It has been disclosed that hidden Reds and left-wingers promoted one another, vouched for one another, recommended one another for important assignments and endorsed each other's work.

Another target of the late Senator's investigations, on similar grounds, was Annie Lee Moss, identified Communist. When he had her before his Permanent Investigations Subcommittee, Sen. McCarthy asserted, "I do not think this witness herself is of any great importance, but the thing that is important to us far beyond this witness is this: who in the military, knowing that this lady was a Communist, promoted her from a waitress to a code clerk." He said that while he could understand how she might join the Communist Party, thinking she was doing the right thing, "infinitely more important to the issue would be who kept her on and promoted her."

As told on another page in this issue Mrs. Moss became a martyr in the eyes of liberals and do-gooders who sprang to her defense. Senator Symington, proving himself a good judge of his own actions, said that while he "may be sticking his neck out" the identified Communist could have a job with him if she was fired by the Army. Edward R. Murrow Saw That Now was the time to interview this forlorn object of McCarthy's ravings and devoted thousands of dollars of TV time to make her out as an innocent victim of Red-baiting. The rest of the liberal coterie joined the pack already baying at the Senator's heels.

Now we find that besides the two witnesses who called her a Communist before the Committee the Party's own records carry Mrs. Moss as a member. It is also disclosed that she is still working for the Army, though in a "non-sensitive" position, following the thinking of the Supreme Court that a civil servant in a non-classified job is ipso facto no security risk. J. Edgar Hoover, the Nation's top Red hunter, feels quite differently about the matter. In "Masters of Deceit," he warns that "The United States is strategic spy target number one for the Soviets. Every effort is being made to penetrate our defenses. The Soviets are interested in literally everything. Any person who believes that espionage means securing only military information is unacquainted with the nature of 20th-Century spying."

The folly of the situation is that while General Arthur Trudeau, Army chief of missile research and development, declares much Soviet progress in the scientific field is due to espionage, that "we are a Country that is highly penetrated" by spies, the same Pentagon that agrees with him still carries on its payroll a person whom the Reds admit is a Party member.

Who promoted Moss?

Dear Sir

I am enclosing a clipping from a recent News editorial which may enlighten you somewhat.

Some time ago you went all out for Mrs Moss in your "See it Now" program. You had your nose so hard you should have put up the person's record which was available at the time. Now, when you fellow Fuzzies and Egg shell heads are going to understand what these people are. They are tied to you and to the Congressional Committee and you actually or at least pretended to believe that she was victimized. You would do far better if you would leave the Cause of Americanism and the Cause of Communism America now needs and will need in the future good men to fight her Cause, but I doubt if you would be of any value then you had Communism and then its adherents would out and leave you holding the bag. Hitler does then get you.

If you were half as true to the Cause of America as you are to the Cause of Communism you would not be out on a Bond at present

Truly

MR. MURROW'S SECRETS

Palatine, Jan. 20—Edward R. Murrow says he will go to jail rather than give the names of the lawbreakers who gave him his sex story.

Isn't this the same Ed Murrow who was so horrified when Wisconsin's Sen. McCarthy refused to give the name of an informant?

Of course the senator's informant was an anti-Communist. Murrow's are purveyors of sex. It seems to make a difference.

J. W. M.

If you aren't a Communist, you are certainly being used by the Communist party.

WHO GETS DIRTIED?

The propriety and good taste of a radio "report" called "The Business of Sex" have occasioned some comment. This was offered last Monday night over facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting system with Mr. Edward R. Murrow supplying the continuity. It was rebroadcast the following evening.

The unpleasant purpose of this program was to suggest that prostitutes play an important role in the world of business. Interviews with a series of anonymous voices purporting to speak for call girls, madams, and business men implanted the idea that feminine companionship is often provided by companies to help sell merchandise.

Murrow stated that prostitutes who were interviewed said that they were often kept on retainers running to thousands of dollars, that their incomes might range up to $25,000 a year, paid by big corporations, and that their assignments brought them "in contact with the highest levels of business."

All this was dressed up as a social and economic documentary "recommended for adult listening only" and with a clergyman to offer appropriate observations.

While it might seem that the obvious purpose of a program of this nature was to capitalize on pruriency, a question or two about the ultimate intention may be in order. Specifically, who was hurt? Prostitutes and their purveyors obviously have no reputation to lose, especially when they are cloaked in anonymity and presented as disembodied voices.

But business, and especially big business, which was singled out by particular reference, stands to suffer damage as an economic entity. It is somewhat curious that a smear of this kind should materialize at a time when Sen. Kefauver and various other New Dealers are busy trying to work up a case against big business.

Nor is there any opportunity to offer a defense. No big corporation is going to buy time on the air to say, "None of our executives operate in this way, either providing or accepting opportunities of immorality." When the deputy police commissioner of New York called upon Mr. Murrow for information which might serve to clean up the conditions the broadcast purported to disclose, the commentator took refuge in the contention that he had pledged anonymity to his informants. Not long ago the United Nations summarily dismissed a headquarters officer who adopted that same position for the laudable purpose of protecting the families of Hungarian refugees who had testified to communist atrocities in the suppression of the revolt in Hungary.

Mr. Murrow does not choose to put up or shut up. He is satisfied with promoting an indiscriminate smear against the business community and offering nothing to support it. Would he consider equal time to show that the same sort of sex bribery might influence union bosses or politicians? Somehow we doubt it.

Mr. Murrow is a "liberal" of the left, of a type admired by Americans for Democratic Action. Some of his more conspicuous television shows were dedicated to defaming the late Sen. McCarthy for his anti-communist activities, defending Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer after he had been denied loyalty clearance by the Atomic Energy commission, attacking the McCarran-Walter immigration act, and defending Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, a government worker, who was portrayed as a "victim" of McCarthy. Just a couple of months ago federal loyalty review authorities conceded that Mrs. Moss had been, as McCarthy said, a Communist, but Mr. Murrow did not correct the allegations he had made four years earlier.

We doubt if the Murrow show was intended as a contribution to sociological understanding. Until some proof is offered to support its representations, we shall regard it as political propaganda.

Board Proves McCarthy Right in Probe Charge

By Fulton Lewis Jr.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.

ANOTHER chapter in that period of American history characterized by liberal historians as the "Reign of Terror" has come to a close. And once again it ends with the conclusion that the late Senator Joe McCarthy was correct, and those who screamed "witch-hunt" and "smear" were wrong.

In February and March of 1954, Senator McCarthy's investigating committee conducted hearings in Washington and Fort Monmouth, N.J. on subversion in the Army Signal Corps. It was a sensational investigation, complete with the Fifth Amendment witnesses who clammed up when asked whether or not they were committing espionage for the Soviet Union.

FULTON LEWIS JR.

In Washington, the Committee questioned a frail Negro woman by the name of Annie Lee Moss. She was a Pentagon employee, decoding and transmitting classified messages from the State Department, the CIA, the Army Security Agency and the General Staff regularly.

When Senate investigators began checking Mrs. Moss' background they noticed she had had more than her share of loyalty screenings and hearings.

Mrs. Moss passed her loyalty checks, however, despite numerous warnings from FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover. He told the security agencies in question that a former FBI undercover agent, Mrs. Helen Markward, knew Annie Lee Moss to be a card-carrying Communist while Mrs. Markward was a high-ranking Party official in Washington.

McCarthy's Committee called Mrs. Markward, and she named Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, under oath, as a dues-paying Communist.

Liberals Open Fire

When Mrs. Moss denied that she was a Red, that was enough for America's liberals. Obviously, they declared, she wasn't a Communist. That she had denied, and that was enough proof for them.

Edward R. Murrow devoted a whole TV show to Annie Lee Moss, proving that she was a simple woman being "destroyed by McCarthyism." The New York Post jumped into the fray by running a feature story on McCarthy's "latest victim," depicting her as a very religious woman with Bibles all over her home and a "God Bless Our Home" sign on the wall.

The Daily Worker picked up the ball by denouncing Mrs. Markward as a "perjurer" and a "paid informer."

Vindication in Report

But McCarthy has now been vindicated. Based on official Communist Party membership rolls, the Subversive Activities Control Board has issued a report which declares that Annie Lee Moss was a card-carrying dues-paying member of the Communist conspiracy.

In March of 1954 Wayne Morse and Stuart Symington and Hubert Humphrey ranted and raved in unison about McCarthyism and Annie Lee Moss. But following the Subversive Activities Control Board's report they are strangely silent.

They all refuse comment.

Dear Ward:

I should like to make a contribution of $2500, check enclosed, to Help, Inc.

If the directors of Help, Inc. share my view that a study detailing how the communists took over Czechoslovakia has merit, I would like to suggest that a preliminary grant in the amount of $2500 be made to Dr. Petr Zenkl, formerly Lord Mayor of Prague and Deputy Prime Minister of Czechoslovakia at the time the communists took over that country. Should the directors of Help require details regarding this project, I should be glad to supply them.

You will appreciate that this contribution is in no way contingent upon the directors' decision to make a grant to Dr. Zenkl. His address is 2651 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.

Sincerely yours,

Ward

Dear Ed

Thanks for your contribution of $2500 to Help Inc.

The Directors meet next week - and I will put before them your suggestion for a grant to help fight Communism. I do know their sympathy to the idea - and I will tell them of your opinion that this project is a practical help at a cost within our means.

I'll advise you of the results.

Subject: Communism

I have been greatly impressed in the last couple of weeks with the number of officials, both military and civilian, in Washington and in Europe, who are studying the classical literature of Communism. They are doing so in an effort to assess both Russian policy and Russian motivation. They have concluded (belatedly) that there is no better way of informing themselves as to the real wellsprings from which Communist propaganda, policy and action flow.

American radio has made only sporadic and rather superficial efforts to explain what Communist doctrine is—the nature of the basic philosophy. Most of those efforts (the one by NBC about a year ago and the recent documentary by ABC) have been second-hand and synthetic and dealt with what others have said, written or thought on the subject.

I would like to suggest that we give serious consideration to a series on Communism which would be confined primarily to an examination of the works of Marx, Lenin and Stalin, supplemented by excerpts from current Russian text-books and periodicals. I am persuaded that somehow such a series could be done without producing unfavorable listener reaction, and that if done with great care based upon impeccable research, (which could be done without difficulty) would render a real public service in the field of adult education and would be recognized as such.

THE CASE OF LIEUTENANT MILO RADULOVICH

ARGUMENT IN INDIANAPOLIS

✓ A REPORT ON SENATOR JOSEPH R. McCARTHY

ANNIE LEE MOSS BEFORE THE McCARTHY COMMITTEE

SENATOR McCARTHY'S REPLY

5 C-10 Mr. Thomas

SEE IT NOW with EDWARD R. MURROW - MARCH 9,1954

MURROW: Good evening. Tonight SEE IT NOW devotes its entire half hour to a report on Senator Joseph R. McCarthy told mainly in his own words and pictures. But first ALCOA would like you to meet a man who has been with them for 50 years.

(COMMERCIAL)

MURROW: Because a report on Senator McCarthy is by definition controversial we want to say exactly what we mean to say and I request your permission to read from the script whatever remarks Murrow and Friendly may make. If the Senator believes we have done violence to his words or pictures and desires to speak, to answer himself, an opportunity will be afforded him on this program. Our working thesis tonight is this question.

"If this fight against Communism is made a fight between ~~against~~ America's two great political parties the American people know that one of these parties will be destroyed and the Republic cannot endure very long as a one party system."

We applaud that statement and we think Senator McCarthy ought to. He said it, 17 months ago in Milwaukee.

MC CARTHY: The American people realize this cannot be made a fight between America's two great political parties. If this fight against Communism is made a fight between America's two great political parties the American people know that one of those parties will be destroyed and the Republic cannot endure very long as a one party system.

MURROW: Thus on February 4th,1954, Senator Mc Carthy spoke of one party's treason. This was at Charleston, West Virginia where there were no cameras running. It was recorded on tape.

MC CARTHY: The issue between the Republicans and Democrats is clearly drawn. It has been deliberately drawn by those who have been in charge of 20 years of treason. The hard fact is - the hard fact is that those who wear the label, those who wear the label Democrat wear it with the stain of a historic betrayal.

MURROW: 17 months ago Candidate Eisenhower met Senator McCarthy in Green Bay, Wisconsin and he laid down the ground rules on how he would meet Communism if elected.

EISENHOWER: This is a pledge I make. If I am charged by you people to be the responsible head of the Executive Department it will be my initial responsibility to see that subversion, disloyalty, is kept out of the Executive Department. We will always appreciate and welcome Congressional investigation but the responsibility will rest squarely on the shoulders of the Executive and I hold that there are ample powers in the government to get rid of these people if the Executive Department is really concerned in doing it. We can do it with absolute assurance.

(APPLAUSE)

This is America's principle; Trial by jury, of the innocent until proved guilty, and I expect to stand to do it.

MURROW: That same night in Milwaukee, Senator McCarthy stated what he would do if the General was elected.

MC CARTHY: I spent about a half hour with the General last night. While I can't -- while I can't report that we agreed entirely on everything -- I can report that when I left that meeting with the General, I had the same feeling as when I went in, and that is that he is a great American, and will make a great President, an outstanding President. But I want to tell you tonight, tell the American people as long as I represent you and the rest of the American people in the Senate, I shall continue to call them as I see them regardless of who happens to be President.

MURROW: November 24th, 1953.

MC CARTHY: A few days ago I read that President Eisenhower expressed the hope that by election time in 1954 the subject of Communism would be a dead and forgotten issue. The raw, harsh unpleasant fact is that Communism is an issue and will be an issue in 1954.

MURROW: On one thing the Senator has been consistent... Often operating as a one-man committee, he has traveled far, interviewed many, terrorized some, accused civilian and military leaders of the past administration of a great conspiracy to turn the country over to Communism, investigated and substantially demoralized the present State Department, made varying charges, of espionage at Fort Monmouth. (The Army says it has been unable to find anything relating to espionage there.) He has interrogated a varied assortment of what he calls "Fifth Amendment Communists." Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont said of McCarthy today;

"He dons war paint; he goes into his war dance; he emits his war whoops; he goes forth to battle and proudly returns with the scalp of a pink Army dentist."

Other critics have accused the Senator of using the bull whip and smear. There was a time two years ago when the Senator and his friends said he had been smeared and bull whipped.

MR. KEEFE: You would sometimes think to hear the quartet that call themselves "Operation Truth" damning Joe McCarthy and resorting to the vilest smears I have ever heard. Well, this is the answer, and if I could express it in what is in my heart right now, I would do it in terms of the poet who once said:

Ah 'tis but a dainty flower I bring you,
Yes, 'tis but a violet, glistening with dew,
But still in its heart there lies beauties concealed
So in our heart our love for you lies unrevealed.

MC CARTHY: You know, I used to pride myself on the idea that I was a bit tough, especially over the past 18 or 19 months when we have been kicked around and bull whipped and damned. I didn't think that I could be touched very deeply. But tonight, frankly, my cup and my heart is so full I can't talk to you.

MURROW: But in Philadelphia, on Washington's Birthday, 1954, his heart was so full he could talk. He reviewed some of the General Zwicker testimony and proved he hadn't abused him.

MCCARTHY: Nothing is more serious than a traitor to this country in the Communist conspiracy. Question: Do you think stealing $50 is more serious than being a traitor to the country and a part of the Communist conspiracy?
Answer: That, sir, was not my decision.

Shall we go on to that for a while? I hate to impose on your time. I just got two pages. This is the abuse which is... the real meat of abuse, this is the Official reporter's record of the hearing. After he said he wouldn't remove that General from the Army who cleared Communists, I said: "Then General, you should be removed from any Command. Any man who has been given the honor of being promoted to General, and who says,'I will protect another general who protects Communists,' is not fit to wear that uniform, General."

(APPLAUSE)

"I think it is a tremendous disgrace to the Army to have to bring these facts before the public but I intend to give it to the public, General, I have a duty to do that. I intend to repeat to the press exactly what you said so that you can know that and be back here to hear it, General."

And wait 'til you hear the bleeding hearts scream and cry about our methods of trying to drag the truth from those who know, or should know, who covered up a Fifth Amendment Communist Major. But they say, 'Oh, it's all right to uncover them but don't get rough doing it, McCarthy.'

MURROW: But two days later, Secretary Stevens and the Senator had lunch, agreed on a memorandum of understanding, disagreed on what the small type said.

STEVENS: I shall never accede to the abuse of Army personnel under any circumstance including committee hearings. I shall not accede to them being brow beaten or humiliated. In the light of those assurances although I did not propose cancellation of the hearing, I acceded to it. If it had not been for these assurances, I would never have entered into any agreement whatsoever.

MURROW: Then President Eisenhower issued a statement that his advisers thought censored the Senator, but the Senator saw it as another victory, called the entire Zwicker case "a tempest in a teapot."

MC CARTHY: If a stupid, arrogant or witless man in a position of power appears before our Committee and is found aiding the Communist Party, he will be exposed. The fact that he might be a General places him in no special class as far as I am concerned. Apparently --apparently, the President and I now agree on the necessity of getting rid of Communists. We apparently disagree only on how we should handle those who protect Communists. When the shouting and the tumult dies the American people and the President will realize that this unprecedented mud slinging against the Committee by the extreme left wing elements of press and radio were caused solely because another Fifth Amendment Communist was finally dug out of the dark recesses and exposed to the public view.

MURROW: Senator McCarthy claims that only the left wing press criticized him on the Zwicker case. Of the 50 large circulation newspapers in the country, these are the left wing papers that criticized. These are the ones which supported him. The ratio is about three to one against the Senator. Now let us look at some of these left wing papers that criticized the Senator.

The Chicago Tribune; McCarthy will better serve his cause if he learns to distinguish the role of investigator from the role of avenging angel.

The New York Times; The unwarranted interference of a demagogue - a domestic Munich.

The Times Herald, Washington: Senator McCarthy's behavior towards Zwicker is not justified.

Then Herald Tribune of New York: McCarthyism involves assault on Republican assets.

Milwaukee Journal: The line must be drawn and defended or McCarthy will become the government.

The Evening Star of Washington: It was a bad day for everyone who resents and detests the bully boy tactics which Senator McCarthy often employs.

The New York World Telegram: Bamboozling, bludgeoning, distorting.

St. Louis Post Dispatch: Unscroupulous bullying. What tragic irony - the President's advisers keep him from doing what ever decent instinct must command him to do.

That is the ratio from three to one of the left wing press.

There was one other interesting quote on the Zwicker controversy, and it came from the Senator himself.

MCCARTHY: May I say that I was extremely shocked when I heard that Secretary Stevens told two Army officers they had to take part in the cover up of those who promoted and coddled Communists. As I read his statement, I thought of that quotation "On what meat doth this, our Caesar, feed?"

MURROW: And upon what meat does Sen. McCarthy feed? Two of the staples of his diet are the investigations (protected by immunity) and the half truth. We herewith sumbit samples of both. First, the half truth. This was an attack on Adlai Stevenson at the end of the '52 campaign. President Eisenhower, it must be said, had no prior knowledge of it.

MCCARTHY: I perform this unpleasant task because the American people are entitled to have the coldly documented history of this man who says he wants to be your President. But Strangely, Alger--I mean Adlai...but let's move on to another part of the jigsaw puzzle. While you may think that there can be no connection between the debonair Democrat candidate and a dilapidated Massachusetts barn, I want to show you a picture of this barn and explain the connection. Here is the outside of the barn. Give me the picture of the inside of the barn. Here is the outside of the barn at Lee, Mass. It looks as though it couldn't house a farmer's cow or goat. Here's the inside. (Showing picture) A beautiful, panelled conference room with maps of the Soviet Union. What way does Stevenson tie up with that?

My -my investigators went out and took pictures of the barn after we had been tipped off what was in it. Tipped off that there was in this barn all the missing documents from the Communist front-IPR. The IPR which was named by the McCarran Committee- named before the McCarran Committee as a coverup for Communist espionage. Let's take a look at the photostat of the document taken from the Massachusetts barn. One of those documents which was never supposed to see the light of day. Rather interesting it is. This is a document which shows that Alger Hiss and Frank Coe recommended Adlai Stevenson to the Mount Tremblant Conference which was called for the purpose of establishing foreign policy--post-war policy in Asia. As you know, Alger Hiss is a convicted traitor, Frank Coe is a man who has been named under oath before the Congressional Committee seven times as a member of the Communist Party. Why, why Hiss and Coe find that Adlai Stevenson is the man they want representing them at this conference? I don't know. Perhaps Adlai knows.

MURROW: But Sen. McCarthy didn't permit his audience to hear the entire paragraph. This is the official record of the McCarran hearings and anyone could have bought it for two dollars. Quote: "Another possibility for the Mount Tremblant Conferences on Asia is someone from Knox' office or Stimson's office." (Frank Knox was our wartime Secretary of the Navy; Henry Stimson our Secretary of the Army, both distinguished Republicans) Coe and Hiss mentioned Adlai Stevenson, one of Knox' special assistants and Harvey Bundy, former Assistant Secretary of State under Hoover, and now assistant to Stimson because of their jobs.

We read from this documented record not in defense of Mr. Stevenson, but in defense of truth. Specifically, Mr. Stevenson's identification with that red barn was no more, no less than that of Knox, Stimson, or Bundy. It should be stated that Mr. Stevenson was once a member of the Institute of Pacific Relations. But so were such other loyal Americans as Sen. Ferguson, John Foster Dulles, Paul Hoffman, Henry Luce, and Herbert F. Hoover. Their association carries with it no guilt, and that barn has nothing to do with any of them.

Now a sample investigation. The witness was Reed Harris, for many years a civil servant in the State Department directing the information service. Harris was accused of helping the Communistic cause by curtailing some broadcasts to Israel. Sen. McCarthy summoned him and questioned him about a book he had written in 1932.

MCCARTHY: Mr. Reed Harris, your name is Reed Harris? ANSWER: That's right.

MCCARTHY: You wrote a book in '32, is that correct? ANSWER: Yes, I wrote a book and as I testified in executive session --

MCCARTHY: At the time you wrote the book--pardon me, go ahead, I'm sorry, proceed.

ANSWER: --at the time I wrote the book the atmosphere in the universities of the United States was greatly affected by the great depression then in existence, the attitudes of students, the attitudes of the general public were considerably different than they are at this moment, and for one thing there certainly was no awareness to the degree that there is today of the way the Communist Party works.

MCCARTHY: You attended Columbia University in the early thirties, is that right.

ANSWER: I did, Mr. Chairman.

fad

MC CARTHY: Will you speak a little louder, sir?
Answer: I did, Mr. Chairman.

MC CARTHY: And you were expelled from Columbia?
Answer: I was suspended. from classes on April 1, 1932. I was later reinstated and I resigned from the University.

MC CARTHY: You resigned from the University. Did the Civil Liberties Union provide you with an attorney at that time?
Answer: I had many offers of attorneys and one of those was from the American Civil Liberties Union, yes.

MC CARTHY: The question is did the Civil Liberties Union supply you with an attorney?
Answer: They did supply an attorney.

MC CARTHY The answer is yes?
Answer: The answer is yes.

MC CARTHY: You know the Civil Liberties Union has been listed as a front for and doing the work of the Communist Party?
Answer: Mr. Chairman this was 1932.

MC CARTHY I know it was 1932, Do you know they since have been listed as a front for and doing the work of the Communist Party?
Answer: I do not know that they have been listed so, sir.

MC CARTHY You don't know they have been listed?
Answer: I have heard that mentioned or read that mentioned.

MC CARTHY You wrote a book in 1932. I'm going to ask you again at the time you wrote this book did you feel that professors should be given the right to teach sophomores that marriage "should be cast off of our civilization as antiquated and stupid religious phenomena?" Was that your feeling at that time?
Answer: My feeling was that professors should have the right to express their considered opinions on any subject whatever they were, sir.

MCCARTHY: I'm going to ask you this question again. ANSWER: That includes that quotation, they should have the right to teach anything that came to their mind as being a proper thing to teach.

MCCARTHY: I'm going to make you answer this. ANSWER: I'll answer yes, but you put an implication on it and you feature this particular point out of the book which of course is quite out of context, does not give a proper impression of the book as a whole. The American public doesn't get an honest impression of even that book bad as it is, from what you are quoting from it.

MCCARTHY: Then let's continue to read your own writings. ANSWER: 21 years ago again.

MCCARTHY: Yes, we shall try and bring you down to date if we can.

ANSWER: Mr. Chairman, two weeks ago Sen. Taft took the position that I taught 21 years ago, that Communists and Socialists should be allowed to teach in the schools. It so happens nowadays I don't agree with Sen. Taft as far as Communist teachers in the schools is concerned because I think Communists are in effect a plainclothes auxiliary of the Red Army, the Soviet Red Army, and I don't want to see them in any of our schools teaching.

MCCARTHY: I don't recall Sen. Taft ever having any of the background that you have got. ANSWER: I resent the tone of this inquiry very much, Mr. Chairman. I resent it not only because it is my neck, my public neck that you are I think very skillfully trying to wring, but I say it because there are thousands of able and loyal employees in the Federal government of the United States who have been properly cleared according to the laws and the security practices of their agencies as I was, unless the new regime says no. I was before.

QUESTION: Do you think this book you wrote then did considerable harm? Its publication might have had adverse influence on the public by an expression of views contained in it?

ANSWER: The sale of that book was so abysmally small, it was so unsuccessful that a question of its influence, really you can go back to the publisher, you'll see it was one of the most unsuccessful books he ever put out. He's still sorry about it just as I am.

QUESTION: Well I think that's a compliment to American intelligence I will say that.

MURROW: Sen. McCarthy succeeded only in proving that Reed Harris had once written a bad book which the American people had proved 22 years ago by not buying it, which is what they eventually do with all bad ideas. As for Reed Harris, his resignation was accepted a month later with a letter of commendation. McCarthy claimed it was a victory. The Reed Harris hearing demonstrates one of the Senator's techniques. Twice he said the American Civil Liberties Union was listed as a subversive front. The Attorney General's list does not and has never listed the AGLU as subversive nor does the FBI or any other government agency. And the American Civil Liberties Union holds in its files letters of commendation from President Eisenhower, President Truman, and Gen. MacArthur.

Now let us try to bring the McCarthy story a little more up to date. Two years ago Sen. Benton of Conn. accused McCarthy of apparent perjury, unethical practice and perpetrating a hoax on the Senate. McCarthy sued for two million dollars. Last week he dropped the case saying no one could be found who believed Benton's story. Several volunteers have come forward saying they believe it in its entirety.

Today Sen. McCarthy says he's going to get a lawyer and force the networks to give him time to reply to Adlai Stevenson's speech. Earlier, the Senator asked, "upon what meat does this our Caesar feed." Had he looked three lines earlier in Shakespeare's Caesar he would have found this line, which is not altogether inappropriate: "The fault, dear Brutus is not in our stars but in ourselves."

No one familiar with the history of this country can deny that Congressional committees are useful. It is necessary to investigate before legislating, but the line between investigation and persecuting is a very fine one and the junior senator from Wisconsin has stepped over it repeatedly. His primary achievement has been in confusing the public mind as between internal and the external threat of Communism. We must not confuse dissent with disloyalty. We must remember always that accusation is not proof and that conviction depends upon evidence and due process of law. We will not walk in fear, one of another. We will not be driven by fear into an age of unreason if we dig deep in our history and our doctrine, and remember that we are not descended from fearful men, not from men who feared to write, to speak, to associate and to defend causes which were for the moment unpopular.

MURROW: This is no time for men who oppose Sen.McCarthy's methods to keep silent, or for those who approve. We can deny our heritage and our history but we cannot escape responsibility for the result. There is no way for a citizen of a republic to abdicate his responsibilities. As a nation we have come into our full inheritance at a tender age. We proclaim ourselves, as indeed we are, the defenders of freedon, what's left of it, but we cannot defend freedom abroad by deserting it at home. The actions of the junior senator from Wisconsin have caused alarm and dismay amongst our allies abroad and given considerable comfort to our enemies, and whose fault is that? Not really his, he didn't create this situation of fear, he merely exploited it and rather successfully. Cassius was right, "The fault, dear Brutus is not in our stars, but in ourselves."

Good night, and good luck.

SEE IT NOW ... MARCH 9, 1954

LIVE ... MURROW: Good evening. Tonight "See It Now devotes its entire half hour to a report on Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, most of it told in his voice and pictures ... Before we begin, the Aluminum Company of America would like you to meet a man who has been with them for fifty years ...

LIVE ... MURROW: Because a report on Senator McCarthy is by its very nature controversial, we want to say exactly what we mean to say, and I request your permission to read from script whatever remarks Murrow and Friendly may make ... If the Senator feels that we have done violence to his words or pictures and desires to answer himself, an opportunity will be afforded him on this program. Our working thesis tonight is this quotation:

"If this fight against Communism is made a fight between America's two great political parties, the American people know that one of these parties will be destroyed, and the Republic cannot endure very long as a one-party system."

We applaud that statement, and we think Senator McCarthy ought to ... He said it 17 months ago in Milwaukee ...

TAPE ... MUCANTEK: the American people realize that this cannot be made a fight between America's two great political parties. If this fight against Communism is made a fight between America's two great political parties, the American people know that one of those parties will be destroyed and the Republic can't endure very long as a one-party system.

LIVE ... MURROW: But on February 4, 1954, Senator McCarthy spoke of one party's treason ... This was Charleston, West Virginia, where there were no cameras running - it was recorded on tape ...

MCCARTHY: This issue between Republicans and Democrats is clearly drawn; it has been deliberately drawn by those who have been in charge of twenty years of treason. Now the hard fact is that those who wear the label, those who wear the label Democrat, wear it with the stain of a historic betrayal.

Now, this is the pledge that I make. If I am charged by you people to be the responsible head of the Executive Department, it will be my initial responsibility to see that subversion, and disloayalty is kept out of the Executive Department. We will always appreciate and welcome Congressional investigation. The responsibility will rest squarely on the shoulders of the Executive, and I hold that there are ample powers in the government to get rid of these people if the Executive Department is really concerned with doing it. We can do it with absolute assurance. That American -- that American principles of trial by jury of the innocence until proved guilty are all observed, and I expect to do it.

MURROW NARRATION
OVER PORTRAIT

MURROW: On One thing, the Senator has been consistent ... operating as a one-man committee -- he has traveled far, interviewed many, terrorized some ... accused civilian and military leaders of the past administration of a great conspiracy to turn over the country to Communism ... investigated and substantially demoralized the present State Department ... made varying charges of espionage at Fort Monmouth ... the Army says it has been unable to find anything relating to espionage there... He has interrogated a varied assortment of what he calls "Fifth Amendment Communists" ... Republican Senator Flanders of Vermont said of Mccarthy today: "He dons his war paint. He goes into his war dance. He emits his war whoops. He goes forth to battle and proudly returns with the scalp of a pink Army dentist." Other critics have accused the Senator of using the bull whip

MR. KEEFE:

You would sometimes think to hear the quartet that call themselves OPERATION TRUTH damning Joe McCarthy and resorting to the vilest smears I have ever heard. Well, this is the answer and if I could express it in what is in my heart right now, I would do it in the terms of the poet who once said:

"Ah, tis but a dainty flower I bring to you
Yes tis but a violet glistening with dew
But still in its heart there lie beauties concealed
So in our heart our love for you lies unrevealed"

SENATOR JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY:

You know, I used to pride myself on the idea that I was a bit tough - especially over the past 18 or 19 months when we have been kicked around and bullwhipped and damned. I didn't think that I could be touched very deeply. But tonight, frankly, my cup and my heart is so full I can't talk to you.

MCCARTHY INTERROGATING GENERAL RALPH ZWICKER:

Q. Let us say he went out and stole fifty dollars the night before?

A. He would not have been honorably discharged.

CHAIRMAN: Do you think stealing fifty dollars is more serious than being a traitor to the country as part of the Communist conspiracy?

MCCARTHY: Are you enjoying this abuse of the General?

MCCARTHY: QUESTION: Do you think stealing fifty dollars is more serious than being a traitor to the country as part of the Communist conspiracy?
ANSWER: That, sir, was not my decision.

SENATOR MCCARTHY:

Shall we go on with that for a while? I hate to impose on your time. I just got two pages. This is the abuse which is the real meat of the abuse. This is the Official Reporter's record of the hearing. After he said he wouldn't remove that General from the Army who cleared a Communist, I said: "Then General, you should be removed from any Command. Any man who has been given the honor of being promoted to General, and who says: "I will protect another General who protects Communists is not fit to wear that uniform, General.

APPLAUSE

SENATOR JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY:

"I think it is a tremendous disgrace to the Army to have to bring these facts before the public, but I intend to give it to the public, General. I have a duty to do that. I intend to repeat to the press exactly what you said so that you can know that and be back here to hear it, General."

And wait 'til you hear the bleeding hearts scream and cry about our methods of trying to drag the truth from those who know, or should know, who covered up a Fifth Amendment Communist Major. But they say, oh it's all right to uncover them but don't get rough doing it, McCarthy.

We apparently disagree only on how we should handle those who protect Communists. When the shouting and the tumult dies, the American people and the President will realize that this unprecedented mud slinging v the ike by the extreme left wing elements of press and radio was caused solely because another Fifth Amendment Communist was finally dug out of the dark recesses and exposed to public view.

March 9, 1954

SENATOR JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY:

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS:

I perform this unpleasant task because the American people are entitled to have the coldly documented history of this man who says he wants to be your President. But strangely, Alger -- I mean Adlai -- but let's move on to another part of the jigsaw puzzle. While you may think that there can be no connection between the debonair, democrat candidate and a dilapidated Massachusetts barn, I want to show you a picture of this barn and explain the connection. Here is the outside of the barn. Give me the picture of the inside of the barn. Here is the outside of the barn in Lee, Massachusetts. It looks as though it couldn't house a farmer's cow or goat. Here is the inside - a beautiful, paneled conference room with maps of the Soviet Union. What way does Stevenson tie up with that? My - my investigators went out and took pictures of the barn after we had been tipped off what was in it. Tipped off that there was in this barn all the missing documents from the Communist front - IPR (right here.) The IPR which was named by the McCarran Committee - named before the McCarran Committee the cover shop for Communist espionage. Now, let's take a look at the photostat of the document taken from that Massachusetts barn. One of those documents which was never supposed to see the light of day. (rather not) This is a document which shows that Alger Hiss and Frank Coe recommended Adlai Stevenson to the Mount Tremblant Conference which was called for the purpose of establishing foreign policy -- post-war policy in Asia.

Now, as you know, Alger Hiss is a convicted traitor. Frank Coe is a man who has been named under oath before the Congressional Committee seven (7) times as a member of the Communist Party. Why -- why do Hiss and Coe find that Adlai Stevenson is the man they want representing them at this conference, I don't know. Perhaps Adlai knows.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - -

LIVE ... MURROW: But Senator McCarthy didn't permit his audience to hear the entire paragraph. This is the official record of the McCarran hearings and anyone could have bought it for two dollars.

Quote: Another possibility for the Mr. Trumbland conferences on Asia is someone from Knox's office or Stimson's office." (Frank Knox was our war-time Secretary of the Navy; Henry Stimson, our Secretary of the Army, both distinguished Republicans.) It goes on: "Coe and Hiss mentioned Adlai Stevenson, one of Knox's special assistants, and Harvey Bundy, former Assistant Secretary of State (under Hoover) and now assistant to Stimson because of their jobs." We read from this documented record not in defense of the truth. Specifically, Mr. Stevenson's identification with that Red Barn was no more nor less than that of Knox, Stimson or Bundy. It should be stated that Mr. Stevenson was once a member of the Institute of Pacific Relations ... but so were such other loyal Americans as Senator Ferguson, John Foster Dulles, Paul Hoffman, Henry Luce and Herbert Clark Hoover. Their association carries with it ... no guilt, and that barn had nothing to do with any of them.

LIVE ...

MURROW:Now a sample of our investigation ... the witness was Reed Harris ... for many years a civil servant in the State Department directing the Voice of America broadcasts ... Harris was accused of helping the Communistic cause by curtailing some broadcasts to Israel ... Senator McCarthy summoned him and questioned him about a book he had written in 1932 ...

SENATOR MCCARTHY INTERROGATING REED HARRIS:

MCCARTHY: Mr. Reed Harris. Your name is Reed Harris?

HARRIS: That's correct.

MCCARTHY: You wrote a book in 1932. Is that correct?

HARRIS: Yes. I wrote a book and as I testified in Executive session...

MCCARTHY: AT the time you wrote the book --- pardon me. Go ahead. I am sorry.

HARRIS: At the time I wrote the book the atmosphere in the universities of the United States was greatly effected by the great depression then in existence. The attitudes of students, the attitudes of the general public were considerably different than they are at this moment. And for one thing, there certainly was no awareness to the degree that there is today of the way the Communist Party works.

MCCARTHY: You attended Columbia University in the early thirties. Is that right?

HARRIS: I did, Mr. Chairman.

MCCARTHY: Will you speak a little louder, sir?

HARRIS: I did, Mr. Chairman.

MCCARTHY: And were you expelled from Columbia?

HARRIS: I was suspended from classes on April 1st, 1932. I was later reinstated and I resigned from the university.

MCCARTHY: And you resigned from the university.

Did a Civil - Civil Liberties Union provide you with an attorney at that time?

HARRIS: I had many offers of attorneys and one of those was from the American Civil Liberties Union.

MCCARTHY: The question was -- did the Civil Liberties Union supply you with an attorney?

HARRIS: They did supply an attorney.

MCCARTHY: THE answer is yes.

HARRIS: The answer is yes.

MCCARTHY: You know the Civil Liberties Union has been listed as a front for the Communist Party?

HARRIS: Mr. Chairman, this was 1932.

MCCARTHY: I know it was 1932. Do you know they since have been listed as a front for the Communist Party?

HARRIS: I do not know they have been listed, sir. I have heard that mentioned and read that.

MCCARTHY: Now, you wrote a book in 1932. I am going to ask you if you feel that professors should be given the right to teach Sophomores that marriage let me quote --- should be cast out of our civilization as antiquated and stupid religious phenomena. Was that your feeling at that time?

HARRIS: My feeling was that professors should have the right to express their considered opinions on any subject whatever they were, sir.

MCCARTHY: Wait a minute. I am going to ask you this question again.

HARRIS: That includes that quotation - they should have the right to teach anything that came to their mind as being the proper thing to teach.

MCCARTHY: I am going to make you answer this.

HARRIS: My answer is yes but you put an implication on it . It is quite out of context - does not give a proper impression of the book as a whole. The American public doesn't get an honest impression of even that book bad as it is from what you are quoting about it.

MCCARTHY: Let's continue to read your own writings.

HARRIS: 21 years ago, again.

MCCARTHY: We will try to bring you down to date if we can.

HARRIS: Mr. Chairman, 2 weeks ago Senator Taft took the position that I took 21 years ago that Communists and Socialists should be allowed to teach in the schools. It so happens that nowadays I don't agree with Senator Taft as far as Communist teaching in the schools are concerned because I feel think that Communists are in effect a plain clothes auxiliary of the Red Army - the Soviet Red Army, and I don't want to see them in any of our schools teaching.

MCCARTHY: I don't recall Senator Taft having any of the background that you do,sir.

HARRIS: I resent the tone of this inquiry very much, Mr. Chairman. I resent it not only because it is my neck - my public neck that you are I think very skillfully trying to ring. But I say it because there are thousands of able and loyal employees in the Federal Government of the United States who have been properly cleared according to the laws and the security practices of their agencies as I was unless the new regime says no. I was before.

MCCLELLAN: Do you think that this book that you wrote then did considerable harm? Its publication might have had adverse influence on the public by an expression of views contained in it.

HARRIS: The sale of that book was so abysmally small it was so unsuccessful that a question of its influence -- really, you can go back to the publisher. You will see it was one of the most unsuccessful books ever put out. He is still sorry about it - just as I am.

MCCLELLAN: Well, I think that's a compliment to American intelligence. I will say that.

- - - - - - - -

MERROW: Senator McCarthy proved only that Reed Harris had once written a bad book, which the American people had proved 22 years ago by not buying it ... which is what they eventually do with all bad ideas. (As for Reed Harris, his resignation was accepted a month later with a letter of commendation.) McCarthy claimed it as a victory. The Reed Harris hearing demonstrated one of the Senator's techniques. Twice he said the American Civil Liberties Union was listed as a subversive front. The Attorney General's list does not and has never listed the ACLU as subversive, nor does the FBI or any other Federal Government Agency ... and The ACLU holds in its files letters of commendation from President Eisenhower, President Truman and General MacArthur ...

LIVE ... MURROW: To bring the McCarthy story briefly up to day: Two years ago, Senator Benton of Connecticut accused McCarthy of apparent perjury, unethical practice and perpetrating a hoax on the Senate. McCarthy sued for two million dollars; last week he dropped the case, saying no one could be found who believed Benton's story. Several volunteers have come forward, saying they believe it in its entirety entirely. Today, Senator McCarthy says he's going to get a lawyer and force the networks to give him time to reply to Adlai Stevenson's speech.

(THEN MURROW SUMUP)

Earlier the Senator asked: "Upon what meat does this our Caesar feed?" Had he looked three lines earlier in Shakespeare's Caesar he would have found this line ... which is not altogether inappropriate: "The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, but in ourselves ..." No one familiar with the history of his country can deny that congressional committees are useful ... It is necessary to investigate before legislating .... but the line between investigating and persecuting is thin... and the record shows that the junior senator from Wisconsin has crossed that line many times ... His primary success has been in confusing the public mind as between the internal and external threats of communism ... We must not confuse dissent with disloyalty ... We must remember always that accusation is not proof ... and that conviction depends upon evidence and due process of law ... We will not walk in fear ... one of another ... we will not be driven by fear into an age of unreason ... if we dig deep in our history and our doctrine ... and remember that we are not descended from fearful men ... not from men who feared to write, to speak, to associate, to defend virtues, which for the moment were unpopular ... This is no time for men who oppose Senator McCarthy's methods to keep silent ... or for those who approve ... We can deny our heritage and our history ... but we cannot escape responsibility for the result ... There is no way for a citizen of a republic to abdicate his responsibilities ... As a nation we have come into our full inheritance at an early age ... We proclaim ourselves ... as indeed we are ... the defenders of the free world ... what's left of it ... but we cannot defend freedom abroad, by deserting it at home ... The actions of the junior senator from Wisconsin have caused alarm and dismay amongst our allies abroad, and given comfort to our enemies ... And whose fault is that ... not really his ... he didn't create the situation of fear ... he merely exploited it ... and rather successfully skillfully ... Cassius was right ... CBS REIMBURSES SEN. JOSEPH McCARTHY FOR EXPENSES INCURRED IN PREPARATION OF FILMED REPLY TO MURROW'S REPORT

The Columbia Broadcasting System Saturday, May 15, reimbursed Senator Joseph R. McCarthy for expenses incurred by him in connection with the preparation of his filmed television appearance on "See It Now" April 6, 1954. This appearance was in response to Edward R. Murrow's invitation on "See It Now" March 9, 1954, to Senator McCarthy to reply to Mr. Murrow's report on Senator McCarthy. Senator McCarthy's request for payment was received by CBS on May 10, 1954. In reimbursing Senator McCarthy, the Columbia Broadcasting System issued the following statement:

Pursuant to its long-established policy of fairness and balance in the treatment of controversial issues, the CBS Radio and Television networks provide facilities and technical assistance reasonably needed by those who are invited by CBS to reply to positions taken in programs produced and controlled by CBS.

If the original CBS broadcast to which reply is made involved a speech or statements by a spokesman not connected with CBS, the CBS policy is to limit the reply to the same type of broadcast as the original, using the same general method of presentation and the production facilities of CBS. An example of this type of broadcast is "Man of the Week," a program series produced and controlled by CBS in which a panel of news experts interviews an outstanding person from the field of public affairs.

Where, however, as in the "See It Now" program, the original broadcast was by a member of the staff of CBS, a person who is invited to reply is afforded his choice of method of presentation and of using either the production facilities of CBS or outside facilities. If, as occurred in the present case, film prepared through outside facilities is chosen, CBS believes that its policy of fairness and balance compels it to reimburse the individual for reasonable and necessary costs. Normally CBS would insist that where outside facilities, and hence financial reimbursement by CBS, are involved, there must be prior discussion with CBS in order that there be advance agreement concerning the type of presentation for reply and the costs involved. In the case of Senator McCarthy, there was no such prior discussion or agreement and CBS was not informed until shortly before his broadcast that Senator McCarthy intended to film his broadcast through outside facilities. However, since the policy of prior agreement in these circumstances had not yet been enunciated by CBS, CBS believes it would not be proper to refuse to reimburse Senator McCarthy on this ground.

Special time is frequently provided by CBS to outside individuals or organizations for the purpose of futhering a point of view in a controversial area. These cases are distinct from programs produced and controlled by CBS. In these special broadcasts, CBS will supply such camera and production facilities as may be reasonably necessary for a live broadcast. Any props or other visual materials, or any film which may be used during the broadcast, must be paid for by those using the special time period. The same conditions will apply to those who are invited to answer such special broadcasts.

CBS believes these applications of its policy of fairness and balance are in keeping with the American tradition of fair play.

The Honorable Joseph R. McCarthy

Senate Office Building
Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator McCarthy:

This is to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 6 enclosing an invoice received from Movietonews, Inc., together with copy of your letter to Aluminum Company of America dated April 28 and a copy of that company's letter to you of May 4.

Please be advised that in the circumstances involved, CBS does not propose to pay the invoice in the amount of $4,436.99 or the "further expenses" not yet itemized of $1,900.00. In normal circumstances, we would most seriously consider bearing the burden of paying the costs incurred by someone to whom we grant the right of reply to an attack made by a representative of CBS over its facilities. But I am sure you can well understand that we cannot give carte blanche and then be faced with a bill long after the event and without any prior consultation. In Mr. Murrow's wire to you dated March 13, formally confirming that time was being granted on SEE IT NOW for your reply, Mr. Murrow expressly stated that Elmer Lower of CBS Television in Washington was available to meet with you or your representative at the earliest possible moment for the purpose of making the customary arrangements. Nevertheless, we had no word from you or your staff on what your plans or desires were.

We had no opportunity at all to advise with you or to discuss with you from where you chose to broadcast or by what means. Very shortly before your scheduled appearance on April 6, we learned from reports in the press that you planned to make your reply on film. We had no idea whether this was for your personal convenience in order to permit you to take a vacation or whether you felt that this was the most effective means which you could use for reply. On April 5 Mr. Mickelson, Director of News and Public Affairs of CBS Television, wired you stating our understanding that you would appear on film and asking you to submit two copies of the film not later than 10:30 AM on the day of your broadcast.

The film was not delivered until many hours afterwards. Immediately after the broadcast, one of your representatives took back the film thus indicating to us that you regarded that it belonged to you.

The procedures which you chose to follow, without any prior contact or discussion with any of our representatives, impel us to conclude that it would set an extremely dangerous and expensive precedent for us now to honor your bill. We do not say that in more normal circumstances, we would not contribute to the costs of anyone who wishes to use our facilities to reply to an attack made by a CBS representative over our facilities, but to protect ourselves we feel that it is necessary to insist on some sort of advance arrangements. Any other course would lay us open to unreasonable charges in circumstances where prior consultation may well limit these charges. Obviously, if you had chosen to use our facilities, whether live or film, we would have borne that cost. Obviously, too, had you informed us that you did not choose to use our facilities for good and sufficient reasons, we might have come to mutually acceptable arrangements in advance.

You chose none of these courses, however, and hence we feel it necessary to inform you that we will not pay your bill.

(In order, however, that there be no question of our profiting through saving expenses which we ordinarily would have incurred and which we were willing to incur, we have decided that we will contribute the amount of your bill to the Crusade for Freedom.)

Gentlemen:

Enclosed herewith is a bill which I have today received from Movietonews, Inc. in the amount of $4,436.99 covering the cost of preparing the film for my answer to the attack which Edward R. Murrow made upon me on your program.

In view of the fact that you used my answer for the purpose of advertising your product and in view of the fact that your company paid for the cost of Murrow's attack, the thought occurs to me that you might feel obligated to take care of this bill. In any event, I would appreciate your advising me your attitude in this matter. Incidentally, in addition to the enclosed bill, further expenses in the amount of $1900.00 were incurred in connection with my answer to Murrow's attack.

If your position is that you will pay the bill, naturally we will send you an itemized statement of the total.

With kindest regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

Dear Senator McCarthy:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 28 to which was attached an invoice received by you from Movietonews, Incorporated.

As we have already indicated to you in our telegrams of April 1 and April 5, we do not feel we could justify paying the preparation cost of your April 6 presentation on "SEE IT NOW" since we are responsible only for the production of the commercial portions of the programs.

We have no prior knowledge of the editorial content of the shows, including Mr. Murrow's March 9 program about you and your April 6 program about Mr. Murrow. For both of these programs Alcoa paid the Columbia Broadcasting System a fixed sum, as provided for in our contract. This has been the procedure since the start of the program in 1951. We have no responsibility for the manner of production of any program or the specific expenses involved in its preparation.

In view of the foregoing, we are returning to you herewith the invoice from Movietonews, Incorporated, and again refer you to Columbia Broadcasting System.

FIRST LEAD MCCARTHY-ALCOA

NEW YORK, APRIL 23 (AP)-SEN.JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY (R-WIS) SAID TODAY HE'LL HAND THE ALUMINUM CO. OF AMERICA THE BILL FOR HIS FILMED TELEVISION REBUTTAL TO CBS COMMENTATOR EDWARD R. MURROW.

ALCOA SPONSORS MURROW'S PROGRAM.

"I'LL SUBMIT THE BILL TO ALCOA," MCCARTHY SAID IN WASHINGTON. "THEY PAID MORE FOR MURROW'S ATTACK ON ME THAN THIS WOULD AMOUNT TO, AND THEY SHOULD PAY IT."

COST OF THE 25-MINUTE FILM HAS BEEN ESTIMATED AT $6,000 TO $7,500.

MCCARTHY SAID HE DID NOT KNOW HOW MUCH THE BILL WAS BUT SAID HE WILL SEE THAT THE FOX FILM STUDIO GETS ITS MONEY.

"I'M RESPONSIBLE FOR THE BILL IN THE FIRST INSTANCE," THE SENATOR SAID, BUT ADDED HE BELIEVED IT ONLY FAIR THAT ALCOA DEFRAY THE COST.

"WHETHER I WOULD SUE THEM OR NOT, I DON'T KNOW, BECAUSE OF THE COST AND TIME A SUIT WOULD REQUIRE," MCCARTHY ADDED.

MURROW HAD CRITICIZED THE SENATOR'S METHODS ON HIS CBS-TV PROGRAM, "SEE IT NOW." HE INVITED THE SENATOR TO MAKE A REPLY, AND MCCARTHY DID SO IN A FILM MADE AT FOX MOVIETONE STUDIOS HERE.

SUBSEQUENTLY THERE AROSE THE QUESTION OF WHO WOULD PAY FOR THE FILM.

ALCOA SAID CBS RECEIVED A FIXED FEE FOR THE PROGRAM EACH WEEK AND PRODUCTION ARRANGEMENTS WERE UP TO IT. CBS SAID, IN TURN, IT HAD NOT BEEN ASKED TO PAY, AND MURROW ASSERTED HE PERSONALLY WOULD NOT FOOT THE BILL.

YESTERDAY A FOX FILM SPOKESMAN SAID THE BILL HAD BEEN SENT TO MCCARTHY AT THE REQUEST OF ROY COHN, CHIEF COUNSEL TO THE SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE HEADED BY MCCARTHY.

Dear Mr. Allen:

Mr. Murrow has asked me to acknowledge your kind letter of March 14th and the material you enclosed. As you are now aware, Mr. Murrow refused to accept the suggested substitution of William F. Buckley, Jr. and it will be Senator McCarthy himself on the program of April 6th.

Thank you for your interest.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I've just learned that Senator Joseph McCarthy has accepted your typically fair-minded offer for equal radio-TV time by way "of (his) friend William Buckley."

Patently, you make the decision regarding what is on the face of it a gratuitous sneer from the Senator. Beyond that, however, lies the substitution of Mr. Buckley for Mr. McCarthy.

I enclose an article which I wrote a couple of years ago containing some pertinent information regarding Mr. Buckley. There is of course much more material in a similar vein concerning him. I should also like to remind you that the publishing house of Henry Regnery&Co. (Chicago) just happens to be publishing a very favorable book called McCarthy and His Enemies and one of its co-authors just happens to be William F. Buckley, Jr. As you know the Regnery house issues a steady torrent of 'books' slightly to the right of, well, King Louis XIV. It's merely incidental, but yet relevant, that William H. Regnery, president of the firm, is an enthusiastic supporter of the anti-Semite and pro-Franco apologist, Merwin K. Hart to whom Regnery gave $9,585 between June 1,1948 and December 19,1949 (cf.Hearings, House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities, pers. to H.Res.298, Part 4, National Economic Council, page 159).

The writer of this letter is a journalist, a former editor of The Nation, and a contributor to the New Statesman and Nation, The Nation, Atlantic, etc. and an avid fan of Edward R. Murrow.

I just don't think his viewers should be treated to the obvious spectacle of an ersatz second-stringer out for some cheap publicity trying to carry the ball for Joe. We want the genuine article, if he has the guts enough to stand up, man-to-man and without benefit of senatorial immunity.

Best wishes,

Charles R. Allen Jr.

Hate Crowd Flutters Adoringly Round Its New Hero, Buckley

Campus 6-52

By CHARLES ALLEN, JR.

Harvard has contributed to the Fascist thinking in America in the person of Lawrence Dennis; Princeton has given Homer Loomis, Jr., leader of the now-defunct Columbians. At last—though somewhat belatedly—Yale rounds out the ivied contribution with its recent graduate, William Frank Buckley, Jr., whose top-selling "God and Man at Yale" has stirred up considerable controversy in educational circles.

For "God and Man at Yale" may become to the educational world what "Red Channels'" has become for the entertainment world: a touchstone for heretic hunters.

With a hauteur that makes even the most tolerant reader shift with embarrassment, and a brand of specious reasoning one-ply thick, Buckley contends that the faculty at New Haven is shot through with alleged "collectivists" and "expansive atheists" who daily indoctrinate the undergraduate innocents with the teachings of Marx and Engels.

The educational conspiracy to advocate the doctrines of "materialistic communism" is not, as such, Buckley philosophically ponders, cause for alarm; the trouble comes from the fact that such crafty machinations are taking place at a school like Yale, a citadel of free private enterprise and individualism. This is the hook which has sent college presidents and university public relations directors to their boards of trustees, their alumni and the public to proclaim assurance that their institution "is not now nor has it ever been . . ."

Borrowing unashamedly and without due credit from his nearest—in point of time—intellectual inspiration, Adam Smith, Buckley likens education to a market place. The author's alma mater is the market, the alumnus is the customer; the product is the curricula.

This somewhat limited concept of the workings of higher education is bolstered by the author's self-appointed probe of a handful of textbooks used by the Yale faculty. In addition to burning some books, Buckley roasts some of his former tutors. He devotes considerable space to an abusive personal attack on one teacher, Raymond Kennedy, who cannot answer the charges. Kennedy died before the book was written.

Perhaps the most interesting exception to both "God and Man At Yale" and its author has come from the Rev. George C. Higgins, assistant director of the Social Action Department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference in Washington, D. C., long recognized as the official voice of the Roman Catholic church on social issues. Warning that "Buckley's social philosophy is not that of the Roman Catholic Church," Father Higgins has cautioned Catholic readers who might have been tempted to exaggerate the merits of a book which, in many respects, is tragically superficial from the Catholic point of view."

Brushing aside Buckley's attempts at economic analysis as "completely inadequate," the NCWC official went on to score Buckley's contention that free enterprise is an inherent part of Roman Catholic theory. Father Higgins remarked, "[That is] a dead giveaway as to his own total and complete unfamiliarity with Catholic social teaching."

Intimating that Buckley is "less than honest," he concluded, "No wonder the Catholic press, however reluctantly, has felt it necessary to warn the American public that Buckley's social philosophy has little if anything in common with official Catholic teaching.

"In a word," says a recent editorial in America [a Catholic journal of political and social opinion], 'Mr. Buckley's own social philosophy is almost as obnoxious to a well-instructed Catholic as the assaults on religion which he rightly condemns.'"

But the distaste of the National Catholic Welfare Council is not shared by the pro-Fascists of America. Plaudits have been accorded the book and its author by such figures as Gerald L. K. Smith, Allen A. Zoll and Merwin K. Hart. Writing in the January, 1952, issue of the lurid Cross and the Flag, Smith — one-time Silver Shirter and now head of the Nationalist Christian Crusade — announced that Buckley's book "has captured the attention of America's leading patriots." Smith noted that "it will serve a great purpose in this critical hour."

Allen Alderson Zoll, whose patriotism last year grossed him over $50,000 as director of the "pro-American" National Council for American Education, is old hat among the crackpots of anti-Semitism. Recently, in a "confidential" mailing to "special" members of the National Council —"special" in that they pay higher membership rates—Zoll described Buckley as "brilliant . . . an intense libertarian." He went on to advise, "God and Man At Yale should be read by every American interested in saving the schools and colleges . . . it is a MUST for Council members."

A lesser figure in the galaxy of pro-Fascist fringists is Frederick Kister, former aide to Gerald L. K. Smith, who runs the pro-Nazi American Renaissance Book Club.

Immediately after the appearance of Buckley's book, Kister wrote, "We emphatically recommend this stimulating and forthright book written by a young, thinking, and fighting American!"

And in the weekly newspaper The Broom—a curious creation which combines sun-worshipping with anti-Semitism — there is another plug for Buckley.

Buckley's failure to disavow such support is eloquent.

Another "source" which Buckley employs as an "educational authority" is a relatively little-known but effective quarterly called The Educational Reviewer, which does four times a year what Buckley did in a single book: "review" school and collegiate texts for traces of "collectivism." The 1950 Congressional Select Committee on Lobbying branded The Reviewer as "unreliable" and went on to state that it "smacks too much of the book-burning orgies of Nuremberg to be accepted by any thoughtful Americans without foreboding and alarm."

Perhaps no one has more succinctly summed up the meaning of William F. Buckley, Jr. in America today than Prof. Theodore M. Greene, teacher of philosophy at Yale. Writing in the student journal The Yale Daily News, he commented: "Mr. Buckley has done Yale a great service, and he may well do the cause of liberal education in America an even greater service, by stating the Fascist alternative to liberalism so clearly that we can see it for what it is and realize what could happen to us were it to prevail in Yale and other colleges and universities."

Buckley himself has revealed at least one motivation for a great deal of his crusade to save "individualism." One night when he was a guest on the Barry Gray radio show, Gray asked:

"Just what do you want to do most, Mr. Buckley?"

There was a slight pause. Then the guest snapped, "Make money."

EDWARD R. MURROW

On March 9th Mr. Edward R. Murrow, Educational Director of the Col. Broad. Co, devoted his program to an attack on the work of the United States Senate Investigating Committee and on me personally as its chairman. Over the past four years he has made repeated attacks on me and those fighting Communist infiltration of this nation. Neither Joe McCarthy nor Edward R. Murrow is of any great importance as individuals. We are only important in our relation to the great struggle to preserve our American liberties. The Senate Investigating Committee has forced out of government and out of critical defense plants Communists engaged in the Soviet conspiracy. The visiousness of Murrow's attacks is in direct proportion to our success in digging out Communists.

Ordinarily, I would not take time out from the important work at hand, to answer Murrow. However, in this case, I feel justified in doing so because Murrow is the symbol, the leader and the cleverest of the jaeckle pack which is always found at the throats of anyone who dares to expose individualm Communists and traitors.

I am compelled by the facts to say to you that Mr. Edward R. Murrow as far back as 21 years ago was engaged in propaganda for Communist causes. The Inst. of Internat. Educa. of which he was an ass't director and acting director, was chosen to act as representative by a Soviet agency to do the work which would normally be done by the Russian secret police. Mr. M sponsored a Communist school in Moscow. and in the selection of American teachers and students who were to attend, Mr. Murro's organization acted for the Russian espionage and propaganda organization known as VOKS.

Many of those selected were later exposed as Communists. B.E. Blaisdell joined the Commie party after attending the Murrow sponsored school.

Julia Older was fired from the United Nations in 1952 as a Fifth Amend. Communist after she had bee n exposed by Roy Cohn's grand jury investigating Commie's in the U.N.

Here's a picture of the typicaly student selected to attend the Comm. school in Moscow by Mr. M.'s organizagion.

Mr. Murrow by his own admission was a member of the IWW, the Industrial Workers of the World---a terrorist organization cited as subversive by the Attorney Gen. of the U.S. who stated that it was an organization which seeks "to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means". Other government committees have had before them actors, screen writers, motion picture producers and others who admitted Communist affilitation, but pleaded youth or ignorance.

On March 9th of this year Mr. M., a trained reporter who had travelled all overthe world, the Educational director of CBS, followed implicitly the Commie line as laid down within the last six months not only by the Commie Daily Worker, but by the Commie magazine "Political Affairs", bythe National Conference of the Communist Party of America and by William Z. Foster, the former head of the Comm. party in the U.S.

Why is it important to you, the peple of America to know why theEducational dir. and vice Pres. of CBS so closely follows the Comm. Party line? To answer that we must turn back the pages of history. A little over a hundred years ago a little group of men in Europe conspired to deliver the world to a new system----Communism. Under their system the indifidual was nothing, the familywas nothing, God did not even exist. Their theory was that an all-powerful state should have the power of live and death over its citizens without even a trial. That everything and everybody belonged to the rulers of the state even including the unborn child. They openly wrote that in their efforts to gain power any means would be justified by the end...deceit, lies, terror, murder, treason, BLACKMAIL were elevated into virtues. If a convert to Communism could be pursuaded that he was a citizen of the world it would be easier to make him a traitor to his own country.

For seventy years the Communists made little progress.

Let me show you a map of the world as it stood in the middle of the first World War in 1918 before the Russian revolution. You see THEN there was not a single foot of ground on the face of the globe under the domination or control ofthe Commies. Bear in mind that this was ohly 36 years ago.

In 1918 we were engaged in a great world war in defense of our way of life and DEFENSE OF American liberty.

The Kaiser was obliged to divide his armies and fight on both the eastern and western fronts. In the midst of the war the Russian people overthrew their Czarist master and set up a democratic form of government under the leadership of Alexander Kerensky, Kerensky's government instantly pledged continued loyalty of Russia to the allies.

At this instant, the imperial German government secretly financed the return to Russia of seven Commie exiles who had been forced to flee

the country. These men were Nikolai Lenin, Leon Trotsky, Carl Ruddek---

Once in Russia by the very methods which the Communists are employing in America today they underminded the army, the navy, the civilian heads of governmmnt, and in 100 days they were literally the masters of Russia.

Now with all the wealth of the nation at their command they proceeded to organize Communist parties in every country of the world. They sent to these countries trained propagandists and spies, and in every country they found men like Ed.R.M. who would sponsor invitations to students and teachers to attend indoctrination schools in Moscow exactly as Murrow did. They trained Communists in every country in the world whose sole purpose was to infiltrate the government and once themselves in government, employed others.

Now let's look at a map of the world as of tonight. This sixth day of April, 1954 and compare it with the map of 36 years ago, then not even a red speck on the map of the whole wide world.

11 years ago one country with 180 million people in Commie chains. Tonight, on the sixth day of April 1954, over one third of the earth's area is under Commie control and 8 hundred million in chains.

How much of this was achieved by military force and how much by the traitors and propagandists in our own governmtn and the other free governments.?

Let's start in Europe. They took by military force a little piece of Finland; and in the same way they took three small Baltic States, Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia. When they precipitated the second World World they took half of Poland the same way. They acquired the rest of Poland through Polish traitors and Communists in our own governmts. We gave American dollars and American support tothe Communists in Poland.

They took over Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary without firing a shot. by the infiltration of Russian Communists and domestic Communists in these governments.

How did they get Yugoslavia?..who were the Communists traitors in our government when we repudiated Mihailovitch who had fought with us throughout the war? Who are the Communists in our government who induced our support of Communist Tito.?

The Commie's took over Czechoslovakia without firing a shot. They did this by infiltration of Communists into the Czech governmnt.

Listen to what a high official in the anti-Communist government of Czech. said:

"In my country the pattern was identical with what it is here. If anyone, before the Communists took over, dared to attack us, those Communists who were preparing and shaping the policy of my government, to betray my people, he was promptly attacked and destroyed by a combination of Communist fellow-travelers and those unthinking people who thought they were serving the cause of liberalism and progress, but who actually were actually serving the cause of the most reactionary credo of all times, Communism.

How about this vast land area and the teeming masses of China. Were 400 million captured by force of arms? Certainly not. They were delivered to Commie slave masters by the jackle pack of Commie line propagandists who day after day shouted to the world that the Chinese Communists were agrarian reformists and our ally, the Republic of China, represented everything that was evil and wicked.

If there were no communists in our government would we have consented to turn over half of Germany and one half of Austria to the Russians?

If there was no Communists in our governemtn, who was Governor Winant when negotiating for the Corridor in Berlin advised by the State Department to try to get the Corridor, but don't irritate the Russians.

This decision has already cost the lives of 35 or 40 American boys and hundreds of millions of dollars.

If there were no Commies in our governemtn would we have given Russia 11 billion of Lend Lease even when they refuse to permit even a siggle American military observer to enter Russia.? If there were no Commies in our government the very time we were saving the Russians from German army, would we have acceded in their refusal to permit a single American aviator to land in Russian.?

The Germans were getting their oil from the Polesti oil fields of Rumania. We were bombing those oil fields from our bases in Africa. Three thousand American fliers were shot down and interned for the duration of the war in enemy prison camps in Rumania because our Russian allies would not permit them to land in Russia.

Now let us move to the East again. For (BLANK) months we were engaged in a live and death struggle in a war with Japan. During all of that time we were supporting Russian armies in Europe with men and armaments. Nevertheless, the Russians absolutely refused to lie a finger to aid us in the Japanese War.

After we had dropped the atomic bomb on Japan the Russian hastened to register dive day ? participation in the war.

If there had been no Commie influense in our governemtn would we have rewarded them all of Manahuria, half of the Kurile Island, and one half of Korea. How many Americans have died and will die because of this No one will every know.

If there were no Commie influence in our governemtn why did Sec. of State D. Acheson invite the Korean War by telling the Russians that we had no interest in Korea.

When we abandoned 400 million Chinese to Commie slavery masters, the principle adviser on foreign policy was Owen Lattimore. He has since been named by a Democrat controlled Sen. Committee "a conscious, articulate insturment of Communist conspiracy". He has been indicted by a Fed. grand jury. On page _____ of his book, he signles out and expresses gratitude for Murrow's ardent support.

If there were no commie in our government why did we delay for 18 months research on the hydrogen bomb even though our intelligence agencie were reporting that THE Russian were feverishly ~~xxxxxxxxxx~~ pushing the development of the H-bomb.

There is a saying that A GOOD LAWYER always advises a defendant that time and confusion work in his favor. Communist line propagandists are already ~~xx~~ ready to vilify and smear those who expose traitors and having done a deadly job of creating delays and confusions. Thanks to their efforts we have squandered hundreds of billions of dollars; we have engaged in an abhortive war, and we have lost a third of the world.

It is often said that it is sufficient to fight Communism in Europe and Asia, but Communism is not an American domestic issue. But the record is that the damage has already been done by ~~carefully~~ CLEVERLY calculated subversion at home. IT IS THE PROBLEM OF SUBVERSION ~~That is the problem~~ our committee faces.

Let us quickly glance at some of the work our Committee has done in slightly over a year's time. 238 witnesses were examined in public session. 367 witnesses were examined in executive session. 84 witnesses refused to tesitfy as to Communist activities or espionage on the ~~gg~~ grounds that thruthful testimony might send them to jail. 24 witnesses with Communist background wer ~~xxxxxxx~~ discharged or resigned because of their Communist activities which were exposed before our committee. Of course you cannot measure the success of the Committee by a box score based on the number of Communist heads that have rolled from secret jobs. It is completely impossible to even estimate the effect of our government's day by day plotting and exposure of communists.

For example, exposure of one Fifth Amendment Communist in the government printing office, having access to secret material from almost every government agency would result in undisclosed numbers of suspensions, and removal of the printing office loyalty board and a revamping of the loyalty rules. Disclosure of Communists in the military and radar laboratories result in the abolition of the Pentagon board which had cleared and ordered reinstated Communists who have for years been handling government secrets.

Army orders have been issued to prevent a recurrence of the Perris scandal which was exposed by the committee.

To ATTEMPT TO evaluate the effective work of an investigation committee would be as impossible as to attempt to evaluate the effects of well-trained watchdogs upon the activities of potential burglars.

We Americans live in a free world--a world where we can stand as individuals; where we can go to the church of our choice and worship god each in our own fashion; where we can freely speak our opinions on any subject. OR ANY MAN.

Whether we shall continue to so live has come to issue now We will soon know whether we are going to go on living this kind of life or whether we are going to live the kind of life that 800-million slave slaves live under Communist domination. The issue is simple-- life or death for our civilization.

If you think I've been rough with Mr. Murrow --and there are those who complain my methods in attacking Communists--Mr. Murrow said on this program and I quote "The actions of the junior senator from Wisconsin have given considerable comfort to our enemies."

That is the language of our statute on treason.

If I am giving comfort to our enemies I ought not to be in the Senate of the United States. If Mr. Murrow is giving comfort to our enemies he ought not to be brought into the homes of millions of Americans by the Columbia Broadcasting System.

This is a question which IT is not too difficult to resolve. What do the Communists think of me and what do the Communists think of Mr. Murrow?

One of us is on the side of American freedom and one is on the side of Communism and ~~mm~~ slavery.

The Communists have three official publications in America. These are not ordinary publications but they have been officially determined TO BE transmission belts from which the Communists in America, instructors of the party line the positions to be taken by the American communist writers, playwrights, broadcasters and hidden communists in the govt.

THE first of these is a booklet which I show you. The name of it "The main report delivered at the national conference of the Commie party USA"..published in New York in October 1953.

The very first page OF THE STATES THE ~~reports~~ situation created by the new Soviet peace initiatives "enhances the possibility of broadening the struggle against McCarthyism." On page 32 the report states;" A struggle against McCarthyism is developing currently along the following main lines...struggle against witch-hunting investigations , the McCarthy-McCarran type of ~~investigating~~ CONGRESSIONAL committees; defense of the victims ~~of~~

of McCarthyism such as Lattimore, Hiss etc; .... in addition there is the direct attack ON McCarthy himself..... In this report the Commies do not hesitate to instruct the comrades that [redacted] their fight on McCarthy is only the means to a larger end.

Again I quote: page 33.... "Our main task is to mobilize the masses for the defeat of the foreign and domestic policies of the Eisenhower Administration and the defeat of the Eisenhower regime itself.... The strrugggle against McCarthyism CONTRIBUTES TO THIS [redacted] general objective..."

One more quotation. On page 31 "since the elections McCarthyism has emerged as a menaceof major proportions..." You know what they mean. ... a menace to the Communist effort to overthrow the government by traitors from within.

Just for the momentwhat other aims do the communists set forth. They advocate the overthrow of the present government of western Europe... the abandonment of NATO...zsecuring the recognition of Red China in the United Nations...stopping our preparations for defense, keeping Communist teachers in our schools.

Now let us look a little further to see who is giving comfort to our enemies.

Here's the Communist Daily Worker of March 9th. containing 7 articles and a principle editorial attacking Mc. The same issue lists Mr. Murrow's program attacking me as one of "tonight's best bets on tv."

Here's the issue of March 10th..the day after Mr. Murrow made his attack on me. This single 8 page issue contains 11 seperate articles and the principle editorial attacking Mc.

Here's the issue of March 17th. Its principle front page article is an attack on Mc and its three other articles attack Mc. Its has a special article by Wm Z. Foster, former chief Commie party of America, now under indictment on charge of attempting to overthrow this government by force and violence. This article attacks Mc and praises Mr. E RM.

Here's the issue of March 26 it has two articles attacking witch hunting, three articles attacking Mc, a cartoon of Mc, and an article in praise of Mr. Edward R. Murrow.

Now I show you the Commie house organ "Political affairs". The lede article is a report dated Nov 21, 1953 of the national committee of the Commie party of the US attacking Mc .

Now you know who is fighting Mc. Who is fighting Murrow.

Owen Lattimore who has been named "a conscious articulate instrument ofthe Commie conspiracy" by the Sen. Internal Security Comm. He is now under criminal indictment for perjur~~ymmmmmmx~~ in regard to his testimony with respect to Commie activities. In his book, "Ordeal by Slander" he says I owe a very special debt to men I8ve never met. I must mention at lease E.R.M.".

Here is a book by Harold J. Lasky admittedly the greatest propagandist of our time in England, and a man who ewas expelled by the British Labor Party for Communist activites. This book is dedicated, and I quote "To my friends, ERM and Lionel Tichner, with affection".

I am perfectly willing to let the people of America decide who is giving comfort to the enemies".

McCarthy's Reply

APRIL 6th, 1954

MR. MURROW

Good Evening! This is See It Now, presented each week at this time by Alcoa, the Aluminum Company of America.

Tonight's report consists entirely of certain remarks by Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, and in order to present those remarks without interruption, we ask you now to look with us at this report from Alcoa.

MR. MURROW

One month ago tonight, we presented a report on Senator Joseph R. McCarthy. We labeled it as controversial. Most of that report consisted of words and pictures of the Senator. At that time we said, if the Senator believes we have done violence to his words or pictures, if he desires to speak, to answer himself, an opportunity will be afforded him on this program.

The Senator sought the opportunity, asked for a delay of three weeks because he said he was very busy and he wished adequate time to prepare his reply.

MR. MURROW (CTD)

We agreed. We supplied the Senator with a kinescope of that program of March 9 and with such scripts and recordings as he requested. We placed no restrictions upon the manner or method of the presentation of his reply and we suggested that we would not take time to comment on this particular program.

The Senator chose to make his reply on film. Here now is Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, junior Senator from Wisconsin!

SENATOR MC CARTHY

Good evening.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow, educational director of the Columbia Broadcasting System, devoted his program to an attack on the work of the United States Senate Investigating Committee and on me personally as its chairman, and over the past four years he had made repeated attacks upon me and those fighting Communists.

Of course, neither Joe McCarthy nor Edward R. Murrow is of any great importance as individuals. We are only important in our relation to the great struggle to preserve our American liberties.

The Senate Investigating Committee has forced out of government and out of important defense plants Communists engaged in the Soviet conspiracy.

fad

You know it's interesting to note that the viciousness of Murrow's attacks is in direct ratio to our success in digging out Communists.

Now, ordinarily, I would not take time out from the important work at hand to answer Murrow. However, in this case I feel justified in doing so because Murrow is a symbol, the leader and the cleverest of the jackal pack which is always found at the throat of anyone who dares to expose individual Communists and traitors.

I am compelled by the facts to say to you that Mr. Edward R. Murrow, as far back as twenty years ago, was engaged in propaganda for Communist causes. For example, the Institute of International Education, of which he was the acting director, was chosen to act as a representative by a Soviet agency to do a job which would normally be done by the Russian Secret Police.

Mr. Murrow sponsored a Communist school in Moscow. In the selection of American students and teachers who were to attend, Mr. Murrow's organization acted for the Russian espionage and propaganda organization known as Voks. V-O-K-S. Many of those selected were later exposed as Communists. Murrow's organization selected such notorious Communists as Isadore Bugin, David Zablodowsky (sp). Incidentally, Zablodowsky was forced out of the United Nations, when my chief counsel presented his case to the grand jury and gave a picture of his Communist activities.

SENATOR MC CARTHY (CTD)

Now, Mr. Murrow, by his own admission, was a member of the IWW - that's the Industrial Workers of the World - a terrorist organization cited as subversive by an attorney general of the United States, who stated that it was an organization which seeks (and I quote) "to alter the Government of the United States by unconstitutional means." Now, other government committees have had before them actors, screen writers, motion picture producers, and others who admitted Communist affiliations but pleaded youth or ignorance. Now, Mr. Murrow can hardly make the same plea. On March 9 of this year, Mr. Murrow, a trained reporter, who had traveled all over the world, who was the educational director of CBS, followed implicitly the Communist line as laid down in the last six months, laid down not only by the Communist Daily Worker, but by the Communist magazine Political Affairs and by the National Conference of the Communist Party of the United States of America. Now, the question: why is it important to you, the people of America, to know why the Educational Director and the Vice President of CBS so closely follows the Communist Party line? To answer that question we must turn back the pages of history. A little over a hundred years ago a little group of men in Europe conspired to deliver the world to a new system, to Communism.

SENATOR MC CARTHY (CTD)

Under their system, the individual is nothing, the family was nothing. God did not even exist. Their theory was that an all-powerful state should have the power of life or death over its citizens without even a trial, that everything and everybody belonged to the rulers of the state. They openly wrote - nothing secret about it - that in their efforts to gain power, they would be justified in doing anything. They would be justified in following the trail of deceit, lies, terror, murder, treason, blackmail. All these things were elevated to virtues in the Communist rule book.

If a convert to communism could be persuaded that he was a citizen of the world, it, of course would be much easier to make him a traitor to his own country.

Now, for 70 years the communist made little progress. Let me show you a map of the world as it stood in the middle of the First World War, 1917, before the Russian Revolution. You will see that there was not a single foot of ground on the face of the globe under the domination or control of the Communists, and bear in mind that this was only 36 years ago. In 1917, we were engaged in a great world war in defense of our way of life and in defense of American liberty.

SENATOR MC CARTHY (CTD)

The Kaiser was obliged to divide his armies and fight on both the eastern and western fronts. In the midst of the war, the Russian people overthrew their Czarist master and they set up a democratic form of government under the leadership of Alexander Kerensky. Now, Kerensky's government instantly pledged all-out support to the Allies. At this instant the Imperial German Government secretly financed the return to Russia of seven Communist exiles, led by Nicolai Lenin, exiles that had been forced to flee the country, a rather important event in the history of the world.

Now, once in Russia, by the same methods which the Communists are employing in the United States today, they undermined the army, they undermined the navy, the civilian heads of the government, and in 100 days, those seven communists were literally the masters of Russia.

Now, with all of the wealth of the nation at their command, they proceeded to finance Communist parties in every country of the world.

They trained Communists in every country in the world. Their sole purpose was to infiltrate the government, and once Communists were in government, they in turn brought others in.

Now, let us look at the map of the world as it was twenty years ago. At that time there was one country with 180 million people in Communist chains. Now, let us look at a map of the world as of tonight, this 6th day of April 1954: Over one-third of the earth's area under Communist control and 800 million people in Communist chains, in addition to the 800 million Communist chains in Europe and Asia.

Finally, the Communists have gained a foothold and a potential military base here in our half of the world, in Guatemala, with the Communists seeping down in to Honduras. My good friends, how much of this was achieved by military force and how much was achieved by traitors and Communist-line propagandists in our own government and in other free governments? The Communists took over Czechoslovakia without firing a shot. This they did by the infiltration of Communists into the Czechoslovakian Government also.

And listen to what a high official in the anti-Communist government of Czechoslovakia had to say about the Communist enslavement of Czechoslovakia. Here is what he says: He said, "In my country, the pattern was identical to what it is in the United States. If anyone, before the Communists took over, dared to attack those Communists who were preparing and shaping the policy of my government, shaping the policy to betray my people, he was promptly attacked and destroyed by a combination of Communists, fellow travellers and those unthinking people who thought they were serving the cause of liberalism and progress, but who were actually serving the cause of the most reactionary credo of all times, Communism." Now, shifting to another area of the world, to the East, how about this vast land area and the teaming masses of China? Let's just take a look at that map, if you please. Keep in mind that a few short years ago China was a free nation, friendly to the United States.

Now, let's take a look at that map. Were those 400 million Chinese captured by force of arms? Certainly not. They were delivered, delivered to Communist slave masters by the jackal pack of Communist-line propagandists, including the friends of Mr. Edward R. Murrow, who day after day shouted to the world that the Chinese Communists were agrarian reformers and that our ally, the Republic of China, represented everything that was evil and wicked.

Now, my good friends, if there were no Communists in our government, would we have consented to and connived to turn over all of our Chinese friends to the Russians? Now, my good friends, if there had been no Communists in our government, would we have rewarded them with all of Manchuria, half of the Kurile Islands and one-half of Korea?

Now, how many Americans, how many Americans have died and will die because of this sellout to Communist Russia, God only knows.

SEN. MC CARTHY:

If there were no Communists in our government, why did we delay for 18 months, delay our research on the hydrogen bomb, even though our intelligence agencies were reporting day after day that the Russians were feverishly pushing their development of the H Bomb? And may I say to America tonight that our nation may well die, our nation may well die because of that 18 months' deliberate delay. And I ask you, who caused it? Was it loyal Americans or was it traitors in our government?

It is often said by the Left Wing that it is sufficient to fight Communism in Europe and Asia, but that Communism is not a domestic American issue. But the record, my good friends, is that the damage has been done by cleverly calculated subversion at home, and not from abroad. It is this problem of subversion that our Committee faces.

Let us very quickly glance at some of the work of our committee, some of the work that has been done in slightly over a year's time: for example, 238 witnesses were examined in public session: 367 witnesses examined in executive session: 84 witnesses refused to testify as to Communist activities on the ground that if they told the truth they might go to jail: 24 wintesses of Communist backgrounds have been discharged from jobs in which they were handling secret, top-secret confidential material--individuals who were exposed before our committee.

SEN. MC CARTHY:

Of course, you can't measure the success of a committee by a box score, based on the number of Communist heads that have rolled from secret jobs. It is completely impossible to even estimate the effect on our government of the day-to-day plodding exposure of communists--and that is, of course, why the Murrow's bleed.

For example, the exposure of only one Fifth Amendment Communist in the government Printing Office, an office having access to secret material from almost every government agency, resulted in an undisclosed number of suspensions. It resulted in the removal of the loyalty board and the revamping of all the loyalty rules so that we do have apparently a good, tight loyalty setup in the Printing Office at this time.

Also, a disclosure of Communists in the military and the radar laboratories resulted in the abolition of the Pentagon Board, which had cleared and ordered reinstated Communists who had for years been handling government secrets.

Also, as a result of those hearings, Army orders have been issued to prevent the recurrence of the Major Peress scandal which was exposed by the committee.

Now, to attempt to evaluate the effect of the work on an investigating committee would be about as impossible as to attempt to evaluate the effect of well-trained watch dogs upon the activities of potential burglars.

SEN. MC CARTHY:

We Americans live in a free world, a world where we can stand as individuals, where we can go to the church of our own choice and worship God as we please, each in his own fashion, where we can freely speak our opinions on any subject or on any man.

Now, whether we shall continue to so live has come to issue now. We will soon know whether we are going to go on living that kind of life or whether we are going to live the kind of life that 800-million slaves live under Communist domination.

The issue is simple: it is the issue of life or death for our civilization.

Now, Mr. Murrow said on this program--(and I quote)- He said: "The actions of the junior Senator from Wisconsin have given considerable comfort to the enemy." That's the language of our statute of treason, rather strong language.

If I am giving comfort to our enemies, I ought not to be in the Senate.

SEN. MC CARTHY

If on the other hand, Mr. Murrow is giving comfort to our enemies, he ought not to be brought into the homes of millions of Americans by the Columbia Broadcasting System. This is a question which can be resolved with very little difficulty. What do the Communists think of me and what do the Communists think of Mr. Murrow? One of us is on the side of the Communists: the other is against the Communists, against Communist slavery.

The Communists have 3 official publications in America. These are not ordinary publications. They have been officially determined to be the transmission belts through which Communists in America are instructed as to the party line, or the position which Communists writers and playwrights must take. Also, of course, telecasters, broadcasters. The first of these is a booklet which I would like to show you, if I may. It's entitled "The Main Report Delivered at the National Conference of the Communist Party of the USA," published in New York in October 1953. The report states: (QUOTE) "the struggle against McCarthyism is developing currently along the following main lines." Keep in mind this is the Communist publication giving instructions to the members of the Party on the following main lines: Struggle against witch-hunting, struggle against investigations of the McCarthy-McCarran type, and defense of the victims of McCarthyism, such as Owen Lattimore, etc. In addition there is the direct attack on McCarthy."

SEN. MC CARTHY:

May I ask you, does that sound somewhat like the program of Edward R. Murrow on March 9, over this same station?

In this report the Communists do not hesitate to instruct, to instruct the comrades that their fight on McCarthy is only a means to a larger end. Again let me quote from the insturctions from the Communist Party to its membership, from page 33. (I quote:) "Our main task is to mobilize the masses for the defeat of the foreign and domestic policies of the Eisenhower Administration and for the defeat of the Eisenhower regime itself. The struggle against McCarthyism contributes to this general objective."

There's one more quotation, if I may, from page 31 of these instructions from the Communist Party to its members (I quote:) "Since the elections, McCarthyism has emerged as a menace of major proportions." I think maybe we know what the Communist Party means by a menace of major proportions. They mean a menace of major proportions. They mean a menace of major proportions to the Communist party.

Now let's take 30 seconds or so, if we may, to look a little further to see who is giving comfort to our enemies. Here is a Communist Daily Worker of March 9, containing 7 articles and a principal editorial, all attacking McCarthy, and the same issue lists Mr. Murrow's program as -- listen to this -- "one of tonight's best bets on TV."

SEN. MC CARTHY

And then just one more. Here's the issue of March 17. Its principal front-page article is an attack on McCarthy. It has 3 other articles attacking McCarthy. It is a special article by William Z. Foster, the head of the Communist Party in America, and now under indictment on charges of attempting to overthrow this government by force and violence. This article by Foster, praising Edward R. Murrow.

Just one more, if I may impose on your time, the issue of March 26. This issue has 2 articles attacking witch-hunting. 3 articles attacking McCarthy, a cartoon of McCarthy, and an article in praise of Mr. Edward R. Murrow.

And now I would like to also show you the Communist political organ, entitled Political Affairs. The lead article is a report dated November 21, 1953 of the National Committee of the Communist Party of the United States, attacking McCarthy and telling how the loyal members of the Communist Party can serve their cause by getting rid of this awful McCarthy.

Now, as you know, Owen Lattimore has been named as a conscious, articulate instrument of the Communist conspiracy. He has been so named by the Senate Internal Security Committee. He is now under criminal indictment for perjury. With respect to testimony in regard to his Communist activities, in his book "Ordeal by Slander", he says -- and I think I can quote him verbatim -- he says: "I owe a very special debt to men I have never met. I must mention at least Edward R. Murrow."

SENATOR MC CARTHY

Then there is the book by Harold Laski, admittedly the greatest Communist propagandist of our time in England. In his book, "Reflections on the Revolution of Our Times," he dedicates the book "To my friends, E. R. Murrow and Lanham Tichener, with affection."

I am perfectly willing to let the American people decide who is giving comfort to our enemies. Much of the documentation which we have here on the table tonight will not be available to the American people by way of television. However, this will all be made available to you within the next two weeks.

In conclusion, may I say that under the shadow of the most horrible and destructive weapons that man has ever devised, we fight to save our country, our homes, our churches, our children. To this cause, ladies and gentlemen, I have dedicated and will continue to dedicate all that I have and all that I am, and I want to assure you that I will not be deterred by the attacks of the Murrows, the Lattimores, the Fosters, the Daily Worker, or the Communist Party itself.

Now, I make no claim to leadership. In complete humility, I do ask you and every American who loves this country to join with me.

MR. MURROW:

SENATOR MC CARTHY (CTD)

You know it's interesting to note that the viciousness of Murrow's attacks is in direct ratio to our success in digging out Communists.

Now, ordinarily, I would not take time out from the important work at hand to answer Murrow. However, in this case I feel justified in doing so because Murrow is a symbol, the leader and the cleverest of the jackel pack which is always found at the throat of anyone who dares to expose individual Communists and traitors.

I am compelled by the facts to say to you that Mr. Edward R. Murrow, as far back as twenty years ago, was engaged in propaganda for Communist causes. For example, the Institute of International Education, of which he was the acting director, was chosen to act as a representative by a Soviet agency to do a job which would normally be done by the Russian Secret Police.

Mr. Murrow sponsored a Communist school in Moscow. In the selection of American students and teachers who were to attend, Mr. Morrow's organization acted for the Russian espionage and propaganda organization known as Voks. V-O-K-S. Many of those selected were later exposed as Communists. Murrow's organization selected such notorious Communists as Isadore Bugin, David Zablodowsky (sp). Incidentally, Zablodowsky was forced out of the United Nations, when my chief counsel presented his case to the grand jury and gave a picture of his Communist activities.

SENATOR MC CARTHY (CTD)

Now, Mr. Murrow, by his own admission, was a member of the IWW - that's the Industrial workers of the World - a terrorist organization cited as subversive by an attorney general of the United States, who stated that it was an organization which seeks (and I quote) "to alter the Government of the United States by unconstitutional means". Now, other government committees have had before them actors, screen writers, motion picture producers, and others who admitted Communist affiliations but pleaded youth or ignorance. Now, Mr. Murrow can hardly make the same plea. On March 9 of this year, Mr. Murrow, a trained reporter, who had traveled all over the world, who was the educational director of CBS, followed implicitly the Communist line as laid down in the last six months, laid down not only by the Communist Daily Worker, but by the Communist magazine Political Affairs and by the National Conference of the Communist Party of the United States of America. Now, the question: why is it important to you, the people of America, to know why the Educational Director and the Vice President of CBS so closely follows the Communist Party line? To answer that question we must turn back the pages of history. A little over a hundred years ago a little group of men in Europe conspired to deliver the world to a new system, to Communism.

SENATOR MC CARTHY (CTD)

Under their system, the individual is nothing, the family was nothing, God did not even exist. Their theory was that an all-powerful state should have the power of life or death over its citizens without even a trial, that everything and everybody belonged to the rulers of the state. They openly wrote - nothing secret about it - that in their efforts to gain power, they would be justified in doing anything. They would be justified in following the trail of deceit, lies, terror, murder, treason, blackmail. All these things were elevated to virtues in the Communist rule book.

If a convert to communism could be persuaded that he was a citizen of the world, it, of course would be much easier to make him a traitor to his own country.

Now, for 70 years the communist made little progress. Let me show you a map of the world as it stood in the middle of the First World War, 1917, before the Russian Revolution. You will see that there was not a single foot of ground on the face of the globe under the domination or control of the Communists, and bear in mindthat this was only 36 years ago. In 1917, we were engaged in a great world war in defense of our way of life and in defense of American liberty.

SENATOR MC CARTHY (CTD)

The Kaiser was obliged to divide his armies and fight on both the eastern and western fronts. In the midst of the war, the Russian people overthrew their Czarist master and they set up a democratic form of government under the leadership of Alexander Kerensky. Now, Kerensky's government instantly pledged all-out support to the Allies. At this instant the Imperial German Government secretly financed the return to Russia of seven Communist exiles, led by Nicolai Lenin, exiles that had been forced to flee the country, a rather important event in the history of the world.

Now, once in Russia, by the same methods which the Communists are employing in the United States today, they undermined the army, they undermined the navy, the civilian heads of the government, and in 100 days, those seven communists were literally the masters of Russia.

Now, with all of the wealth of the nation at their command, they proceded to finance Communist parties in every country of the world.

SEN. MC CARTHY:

They sent to those countries trained propagandists and spies. In every country they, of course, had to find glib, clever men like Edward R. Murrow who would sponsor invitations to students and teachers to attend indoctrination schools in Moscow, exactly as Murrow has done.

They trained Communists in every country in the world. Their sole purpose was to infiltrate the government, and once Communists were in government, they in turn brought others in.

Now, let us look at the map of the world as it was twenty years ago. At that time there was one country with 180 million people in Communist chains. Now, let us look at a map of the world as of tonight, this 6th day of April 1954: Over one-third of the earth's area under Communist control and 800 million people in Communist chains, in addition to the 800 million Communist chains in Europe and Asia.

Finally, the Communists have gained a foothold and a potential military base here in our half of the world, in Guatemala, with the Communists seeping down in to Honduras. My good friends, how much of this was achieved by military force and how much was achieved by traitors and Communist-line propagandists in our own government and in other free governments? Let us start in Europe, if we may?

G

SEN. MC CARTHY:(Cont'd)

They took by military force a little piece of Finland; in the same way they took three small Baltic states, Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia.

They took half of Poland in the same way. They acquired the rest of Poland through Polish traitors and Communists in our own government, who gave American dollars and American support to the Communists in Poland. They took over Romania, Bulgaria and Hungary, without firing a single shot. They did this by the infiltration of Communists in the key spots in the governments. The Communists took over Czechoslavakia without firing a shot. This they did by the infiltration of Communists into the Czechoslovakian Government also.

And listen to what a high official in the anti-Communist government of Czechoslovakia had to say about the Communist enslavement of Czechoslovakia. Here is what he says: He said, "In my country, the pattern was identical to what it is in the United States. If anyone, before the Communists took over, dared to attack those Communists who were preparing and shaping the policy of my government, shaping the policy to betray my people, he was promptly attacked and destroyed by a combination of Communists, fellow travellers and those unthinking people who thought they were serving the cause of liberalism and progress, but who were actually serving the cause of the most reactionary credo of all times, Communism." Still quoting: "Because of those people, night has fallen upon my nation and slavery upon my people."

G

SEN. MC CARTHY:

Now, shifting to another area of the world, to the East, how about this vast land area and the teaming masses of China? Let's just take a look at that map, if you please. Keep in mind that a few short years ago China was a free nation, friendly to the United States.

Now, let's take a look at that map. Were those 400 million Chinese captured by force of arms? Certainly not. They were delivered, delivered to Communist slave masters by the jackal pack of Communist-line propagandists, including the friends of Mr. Edward R. Murrow, who day after day shouted to the world that the Chinese Communists were agrarian reformers and that our ally, the Republic of China, represented everything that was evil and wicked.

Now, my good friends, if there were no Communists in our government, would we have consented to and connived to turn over all of our Chinese friends to the Russians? Now, my good friends, if there had been no Communists in our government, would we have rewarded them with all of Manchuria, half of the Kurile Islands and one-half of Korea?

Now, how many Americans, how many Americans have died and will die because of this sellout to Communist Russia, God only knows.

G.

SEN. MC CARTHY:

If there were no Communists in our government, why did we delay for 18 months, delay our research on the hydrogen bomb, even though our intelligence agencies were reporting day after day that the Russians were feverishly pushing their development of the H Bomb? And may I say to America tonight that our nation may well die, our nation may well die because of that 18 months' deliberate delay. And I ask you, who caused it? Was it loyal Americans or was it traitors in our government?

It is often said by the Left Wing that it is sufficient to fight Communism in Europe and Asia, but that Communism is not a domestic American issue. But the record, my good friends, is that the damage has been done by cleverly calculated subversion at home, and not from abroad. It is this problem of subversion that our Committee faces.

Let us very quickly glance at some of the work of our committee, some of the work that has been done in slightly over a year's time; for example, 238 witness were examined in public session; 367 witnesses examined in executive session; 84 witnesses refused to testify as to Communist activities on the ground that if they told the truth they might go to jail; 24 witnesses of Communist backgrounds have been discharged from jobs in which they were handling secret, top-secret confidential material--individuals who were exposed before our committee.

G

SEN. MC CARTHY:

Of course, you can't measure the success of a committee by a box score, based on the number of Communist heads that have rolled from secret jobs. It is completely impossible to even estimate the effect on our government of the day-to-day plodding exposure of communists--and that is, of course, why the Murrow's bleed.

For example, the exposure of only one Fifth Amendment Communist in the government Printing Office, an office having access to secret material from almost every government agency, resulted in an undisclosed number of suspensions. It resulted in the removal of the loyalty board and the revamping of all the loyalty rules so that we do have apparently a good, tight loyalty setup in the Printing Office at this time.

Also, a disclosure of Communists in the military and the radar laboratories resulted in the abolition of the Pentagon Board, which had cleared and ordered reinstated Communists who had for years been handling government secrets.

Also, as a result of those hearings, Army orders have been issued to prevent the recurrence of the Major Peress scandal which was exposed by the committee.

Now, to attempt to evaluate the effect of the work of an investigating committee would be about as impossible as to attempt to evaluate the effect of well-trained watch dogs upon the activities of potential burglars.

G

SEN. MC CARTHY:

We Americans live in a free world, a world where we can stand as individuals, where we can go to the church of our own choice and worship God as we please, each in his own fashion, where we can freely speak our opinions on any subject or on any man.

Now, whether we shall continue to so live has come to issue now. We will soon know whether we are going to go on living that kind of life or whether we are going to live the kind of life that 800-million slaves live under Communist domination.

The issue is simple: it is the issue of life or death for our civilization.

Now, Mr. Murrow said on this program--(and I quote)-He said: "The actions of the junior Senator from Wisconsin have given considerable comfort to the enemy." That's the language of our statute of treason, rather strong language.

If I am giving comfort to our enemies, I ought not to be in the Senate.

G

SENATOR MC CARTHY:

If on the other hand, Mr. Murrow is giving comfort to our enemies, he ought not to be brought into the homes of millions of Americans by the Columbia Broadcasting System. This is a question which can be resolved with very little difficulty. What do the Communists think of me and what do the Communists think of Mr. Murrow? One of us is on the side of the Communists; the other is against the Communists, against Communist slavery.

The Communists have 3 official publications in America. These are not ordinary publications. They have been officially determined to be the transmission belts through which Communists in America are instructed as to the party line, or the position which Communist writers and playwrights must take. Also, of course, telecasters, broadcasters. The first of these is a booklet which I would like to show you, if I may. It's entitled "The Main Report Delivered at the National Conference of the Communist Party of the USA," published in New York in October 1953. The report states: (QUOTE) "the struggle against McCarthyism is developing currently along the following main lines." Keep in mind this is the Communist publication giving instructions to the members of the Party on the following main lines: Struggle against witch-hunting, struggle against investigations of the McCarthy-McCarran type, and defense of the victims of McCarthyism, such as Owen Lattimore, etc. In addition there is the direct attack on McCarthy."

May I ask you, does that sound somewhat like the program of Edward R. Murrow on March 9 over this same station?

In this report the Communists do not hesitate to instruct, to instruct the comrades that their fight on McCarthy is only a means to a larger end. Again let me quote from the instructions from the Communist Party to its membership, from page 33, (I quote): "Our main task is to mobilize the masses for the defeat of the foreign and domestic policies of the Eisenhower Administration and for the defeat of the Eisenhower regime itself. The struggle against McCarthyism contributes to this general objective."

There's one more quotation, if I may, from page 31 of these instructions from the Communist Party to its members (I quote): "Since the elections, McCarthyism has emerged as a menace of major proportions." I think maybe we know what the Communist Party means by a menace of major proportions. They mean a menace of major proportions. They mean a menace of major proportions to the Communist Party.

Now let's take 30 seconds or so, if we may, to look a little further to see who is giving comfort to our enemies. Here is a Communist Daily Worker of March 9, containing 7 articles and a principal editorial, all attacking McCarthy, and the same issue lists Mr. Murrow's program as -- listen to this-- "one of tonight's best bets on TV."

-more- jn

And then just one more. Here's the issue of March 17. Its principal front-page article is an attack on McCarthy. It has 3 other articles attacking McCarthy. It is a special article by William Z. Foster, the head of the Communist party in America, and now under indictment on charges of attempting to overthrow this government by force and violence. This article by Foster, praising Edward R. Murrow.

Just one more, if I may impose on your time, the issue of March 26. This issue has 2 articles attacking witch-hunting, 3 articles attacking McCarthy, a cartoon of McCarthy, and an article in praise of Mr. Edward R. Murrow.

And now I would like to also show you the Communist political organ, entitled Political Affairs. The lead article is a report dated November 21, 1953 of the National Committee of the Communist Party of the United States, attacking McCarthy and telling how the loyal members of the Communist Party can serve their cause by getting rid of this awful McCarthy.

Now, as you know, Owen Lattimore has been named as a conscious, articulate instrument of the Communist conspiracy. He has been so named by the Senate Internal Security Committee. He is now under criminal indictment for perjury. With respect to testimony in regard to his Communist activities, in his book "Ordeal by Slander", he says -- and I think I can quote him verbatim -- he says: "I owe a very special debt to men I have never met. I must mention at least Edward R. Murrow."

Then there is the book by Harold Laski, admittedly the greatest Communist propagandist of our time in England. In his book, "Reflections on the Revolution of Our Times," he dedicates the book "To my friends, E. R. Murrow and Lanham Tichener, with affection."

I am perfectly willing to let the American people decide who is giving comfort to our enemies. Much of the documentation which we have here on the table tonight will not be available to the American people by way of television. However, this will all be made available to you within the next two weeks.

In conclusion, may I say that under the shadow of the most horrible and destructive weapons that man has ever devised, we fight to save our country, our homes, our churches, our children. To this cause, ladies and gentlemen, I have dedicated and will continue to dedicate all that I have and all that I am, and I want to assure you that I will not be deterred by the attacks of the Murrows, the Lattimores, the Fosters, the Daily Worker, or the Communist Party itself.

Now, I make no claim to leadership. In complete humility, I do ask you and every American who loves this country to join with me.

MR. MURROW:

That was a film of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, presented at our invitation. It was in response to a program we presented on March 9th. This reporter undertook to make no comment at this time, but naturally reserved his right to do so subsequently. Good night and Good Luck!

jn

Good evening. Mr. Edward R. Murrow, Educational Director of the Columbia Broadcasting System devoted his program to an attack on the United States Investigating Committee and on me personally as its chairman. Over the past 4 years he has made repeated attacks on me and those fighting Communism. And of course neither Joe McCarthy and Edward R. Murrow is of any great importance as individuals. We are only important in our relation to the great struggle to preserve our American liberties. The Senate Investigating Committee has forced out of government and out of important defence plants Communists engaged in the Soviet conspiracy. And now its interesting to note that the viciousness of Murrow's attacks is in direct ratio to our success in digging out Communists. What does the Communists think of me and what does the Communists think Of Murrow.

April 6, 1954

SENATOR JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY:

What do the Communists think of me and what do the Communists think of Mr. Murrow. One of us is on the side of the Communists. The other is against the Communists. (~~Youth's Communist Library~~ against Communists slightly) Now, the Communists have 3 official publications in America. These are not ordinary publications. In his book "Reflections On The Revolution Of Our Times" he dedicates the book "To my friends, E. R. Murrow and Lanham Tichner with affection." I am perfectly willing that the American people decide who is giving comfort to our enemies. Much of the documentation that we have here on the table tonight will not be available to the American people by way of television. However, this will all be made available to you within the next two weeks.

In conclusion, may I say that under the shadow of the most horrible and destructive weapons that man has ever devised, we fight to save our country, our homes, our churches, and our children. To this cause, ladies and gentlemen, I am dedicated and will continue to dedicate all that I have and all that I am. And I want to assure you that I will not be deterred by the attacks of the Murrows, the Lattimores; the Fosters, the Daily Worker, or the Communist Party itself. Now, I make no claim to leadership. In complete humility I do ask you and every American who loves this country to join with me.

SENATOR JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY:

For Release May 15, 1954

The Columbia Broadcasting System today reimbursed Senator Joseph R. McCarthy for expenses incurred by him in connection with the preparation of his filmed television appearance on SEE IT NOW April 6, 1954. This appearance was in response to Edward R. Murrow's invitation on SEE IT NOW March 9, 1954 to Senator McCarthy to reply to Mr. Murrow's report on Senator McCarthy. Senator McCarthy's request for payment was received by CBS on May 10, 1954. In reimbursing Senator McCarthy, the Columbia Broadcasting System issued the following statement:

Pursuant to its long-established policy of fairness and balance in the treatment of controversial issues, the CBS Radio and Television networks provide facilities and technical assistance reasonably needed by those who are invited by CBS to reply to positions taken in programs produced and controlled by CBS.

If the original CBS broadcast to which reply is made involved a speech or statements by a spokesman not connected with CBS, the CBS policy is to limit the reply to the same type of broadcast as the original, using the same general method of presentation and the production facilities of CBS. An example of this type of broadcast is MAN OF THE WEEK, a program series produced and controlled by CBS in which a panel of news experts interviews an outstanding person from the field of public affairs.

Where, however, as in the SEE IT NOW program, the original broadcast was by a member of the staff of CBS, a person who is invited to reply is afforded his choice of method of presentation and of using either the production facilities of CBS or outside facilities. If, as occurred in the present case, film prepared through outside facilities is chosen, CBS believes that its policy of fairness and balance compels it to reimburse the individual for reasonable and necessary costs. Normally CBS would insist that where outside facilities, and hence financial reimbursement by CBS, are involved, there must be prior discussion with CBS in order that there be advance agreement concerning the type of presentation for reply and the costs involved. In the case of Senator McCarthy, there was no such prior discussion or agreement and CBS was not informed until shortly before his broadcast that Senator McCarthy intended to film his broadcast through outside facilities. However, since the policy of prior agreement in these circumstances had not yet been enunciated by CBS, CBS believes it would not be proper to refuse to reimburse Senator McCarthy on this ground.

Special time is frequently provided by CBS to outside individuals or organizations for the purpose of furthering a point of view in a controversial area. These cases are distinct from programs produced and controlled by CBS. In these special broadcasts, CBS will supply such camera and production facilities as may be reasonably necessary for a live broadcast. Any props or other visual materials, or any film which may be used during the broadcast, must be paid for by those using the special time period. The same conditions will apply to those who are invited to answer such special broadcasts.

CBS believes these applications of its policy of fairness and balance are in keeping with the American tradition of fair play.

Dear Mr. Foster:

We appreciate your suggestion, in your letter of March 25, that the March 9 "See It Now" program be repeated, under sponsorship of the Block Drug Company, 10-10:30 on April 6 immediately preceding Senator McCarthy's reply to the March 9 program.

While the idea appears to us at first glance to be attractive, as well as flattering, we have reluctantly concluded that such a network repeat would create a number of important problems. The disadvantages of your proposal, therefore, seem on the whole to outweigh the advantages.

We are very grateful for your offer, but in the circumstances we believe it best that we decline it.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow and Mr. Friendly:

We know that Senator McCarthy is scheduled to occupy "See It Now's" time on the CBS-TV network from 10:30 to 11:00 p.m. on Tuesday, April 6th. We understand that this time is being made available to Senator McCarthy specifically to reply to Mr. Murrow's show of March 9th.

Since four weeks will have elapsed between the time of the original telecast and Senator McCarthy's reply to it on April 6th, and since a great many of the viewing public did not see the show of March 9th, the sponsor of the preceding half hour on Tuesday night on CBS-TV believes that an important public service could be rendered by repeating the show of March 9th on April 6th, just preceding Senator McCarthy's reply to it.

The Block Drug Company has authorized me, as their advertising agent, to offer you the time between 10:00 and 10:30 on the CBS-TV network on Tuesday night, April 6th. This is the time in which the Block Drug Company now sponsors "Danger" on behalf of Amm-i-dent Toothpaste.

This offer, of course, depends on the solution of many problems concerning details on costs, commercials, etc. Once we are in agreement that you and the Columbia Broadcasting System believe that this re-programming of the March 9th "See It Now" show into "Danger's" time on April 6th is feasible, I am confident that we can then quickly resolve the details.

We will have to meet very quickly together to discuss this matter and finalize it, if it appears to you that there is likelihood of its becoming a reality.

Sincerely yours,

DRAFT

I had no doubt that my offer to you of time to reply to my broadcast on SEE IT NOW March 9, which I made at the outset of that program, was well known to you.

In answer to your request, and in accordance with my offer and CBS policies, we will make time available to you on the same program this coming Tuesday, March 16.

You may use all or any part of the thirty minutes occupied by SEE IT NOW, less the time customarily used by me in introducing and closing the program and the time allotted to commercial messages.

You may make your appearance before the cameras in either Washington or New York.

I will make no comment on your statement in the time used by me during the broadcast.

Mr. , (address - phone), is available to meet with you or your appointed representative at the earliest possible moment for the purpose of making the customary arrangements.

Questions: Should the final paragraph have some reference to FCC requirements:

Should we give a deadline for the acceptance of this invitation or the final working out of the arrangements?

To Senator Joseph McCarthy.

Word has reached us through the public print that you propose to have ~~Bill~~ William F. Jr. Buckley respond to our television report of last week. Permit me to remind you of the language used in the original public invitation: "If the Senator believes we have done violence to his words or pictures, desires to speak, or answer himself, an opportunity will be afforded him on this program." This was a personal invitation. If you are unable or unwilling to appear on the program on March 16th you are hereby invited to appear the following week March 23rd

CBS REIMBURSES SEN. JOSEPH McCARTHY FOR EXPENSES INCURRED IN PREPARATION OF FILMED REPLY TO MURROW'S REPORT

The Columbia Broadcasting System Saturday, May 15, reimbursed Senator Joseph R. McCarthy for expenses incurred by him in connection with the preparation of his filmed television appearance on "See It Now" April 6, 1954. This appearance was in response to Edward R. Murrow's invitation on "See It Now" March 9, 1954, to Senator McCarthy to reply to Mr. Murrow's report on Senator McCarthy. Senator McCarthy's request for payment was received by CBS on May 10, 1954. In reimbursing Senator McCarthy, the Columbia Broadcasting System issued the following statement:

Pursuant to its long-established policy of fairness and balance in the treatment of controversial issues, the CBS Radio and Television networks provide facilities and technical assistance reasonably needed by those who are invited by CBS to reply to positions taken in programs produced and controlled by CBS.

NEW YORK, APRIL 23 (AP)-SEN.JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY (R-WIS) SAID TODAY HE'LL HAND THE ALUMINUM CO. OF AMERICA THE BILL FOR HIS FILMED TELEVISION REBUTTAL TO CBS COMMENTATOR EDWARD R. MURROW.

ALCOA SPONSORS MURROW'S PROGRAM.

"I'LL SUBMIT THE BILL TO ALCOA," MCCARTHY SAID IN WASHINGTON. "THEY PAID MORE FOR MURROW'S ATTACK ON ME THAN THIS WOULD AMOUNT TO, AND THEY SHOULD PAY IT."

COST OF THE 25-MINUTE FILM HAS BEEN ESTIMATED AT $6,000 TO $7,500.

MCCARTHY SAID HE DID NOT KNOW HOW MUCH THE BILL WAS BUT SAID HE WILL SEE THAT THE FOX FILM STUDIO GETS ITS MONEY.

"I'M RESPONSIBLE FOR THE BILL IN THE FIRST INSTANCE," THE SENATOR SAID, BUT ADDED HE BELIEVED IT ONLY FAIR THAT ALCOA DEFRAY THE COST.

"WHETHER I WOULD SUE THEM OR NOT, I DON'T KNOW, BECAUSE OF THE COST AND TIME A SUIT WOULD REQUIRE," MCCARTHY ADDED.

MURROW HAD CRITICIZED THE SENATOR'S METHODS ON HIS CBS-TV PROGRAM, "SEE IT NOW." HE INVITED THE SENATOR TO MAKE A REPLY, AND MCCARTHY DID SO IN A FILM MADE AT FOX MOVIETONE STUDIOS HERE.

SUBSEQUENTLY THERE AROSE THE QUESTION OF WHO WOULD PAY FOR THE FILM.

ALCOA SAID CBS RECEIVED A FIXED FEE FOR THE PROGRAM EACH WEEK AND PRODUCTION ARRANGEMENTS WERE UP TO IT. CBS SAID, IN TURN, IT HAD NOT BEEN ASKED TO PAY, AND MURROW ASSERTED HE PERSONALLY WOULD NOT FOOT THE BILL.

YESTERDAY A FOX FILM SPOKESMAN SAID THE BILL HAD BEEN SENT TO MCCARTHY AT THE REQUEST OF ROY COHN, CHIEF COUNSEL TO THE SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE HEADED BY MCCARTHY.

Attached is some language which you had written for your press reply to Senator McCarthy, but the beginning of which was not used. I am sending it along on the chance you may have misplaced your copy and also because I thought it might help you in your writing chore this afternoon.

ED

Statement by Edward R. Murrow on Senator McCarthy's attack on him on "See It Now" April 6, 1954.

Senator McCarthy appears to be hurting and running. His performance tonight was typical; he made no answer to a documented report which consisted mainly of his own voice and pictures in context. He proved again that anyone who exposes him, anyone who does not share his hysterical disregard for decency and human dignity and the rights guaranteed by the Constitution, must be a Communist or at best a fellow traveller. I fully expected this treatment. The Senator couldn't even get my present relationship with CBS straight. He repeatedly referred to me as the Educational Director and Vice-President of the Columbia Broadcasting System, positions I have not held since 1937 and 1947, respectively. If his massive research, for which he requested a month's delay in his appearance, could not get those facts straight, it is reasonable to assume that he is in error in other areas.

The Senator has made me a member of a rather distinguished company; he has attacked in similar vein, "The

Streamers for letters

Milwaukee Journal", "The Washington Post", "Time" magazine, "Commonweal", the Alsop brothers, General of the Army George C. Marshall, and former Senator William Benton.

The Senator ran from his law suit against Mr. Benton, presumably because he cannot afford to testify under oath. He ran from his statement that if the existing law did not compel the radio and television networks to do what he wanted them to do, he would have the law changed.

I require no lectures from the Junior Senator from Wisconsin upon the evils of Communism. Having watched the aggressive forces at work in western Europe; having had friends in eastern Europe butchered and driven into exile; having broadcast from London in 1943 that the Russians were responsible for the Katyn Massacre; having told the story of the Russian refusal to allow allied aircraft to land on Russian fields after dropping supplies to those who rose in Warsaw and were betrayed by the Russians, and having been denounced by the Russian radio for these reports, I cannot feel that I require instructions from the Senator in the evils of Communism.

We fear the aggressive forces of world Communism, and rightly so. But in this climate we might well remember something that Mr. Churchill once said: "If we spend too much time debating the past we might lose the future". And even more appropriate is this quotation of Adolph Hitler: "The great strength of the totalitarian state is that it will force those who fear it to imitate it". We in this country are not going to imitate the totalitarian state of either the right or the left.

A

Having searched my conscience and my files, I can find no evidence that I have betrayed the oath I once took to this country. Most of my adult life has been spent either in education or in broadcasting. Most of what I have said is a matter of record. I have not always been right, not always wise, but I believe that record will bear scrutiny, ~~and I would welcome the opportunity to have it examined under oath.~~

A

Here are certain specific comments on points raised by Senator McCarthy tonight

I am offering no new charge against Sen McCarthy at this time. I do not [illegible] this proceeding to

The Senator makes ~~four specific charges against me of Communist association. To quote a famous American, let's look at the record.~~

1. One charge is that by my own admission I was a member of the IWW. That is false. Iwas never a member of the IWW. I never applied for membership. ~~I never paid dues.~~ The facts are these. In summers during college and during one year before college in the mid twenties, I worked in lumber camps in the Pacific Northwest. The remnants of the old World War I IWW movement were still found among lumber workers of that area. I worked with ~~such men, worked with~~ them in lumbering and I have so stated in years past. ~~I was also sympathetic with their efforts to increase wages and improve working conditions, theirs and mine.~~ But never was I a member or supporter of their organization nor did I ever work with that organization.

2. Another charge is that Professor Harold Laski dedicated a book to me. That is true. The title of the book is "Reflections on the Revolution of Our Time" published in this country in 1943. Professor Laski was a British scholar and Socialist politician. He was a friend of mine. He is dead. He was a Socialist. I am not. There are many contentions in his book, ~~like many positions he took in arguments we had~~, with which I ~~cannot~~ do not agree. ~~Laski was later Chairman of the British Labor Party, one of the principal architects of its victory in 1945.~~ He was one of those civilized individuals who did not insist upon agreement with his political ideas as a pre-condition for friendship or conversation. Senator McCarthy's implication that Laski's book was dedicated to me as a supporter of his views is refuted by Laski's introduction, ~~written on November 27, 1942,~~ written in the third year of Britain's war against the Nazis, in which he said: to his book.

". . . our country owes an immense debt to Mr. E. R. Murrow. Day and night since before the war began he has done everything that courage and integrity can do to make events in this country a living reality to his fellow citizens of the United States. I am only one of the many Englishmen who have found in his faith and trust in our people a new power to endure and hope."

3. Another accusation against me is that Owen Lattimore mentions me in his book, Ordeal by Slander, published in 1950. At page 211 occurs the reference to me. After paying tribute to a number of newspaper and radio reporters who knew him personally and whose "reporting and editorial work . . . were clearly based upon the ancient principle that I was innocent unless proved guilty", Lattimore goes on to express appreciation to reporters whom he had never met before the hearings and to reporters whom, like me, he has never met. There were no complaints about my treatment of the Lattimore case by those who were interrogating him. Everything that I said on that case, is a matter of record and can be examined by anyone interested. Within the limits of human fallibility I have attempted when reporting controversies of substance involving an individual to present both sides of the case and not to presume guilt until it has been proven. I shall continue to do that in subsequent controversies and that specifically includes the case of Senator McCarthy.

4. Senator McCarthy's principal attack on me is an attack on the Institute of International Education, of which I was assistant director and am now a trustee. He says that it was "chosen" by the Soviet agency, VOKS, to act as its representative, "to do a job which would normally be done by the Russian Secret Police" in connection with the selection of American students and teachers to attend a Communist school in Moscow in 1934. That is false.

The facts are these: The Institute of International Education is an institution which was founded in 1919, its purpose was to improve American relations with foreign countries through exchanges of students and educational facilities. I have been one of its trustees since 1931 and served as Assistant Director from 1932 to 1935. It is an association I am proud of and one in which I have had many distinguished associates--Ralph J. Bunche, John Foster Dulles, Milton Eisenhower, Virginia Gildersleeve, Thomas W. Lamont, to name just a few.

In 1934, the Moscow University had organized an Anglo-American Institute which proposed holding summer sessions in Moscow for English and American students. The Institute of International Education acted as American sponsor for the summer session in 1934, as it did for summer schools in other countries, including England, France and Germany. I, as a representative of the Institute of International Education was one of the 24-member National Advisory Council which was set up to advise the director of the American group. All of the members of the Advisory Council were selected by the Institute. None was selected by VOKS, or any other Soviet agency. The American group was open to all academically qualified students who applied for registration and included students from 60 American universities and colleges. The only contact which VOKS had with the American group was in connection with procuring living and travel facilities for the group while it was in Russia. Inasmuch as VOKS was the Soviet bureau in charge of such matters for foreign visitors, so much contact with it was necessary if the students were to sleep and eat.

As for the Senator's charges that we were engaged in propaganda for Communist causes, the measure of the truth of this is that the Soviets refused, after the 1934 summer session, to have anything more to do with the Institute of International Education. It refused to permit students to attend the 1935 session under the Institute's auspices. When the Institute tried--at the request of the United States Government--to arrange for American students to go to Russia after World War II, it was met with a Soviet blast, appearing in several Communist publications in Europe, calling it and its program "the centre of international propaganda for American reaction", and charging, among its trustees, John Foster Dulles as ". . . one of the most violent of the war mongers, publicly branded by A. Ya. Vyshinski." I was favored, in that same attack with the tag "reactionary radio commentator".

The Institute of International Education is today the contracting agency for the government of this country in administering various student programs abroad. It also administers student programs under the Fulbright Act and the Smith-Mundt Act. Over the course of the years, it has arranged, in all, some 30,000 exchanges of students and professors, between the U.S. and over 50 foreign countries.

In 1948, President Eisenhower ~~has~~ said of its work:

"In these troubled days, the far-sighted policy of international education has become a firm foundation on which will ultimately rest the peace for which all the world is so earnestly yearning. I can assure you of my very best wishes and my full cooperation in the great achievements that lie ahead for the Institute of International Education."

I believed ~~eighteen~~ twenty years ago, and I believe today that mature American students and professors can engage in conversation and controversy, in the clash of ideas with communists anywhere ~~under peacetime conditions~~, without becoming contaminated or converted. To deny this would be to admit that in the realm of ideas, faith and conviction the communist cause, dogma and doctrine are stronger than our own.

5. Senator McCarthy made considerable play with the Daily Worker's attacks upon him, and their commendation of certain of my television programs. Here again is the effort to prove that anyone who exposes McCarthy must be a communist. I neither edit nor read the Daily Worker. That organ's opinion of me or of Senator McCarthy holds no fascination for me. But how does the Senator explain the fact that most of the responsible press of the free world opposes his method and behavior. To be consistent the Senator must contend that all those great organs of opinion are either communist-controlled or the dupes of communists. He can't have it both ways.

Dear Bill:

I hope that in view of recent events, it will be decided that Ed should make no mention of McCarthy on his Tuesday broadcast.

However, it seems to me that if anything is said, it might be wise to rest heavily upon an estimate of Senator McCarthy's reply, as made by some one not a party to the controversy. The New York Herald Tribune editorial seems ideal for that purpose, particularly since it is the opinion of a consistently Republican newspaper.

Proceeding on that basis, I drafted the enclosed material.

I repeat that I hope that the whole subject is dropped, but if not, the enclosed might be useful.

Sincerely,

Last Tuesday, Joseph R. McCarthy, the Junior Senator from Wisconsin, appeared on this program at my invitation. He was invited to reply to statements I had made, also on this program, five weeks ago. The Senator offered no semblance of replies to my statements. In fact, he did not even mention them. By failing to do so, he abused the invitation he had accepted.

What the Senator did, instead of replying, was described in language impossible to improve on in an editorial on April 8th in the New York Herald Tribune, a consistently Republican newspaper. The editorial, entitled "A Poison In Our Affairs," read as follows:

"Quote editorial in full."

Unlike the Senator, I will reply, briefly yet directly, to the more important of his accusations and other misstatements.

1. I have never been engaged in propaganda for Communist causes nor have I ever been affiliated with an institution so engaged.

2. I have never been a member of the I.W.W. - "by my own admission" as Senator McCarthy stated, or otherwise.

3. I have never followed the Communist party-line. Senator McCarthy's reference to the Daily Worker in which appeared Mr. William Z. Foster's alleged priase of me read as follows - and incidentally it was not quoted by the Senator:

> "During the past ten days Senator McCarthy has received a number of resounding belts in the jaw. These came from Adlai Stevenson, E. R. Murrow, Senator Flanders, the Army leadership, the broadcast companies. Even Eisenhower had to give McCarthy a slap on the wrist."

This was the sole reference to me in the Foster article referred to by Senator McCarthy. If that reference proves I am a Communist, it proves the same about President Eisenhower, Adlai Stevenson, Republican Senator Flanders from Vermont, the Army leadership and the broadcasters. I am proud to be in their company rather than Senator McCarthy's.

4. A test of the accuracy of Senator McCarthy's statements can be found in his repeated reference to me, in the course of his reply, as Educational Director of the Columbia Broadcasting System. After four weeks of massive research on me, the Senator could not even get straight my present relationship with CBS. I have not held that post for seventeen years.

This is all the time that the Senator's appearance is worth. I feel that I can and should do better with this program than spend more time on him and accordingly, I will proceed with the material on a more interesting subject.

Dear Ed:

Enclosed is a copy of the collect wire which I sent today. I am embarassed to take advantage of the "collect" priviledge but when I saw it was so many words I swallowed the pride.

I feel, like you, that here in America we have to fight for the right methods if we want our type of democracy to be exportable to the rest of the world.

It was a thrill to talk to you on the phone and Marcia, our 15 year old, said she was never so excited as when she took the first call!

Murrow's Statement April 6, 1954

Edward R. Murrow worked under my personal supervision for about 4 years in the woods of the State of Washington. This was on the logging engineering party for Bloedel Donovan Lumber Mills who were railroad logging vast timber areas of the Olympic Peninsula. To do this required the engineering to be a long ways ahead of the roads and railways. This work was all in virgin timber and did not even have access trails. Consequently, rivers had to be forded and long hard days in the brush were a steady diet and not the exception.

Work of this nature strips a man of shams and one can readily see what a fellow is really made of. I was soon to learn that this young axeman had "what it takes" and that I could depend on him. He was good natured, strong and full of work or play. He was out spoken and had initative and was not afraid of tough assignments.

The spirit of the woods in those days was one of accomplishment. The crews worked as teams in competition with their fellows in order to boast of surpassing them. Ed was an exponent of this attitude and was soon promoted to compassman. This required him to carry a true section line for a distance of a mile with only the aid of a sight compass and his ability to pace over mountainous country through virgin forest.

I can definitely say that at no time did he ever express any interest, affiliation, sympathy or leaning toward the Industrial Workers of the World. His interest was to make a little money to attend college. Which he did.

Through these years of association we became closely acquainted with Ed's father and mother. They were of the highest type. His father was a sound reliable locomotive engineer and his mother was and is one of the finest women morally and spiritually that we have ever known. Murrow has stated that she only weights 98 pounds soaking wet but if he ever had had a subversive thought she would have shaken it out of him in a hurry.

To qualify as a character witness I would say that I was Chief Engineer for Bloedel Donovan for 19 years and currently am Chief Engineer for a large logging operation for a national pulp company on the Olympic Peninsula who produce chemical cellulose for the world market.

Dear Ed:

We had 3 feet of snow for a while this winter, so camp was shut down tight enough to give me time to hear some of your 5 o'clock broadcasts. About that time my wife, Peg, brought home a February McCalls. I was most impressed that the ability to "throw" an engineer's chain was the best criterion by which to select radio commentators like Callingswood! This all added up to almost a reunion with the old compassman-and ex-chokerman.

Then I noticed that you made Page 1 when you stated that "the Ends do not justify the means" even if the McCarthy elects to operate that way.

You also forgot to tell me that you were on an Espionage mission when you drove a Ford across the Balkan States and Czechoslovakia in the early 1930s for Federated Students!

I have always been somewhat of a liberal and I was glad to hear that you are Left of Louis XIV. That is one reason that I wish we had a television set at Sappho.

Well, Ed, Keep up the Good Work

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

STATEMENT BY EDWARD R. MURROW ON
SENATOR McCARTHY'S BROADCAST ON "SEE IT NOW," APRIL 6, 1954

Senator McCarthy's reckless and unfounded attempt to impugn my loyalty is just one more example of his typical tactic of attempting to tie up to Communism anyone who disagrees with him. I now join the distinguished list upon which already appear the Washington Post, the Milwaukee Journal, Time Magazine, Commonweal, the Christian Science Monitor and General Marshall, among others. The Washington Post is characterized by Senator McCarthy as "the Washington edition of the Daily Worker"; the Milwaukee Journal as "the Milwaukee edition of the Daily Worker"; Time Magazine as having a purpose to "obstruct the fight against Communists"; Commonweal, a leading Catholic weekly, as having done "a great service to the Communist party"; the Christian Science Monitor as paralleling the Daily Worker in "venomous, distorted" stories; and General Marshall as "always and invariably serving the world policy of the Kremlin."

Senator McCarthy plays upon this nation's determination to protect itself against Communism as a means of creating distrust of anyone who criticizes him no matter how devoted to our American institutions the critic may be. I take no back seat to Senator McCarthy or anybody else in my dedication to this country and to its aims and ideals, nor are my views about the danger of Communism or Communist infiltration into the affairs of this country less uncompromising than those presumably held by the Junior Senator from Wisconsin. It is my devotion to the principles upon which this nation rests -- justice, freedom and fairness -- which sets me apart from Senator McCarthy. I would like to repeat the thought I expressed in answer to an earlier attack on me by Senator McCarthy: When the record is finally written, as it will be one day, it will answer the question who has helped the Communist cause and who has served his country better, Senator McCarthy or I. I would like to be remembered by the answer to that question.

Here are comments on the specific points raised by Senator McCarthy tonight:

1. One charge is that by my own admission I was a member of the IWW. That is false. I was never a member of the IWW. I never applied for membership. I assume that this false charge was manufactured by Senator McCarthy from the fact that in summers during college and during one year before college in the mid-twenties, I worked in lumber camps in the Pacific Northwest, where remnants of the old World War I IWW movement were still found among the lumber workers. But never was I a member or supporter of the IWW, nor did I ever work with that organization.

2. Another charge is that Professor Harold Laski dedicated a book to me. That is true. The book was published in this country in 1943. Professor Laski was a British scholar and Socialist politician. He was a friend of mine.

He is dead. He was a Socialist. I am not. There are many contentions in his book with which I do not agree. He was one of those civilized individuals who did not insist upon agreement with his political ideas as a pre-condition for friendship or conversation. Senator McCarthy's implication that Laski's book was dedicated to me as a supporter of his views is refuted by Laski's introduction to his book, written in the third year of Britain's war against the Nazis, in which he said:

> ". . .our country owes an immense debt to Mr. E. R. Murrow. Day and night since before the war began he has done everything that courage and integrity can do to make events in this country a living reality to his fellow citizens of the United States. I am only one of the many Englishmen who have found in his faith and trust in our people a new power to endure and hope."

This was a reference to broadcasts to the United States which I made from London in my capacity as European Director of CBS News throughout the war years.

3. Another accusation against me is that Owen Lattimore mentions me in his book, Ordeal by Slander, published in 1950. At page 211 occurs the reference to me. After paying tribute to a number of newspaper and radio reporters who knew him personally and whose reporting and editorial work were, to quote Lattimore, "clearly based upon the ancient principle that I was innocent unless proved guilty," Lattimore goes on to express appreciation to reporters whom he had never met before the hearings and to reporters whom, like me, he has never met. There were no complaints about my treatment of the Lattimore case by those who were interrogating him. Everything that I said on that case is a matter of record and can be examined by anyone interested. Within the limits of human fallibility I have attempted when reporting controversies of substance involving an individual to present both sides of the case and not to presume guilt until it has been proven. I shall continue to do that in subsequent controversies and that specifically includes the case of Senator McCarthy.

4. Senator McCarthy's principal attack on me is an attack on the Institute of International Education, of which I was assistant director and am now a trustee. He says that it was chosen by the Soviet agency, VOKS, to act as its representative, to do a job which would normally be done by the Russian Secret Police in connection with the selection of American students and teachers to attend a Communist school in Moscow in 1934. That is false.

The facts are these: The Institute of International Education is an institution which was founded in 1919 largely through the efforts of Nicholas Murray Butler, then President of Columbia University. Its purpose was to improve American relations with foreign countries through exchanges of students and educational facilities. I served as Assistant Director from 1932 to 1935 and have been one of its trustees since 1931. It is an association I am proud of and one in which I have had many distinguished associates -- John Foster Dulles, Milton Eisenhower, Ralph J. Bunche, Virginia Gildersleeve, Philip Reed, to name just a few.

In 1934, the Moscow University had organized an Anglo-American Institute which proposed holding summer sessions in Moscow for English and American students. The Institute of International Education acted as American sponsor for the summer session in 1934, as it did for summer schools in other countries, including England, France and Germany. I, as a representative of the Institute of International Education was one of the 24-member National Advisory Council which was set up to advise the director of the American group. All of the members of the Advisory Council were selected by the Institute. None was selected by VOKS, or any other Soviet agency. The American group was open to all academically qualified students who applied for registration and included students from 60 American universities and colleges. The only contact which VOKS had with the American group was in connection with procuring living and travel facilities for the group while it was in Russia. Inasmuch as VOKS was the Soviet bureau in charge of such matters for foreign visitors, contact with it was necessary if the students were to sleep and eat.

As for the Senator's charges that I or the Institute was engaged in propaganda for Communist causes, the measure of the truth of this is that the Soviets refused, after the 1934 summer session, to have anything more to do with the Institute of International Education. It refused to permit students to attend the 1935 session under the Institute's auspices. When the Institute tried -- at the request of the United States Government -- to arrange for American students to go to Russia after World War II, it was met with a Soviet blast, appearing in several Communist publications in Europe, calling it and its program "the centre of international propaganda for American reaction," and charging, among its trustees, John Foster Dulles as ". . .one of the most violent of the war mongers, publicly branded by

A. Y. Vyshinski." I was favored in that same attack with the tag "reactionary radio commentator."

The Institute of International Education is today the contracting agency for the government of this country in administering various student programs abroad. It also administers student programs under the Fulbright Act and the Smith-Mundt Act. Over the course of the years, it has arranged, in all, some 30,000 exchanges of students and professors between the United States and over 50 foreign countries.

In 1948, President Eisenhower said of its work:

> "In these troubled days, the far-sighted policy of international education has become a firm foundation on which will ultimately rest the peace for which all the world is so earnestly yearning. I can assure you of my very best wishes and my full cooperation in the great achievements that lie ahead for the Institute of International Education."

I believed twenty years ago, and I believe today that mature American students and professors can engage in conversation and controversy, in the clash of ideas with Communists anywhere, without becoming contaminated or converted. To deny this would be to admit that in the realm of ideas, faith and conviction the Communist cause, dogma and doctrine are stronger than our own.

5. Senator McCarthy attacked me because the Daily Worker on March 9th listed my television program as a "good bet" -- also, that in two subsequent issues this paper praised me. I cannot take responsibility for what the Daily Worker or any other publication has to say about my program or about me personally. I can say that I had no knowledge that I was to be the subject of notice by the Daily Worker or any other Communist publication. This is more than Senator McCarthy can say about the Communist support he accepted in aid of his 1946 campaign for the United States Senate.

Here is an example of what Senator McCarthy calls "praise" by William Z. Foster in the March 17th issue of the Daily Worker: "During the past 10 days Senator McCarthy has received a number of resounding belts in the jaw. These came from Adlai Stevenson, E. R. Murrow, Senator Flanders, the Army leadership, broadcasting companies. Even Eisenhower himself had to give McCarthy a slap on the wrist." This is the sole reference to me in the Foster article.

6. With his massive research on me the Senator could not even get my present relationship with CBS straight. He repeatedly referred to me as the Educational Director of the Columbia Broadcasting System, a position I have not held for seventeen years.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

STATEMENT BY CBS ON SENATOR McCARTHY'S ATTACK ON EDWARD R. MURROW

Edward R. Murrow has been associated with the Columbia Broadcasting System for over 19 years. The management of CBS has had ample opportunity during this time to become fully aware of Mr. Murrow's passionate devotion to his country and to the fundamental principles upon which it is built. It also knows of his equally passionate opposition to those who, either within or outside our boundaries, would subvert those principles.

Mr. Murrow's achievements during the past 19 years have brought honors and distinction to CBS. They have won for him acclaim in tangible form from high officials in the United States Government and from the leaders in the fields of industry, law, science, education, and the arts. And, of special significance, acclaim has come to him from those well equipped to judge him; from leading members of the free American press, radio and television.

Mr. Murrow has won over 50 awards which attest to his integrity and accuracy as a broadcaster. Among them are the Peabody Award, which he has won four times, the Alfred I. DuPont Award, which he has won twice, and the Overseas Press Club Award, which he has won six times. There is no major broadcasting award covering the presentation of the news or news subjects which has not been won by Mr. Murrow at least once.

CBS subscribes fully to the integrity and responsibility of Mr. Murrow as a broadcaster and as a loyal American.

Senator McCarthy has attacked me as one who was "chosen" by the Soviet agency, VOKS, to act as its representative, doing work of the Soviet police, in connection with the Anglo-American Institute of the Moscow University Summer School session in 1934.

The facts are these: I was then assistant director of the Institute for International Education, an institution which was designed to improve American relations with foreign countries through exchanges of students and educational facilities. In 1934, the Moscow University had organized an Anglo-American Institute which proposed holding summer sessions in Moscow for English and American students. The Institute of International Education acted as American sponsor for the school in 1934 and I, as a representative of the Institute, was one of a 24-member National Advisory Council which was set up to advise the director of the Summer Session in its management. All of the members of the Advisory Council were selected by the Institute. None was selected by VOKS, or any other Soviet agency. The only contact which VOKS had with the school was in connection with procuring living and travel facilities for the group while it was in Russia. Inasmuch as VOKS was the Soviet bureau in charge of such matters for foreign visitors, so much contact with it was necessary if the students were to sleep and eat.

As for the Senator's charge that I was trying to Sovietize American students, the measure of the truth of this is that the Soviets refused, after the 1934 summer session, to have anything more to do with the Institute's program. It refused to permit students to attend the 1935 session under the Institute's auspices. When the Institute tried--at the request of the Federal Government--to arrange for American students to go to Russia in 1948, it was met with a Soviet blast, appearing in several Communist publications in Europe, calling it and its program "the centre of international propaganda for American reaction", and charging, among its trustees, John Foster Dulles as ". . . one of the most violent of the war mongers, publicly branded by A. Ya. Vyshinski." I was favored with the tag "reactionary radio commentator".

The Senator also states that "many" of the persons who attended the summer school later became Communists. He names two--and the Institute's roster of persons going to the 1934 school does not even carry the name of one of them. There were 190-odd at the summer session. In the Senator's language, two of these--one of whom may not have been there--is "many".

The Institute of International Education is today the contracting agency for the government of this country in administering various student programs abroad. It also administers student programs under the Fulbright Act and the Smith-Mundt Act. Over the course of the years, it has arranged, in all, some 30,000 exchanges of students and professors.

President Eisenhower has said of its work:

> "In these troubled days, the far-sighted policy of international education has become a firm foundation on which will ultimately rest the peace for which all the world is so earnestly yearning. I can assure you of my very best wishes and my full cooperation in the great achievements that lie ahead for the Institute of International Education."

I have been associated with the Institute of International Education for more than 20 years, and have been one of its trustees since 1931. It is an association I am proud of and one in which I have had many distinguished associates--Ralph J. Bunche, John Foster Dulles, Milton Eisenhower, Virginia Gildersleeve, Thomas W. Lamont, to name just a few.

If the junion senator from Wisconsin brands me a Communist sympathizer because of my connection with the Institute, he must keep his branding iron hot.

Last week Senator McCarthy appeared on this program to correct any errors he thought we might have made on our report of March 9. Since he made no reference to any statements of fact that we made, we must conclude he found no errors of fact.

The Senator added this reporter's name to a long list of individuals and institutions he has accused of serving the Communist cause. His proposition is simple. Anyone who criticizes or opposes McCarthy's methods must be a Communist. If that be true, there are an awful lot of Communists in this country.

For the record, let's consider briefly some of the Senator's charges. He claimed that I had been a member of the Industrial Workers of the World. That is false. I was never a member of the I.W.W.; never applied for membership. Men that I worked with in the Pacific Northwest in the mid-twenties will attest that I never had affinity or affiliation with that organization. I have predicted that one day the Senator would use that lumber camp work, where there were remnants of the I.W.W., in an effort to discredit and destroy me. He has now done so, and he lied in so doing.

The Senator charged that Professor Harold Laski, a British scholar and politician, dedicated a book to me. That is true. He is dead. He was a Socialist. I am not. He wasone of these civilized individuals who did not insist upon agreement with his political ideas as a precondition for friendship or conversation. Laski, as he makes clear in the introduction, dedicated the book to me not because of political agreement, but because he held my war-time broadcasts from London in high regard.

Senator McCarthy's principal attack on me was an attack on the Institute of International Education of which I was Assistant Director and am now a Trustee. That Institute sponsored,-acted as the registering agent,-for summer schools in foreign countries, including England, France and Germany, and one in the Soviet Union in 1934. It has arranged, in all, some 30 thousand exchanges of students and professors between the United States and over 50 foreign countries. The man primarily responsible for starting this Institute was Nicholas Murray Butler, in 1919. It's work has been praised as recently as 1948 by President Eisenhower. It has been denounced by the Soviet pressand radio as a center of international propaganda for American reaction, and I have been labelled a "reactionary radio commentator",

The Senator alleged that we "were doing the work of the Russian Secret police"training spies. We were in fact conducting normal cultural and educational relations with foreign nations. The Moscow Summer Session was cancelled in 1935 by the Russian authorities. I believed 20 years ago, and I believe today, that mature Americans can engage in controversy and conversation in the clash of ideas with Communists anywhere without becoming contaminated or converted. I believe that our faith, our conviction, our determination, are stornger than theirs, and that we can compete and successfully not only in the area of bombs, but of ideas.

Senator McCarthy couldn't even get my present relationship with CBS straight. He repeatedly referred to me as the Educational Director, a position I have not held for 17 years.

The Senator waved a copy of the "Daily Worker" saying an article in it had praised me. It is a sad day for American reporting if a reporter's credibility depends upon what the "Daily Worker" does or does not say about him. My name was bracketed in that article with that of Adlai Stevenson, Senator Flanders, the Army leadership, broadcasting companies, and President Eisenhower. That was the sole reference to me.

Another charge by Senator McCarthy was that Owen Lattimore mentioned me in a book. What Lattimore, in substance, said was that he had never met me, but that I had done a fair job of reporting his testimony; in short, that I had not presumed his guilt. Everything I said in that case is a matter of record, and can be examined by anyone interested. I hope to continue to present evidence developed before Congressional committees as impartially as I am able. And that specifically includes the hearing before which Senator McCarthy will shortly appear. I have worked for CBS for more than 19 years. The company has subscribed fully to my integrity and responsibility as a broadcaster, and as a loyal American. Having searched my conscience and my files, I cannot contend that I have always been right or wise. But I have attempted to pursue the truth with some diligence, and to report it even though as in this case I had been warned in advance that I would be subjected to the attentions of Senator McCarthy.

We shall hope to deal with matters of more vital interest to the country on subsequent programs.

In the early thirties I was privileged, upon occasion, to be a guest in the home of the distinguished historian Professor James T. Shotwell. I may have been present upon the occasion referred to by Mr. Pegler. Professor Shotwell knew my political views then, and now. I would be prepared to accept his evaluation of those views. And I am equally prepared XXX and indeed eager to testify under oath regarding any aspect of my personal or professional activities.

Several times on social occasions I have said that at some point Senator McCarthy would learn that in the mid-twenties I had worked in a logging camp with possible members of the IWW (Industrial Workers of the World), and that he would use that information in an effort to discredit and destroy me. He has done so. Any allegations that I was ever a member of the IWW or contributed to it are completely without foundation in fact, and must arise from a misinterpretation of my remarks quoted above.

In 1935, I was assistant director of the Institute of International Education, an organization engaged in the exchange of students and professors between this and foreign countries.

In this capacity, I was a member of the advisory committee for a summer school in Moscow.

In addition to the Senator's reading of a newspaper article published 18 years ago, Fulton Lewis, Jr., more recently broadcast similar information and various versions of both these stories were widely mentioned in former Senator Frank Graham's campaign in North Carolina in 1950.

In actual fact, the summer school was cancelled by Russian authorities before it began. Those graduates student and professors who had signed up for the school spent the summer travelling in the Soviet Union, an activity which was not then, and is not now, illegal. I did not accompany this group of distinguished educators.

The Senator's reference to the Civil Liberties Union is another example of his too familiar technique.

In a recent television broadcast I actually said: "The attorney general's list does not, and has never listed, the American Civil Liberties Union as subversive, nor does the F.B.I. nor any other government agency. And the American Civil Liberties Union holds in its files letters of commendation from President Eisenhower, President Truman and General MacArthur."

The Junior senator from Wisconsin now accuses me of lying, his contention being that the A.C.L.U. was listed by the California State Senate Committee investigating un-American activities. I specifically stated "the attorney general's list" "the FBI" and "any other government agency."

I shall attempt to deal adequately with Senator McCarthy's latest reckless handling of the truth on the radio tomorrow night.

OPENING

On March 9th, this program made a report on Senator McCarthy. At the outset of that program, I stated that Senator McCarthy could have time to reply. In a telegram to Senator McCarthy I said: "In accordance with my offer and CBS policy, we will make time available to you on the same program and network this coming Tuesday, March 16. You may use all or any part of the period occupied by "See It Now" less the time customarily used by me in opening and closing the program and the time allotted to commercial messages. I will make no comment on your statement in the time used by me on the broadcast but naturally reserve the right to comment subsequently". ~~Subsequently~~ I was notified that March 16th was not a convenient date for Senator McCarthy and that he preferred April 6th. He was ~~notified~~ Told that April 6th was satisfactory ~~to me~~. Senator McCarthy is now in our Washington studios ready to make his broadcast. He will make his appearance immediately after a message from our sponsor, the Aluminum Corporation of America, ~~which is a fellow~~

Senator McCarthy appears to be hurting and running. His performance tonight was typical; he made no answer to a documented report which consisted mainly of his own voice and pictures in context. He proved again that anyone who exposes him, anyone who does not share his hysterical disregard for decency and human dignity and the rights guaranteed by the Constitution, must be a Communist or at best a fellow traveller. I fully expected this treatment. The Senator couldn't even get my present relationship with CBS straight. He repeatedly referred to me as the Educational Director of the Columbia Broadcasting System, a position I have not held since 1937. If his massive research, for which he requested a month's delay in his appearance, could not get that fact straight, it is reasonable to assume that he is in error in other areas.

The Senator has made me a member of a rather distinguished company; he has attacked in similar vein "The Milwaukee Journal", "The Washington Post", "Time" magazine, "Commonweal", the Alsop brothers, General of the Army George C. Marshall, and former Senator William Benton.

The Senator ran from his law suit against Mr. Benton, presumably because he cannot afford to testify under oath. He ran from his statement that if the existing law did not compel the radio and television networks to do what he wanted them to do, he would have the law changed. He ran from his promised subpoena of Brigadier General Telford Taylor; he even ran from answering the specific charges brought in his own voice and pictures on a telegision program a month ago.

I require no lectures from the Junior Senator from Wisconsin upon the evils of Communism. Having watched the aggressive forces at work in western Europe; having had friends in eastern Europe butchered and driven into exile; having broadcast from London in 1943 that the Russians were responsible for the Katyn Massacre; having told the story of the Russian refusal to allow allied aircraft to land on Russian fields after dropping supplies to those who rose in Warsaw and were betrayed by the Russians, and having been denounced by the Russian radio for these reports, I cannot feel that I require instructions from the Senator in the evils of Communism.

We fear the aggressive forces of world Communism, and rightly so. But in this climate we might well remember something that Mr. Churchill once said: "If we spend too much time debating the past we might lose the future". And even more appropriate is this quotation of Adolph Hitler: "The great strength of the totalitarian state is that it will force those who fear it to imitate it". We in this country are not going to imitate the totalitarian state of either the right or the left.

Having searched my conscience and my files, I can find no evidence that I have betrayed the oath I once took to this country. Most of my adult life has been spent either in education or in broadcasting. Most of what I have said is a matter of record. I have no always been right, not always wise, but I believe that record will bear scrutiny, and I would welcome the opportunity to have it examined under oath.

Here are certain specific comments on points raised by Senator McCarthy tonight

LEAD TO BE WRITTEN BY JOUSMER.....

On March Eighth I produced a television program dealing with Senator Joseph R. Macarthy...labeled it as controversial and offered him time to reply ... if he felt I had done violence to his voice or pictures...The senator asked for a delay of one month,in order to prepare his answer...His performance tonite was typical...he didnt answer...took evasive tactics...proved again that anyone who exposes him will be immediately subjected to slander and villification..I expected it...The senator has established ..in his own diseased mind the proposition that anyone who does not share his hysterical disregard for decency and human dignity,and the rights guaranteed by the constitution,must be a communist or at best a fellow traveller...I require no lectures from the senator upon the evils of communism...having watched its agressive forces at work in western Europe...having friends ~~xxxxxx~~ in eastern Europe butchered or driven into exile...having broadcast from London in nineteen forty three that the Russians were responsible for the Katyn Massacre...having told the story of the Russian refusal to allow allied aircraft to land on Russian fields after dropping supplies to those who rose in Warsaw and were betrayed by the Russians....I have not always been right.. and not always wise

The attached 1930 year book of the NSFA was received from Chester Williams through Mr. Murrow's office. It should be returned to him. I have, in my files on this matter, a further copy of the year book received from Mr. Murrow himself and containing an inscription, under date of January 26, 1954, to him. This will, of course, be available to you and may be found in the bottom drawer of the filing cabinet which we have used.

THE BRIDGE THAT WAS BUILT TOO LATE

The Railroad Era of logging, which followed the Ox Team days in the Pacific Northwest woods, brought forth many novel designs of log bridges and high trestles. Some of them were designed, and their stresses were calculated by University Professors. Others were the products of the fertile brains of many aggressive logging Superintendents who did their figuring by the seat of their pants like the Alaska bush pilots fly their planes.

One such ingenious camp Superintendent of my acquaintance used to set up a transit near the bridge and sight through it diligently to impress the bridge crew and then cut the piling off where he had intended to in the first place! There was no lost time from long calculations by this method and the bridges nearly always stood up. The light locomotives of that day got over them safely.

The first long log bridge on which we attempted to make a full stress analysis and to design the members adequately for the loading for which they were intended, was 112 ft. long. It was made of 3"girders" of two full trees, one above the other, with the butts reversed to insure a uniform depth to the girders. When this bridge was seen in 1933 by Mr. French, the builder of the Harvard Stadium, he said,"There is a perfect example of what modern steel and concrete engineers say can not be done." However, this design was granted Patent number 2333327 by the U.S.Patent Office of Washington D.C. and runs until 1968.

The log bridge that is the subject of this article is called a counter-balance type. Very little clearance above high water existed at the site for which it was intended. So a span had to be designed which was only one log deep; but with a long center span to let all the drift wood through without creating log jams as the multiple piers of the previous bridge had done. The weight of the counter balances prestressed the log stringers in the opposite direction to the live loading of the 160 Ton locomotive which was to use it. This device carries 50% of the live loading before the stringers are stressed in the normal direction.

All the bending moments, longitudinal shear over the piers, and details were calculated and checked by Rayonier Engineers which included John Warder of Hoquiam. Then the plans were gone over by Professor J. Kenneth Pearce, Professor Bror L. Grondal, and Professor A. L. Miller of the University of Washington. They saw no engineering error in its general design and quantities.

When they asked, "Where did you get that idea," the answer was, "at Sappho, Washington in the middle of the woods--pure inspiration." However, these men gave it their approval but recommended that the counter balance be fixed ends and this was done.

Between the completion of the plans and actual construction, the question was often asked, "Was this type of bridge ever built before?" To our knowledge it never had been used for railroad loading but during the last few years if engineering is not pioneering new fields like photogrammetry, radio telephone or new bridge designs it is behind the times. So to create more confidence in the new design a model was made to a scale of 1" = 4 ft. This showed the basic principles more clearly than the plans and was a help to all to visualize the work.

The construction work was done under R. F. Cunningham, General Superintendent and J. M. Meeley, Construction Supervisor. The plans and specifications were followed carefully by the whole crew. This gave a finished product which could perform as it was designed. So when the first train ran over it in December 1953 consisting of the 160 Ton locomotive, 53 carloads of logs, a 65 Ton railroad crane and 3 idlers, it rode just as solidly on the counter balance span as it did on the long approach trestle.

All the piling and bridge timbers were treated with creosote for 8# retention. The weights were made from beach gravel and 6 sacks of regular Portland cement per cu. yd. of concrete. The 4 Douglas Fir tree stringers were untreated but are being covered with 24 gauge galvanized sheet steel to form a housing which will keep the stringers dry in the same manner as covered wooden bridges were protected.

Now to explain the Title. This prestressing principle of the counter balance adds so much strength to a long log stringer that if it had been applied at the beginning of the railroad era of logging it would probably have had a wide usage. It is simple to build, and most economical for any firm owning Douglas Fir in large old growth trees. The counter weights required only very ordinary concrete that can be made from local gravel. It is only the application of this principle to railroad bridges that is new, as the Carnegie Hand Book for Engineers has shown it for years on page 188.

Draft of introduction and comments on IWW, Laski and Lattimore

The Senator makes four specific allegations against me of Communist association. To quote a famous American, let's look at the record.

1. The first of these is that by my own admission I was a member of the IWW. That is false. I was never a member of the IWW. I never applied for membership. I never paid dues. The facts are these. In summers during college and during one year before college in the mid twenties, I worked in lumber camps in the Pacific Northwest. The remnants of the old World War I IWW movement were still found among lumber workers of that area. I worked with such men, worked with them in lumbering and I have so stated in years past. I was also sympathetic with their efforts to increase wages and improve working conditions--theirs and mine. But never was I a member or supporter of their organization nor did I ever work with that organization.

2. The second charge is that Professor Harold Laski dedicated a book to me. That is true. The title of the book is "Reflections on the Revolution of Our Time" published in this country in 1943. Professor Laski was a British scholar and Socialist politician. He was a friend of mine. He is dead. He was a Socialist. I am not. There are many contentions in his book, like many positions he took in arguments we had, with which I cannot agree. Laski was later Chairman of the British Labor Party, one of the principal architects of its victory in 1945. He was one of those civilized individuals who did not insist upon agreement with his political ideas as a pre-condition for friendship or conversation. But let me read you what Laski said about me in his introduction, written on November 27, 1942, in the third year of Britain's war against the Nazis.

> ". . . our country owes an immense debt to Mr. E. R. Murrow. Day and night since before the war began he has done everything that courage and integrity can do to make events in this country a living reality to his fellow citizens of the United States. I am only one of the many Englishmen who have found in his faith and trust in our people a new power to endure and hope."

So far as I know this is the reason for the dedication and not because I furthered his views or Communist aims.

3. Another accusation is my "ardent support" of Owen Lattimore. The Senator cites Lattimore's gratitude to me, as expressed in his book, Ordeal by Slander, published in 1950. At page 211 occurs the reference to me. After paying tribute to a number of newspaper and radio reporters who knew him personally and whose "reporting and editorial work . . . were clearly based upon the ancient principle that I was innocent unless proved guilty", Lattimore goes on to pay a debt to reporters whom he had never met before, or like me has never met. Lattimore said:

> ". . . as an example of the way they handled my case I must mention at least Edward R. Murrow. Even when the hysteria was at its height, before I could speak for myself, he kept the record straight by repeatedly drawing attention to the fact that nothing had been proved against me. Later, by his program technique of using recordings, he gave me a national forum of my own, so that millions of people could hear me speaking for myself, in excerpts from my testimony."

There were no complaints about my treatment of the Lattimore case by those who were interrogating him. Everything that I said on that case is a matter of record and can be examined by anyone interested. Within the limits of human fallibility I have attempted when reporting controversies of substance involving an individual to present both sides of the case and not to presume guilt until it has been proven. I shall continue to do that in subsequent controversies and that specifically includes the case of Senator McCarthy.

The remnants of the old World War I IWW movement were still found among lumber workers of that area. I have looked back at my programs to see what I said about the Lattimore hearings before a Senate committee that spring, to which the author is referring in the above quotation. On several evenings in April and May 1950, while those hearings were going on, I dealt at some length on my news program with the statements made at the hearings and about the hearings by others. I played several recordings of statements by Lattimore. On April 6, 1950 I presented a recording of Senator Tydings' statement that the Senate committee members had a complete summary of the F.B.I. files made available to them and that they unanimously agreed there ~~is~~ was nothing in the file which shows that Lattimore was a Communist, had been a Communist, or was in any way connected with any espionage. I then quoted Senator McCarthy's comment on Senator Tydings' statement, and I ended with a statement which is as true today as it was then, in the light of the last four years' experience with matters of this kind. I should like to quote it:

"I should like to make a purely personal comment about congressional investigating committees..specifically those aimed at discovering spies or subversive elements... Let's assume that everyone concerned is genuinely interested in getting at the facts and exposing any real danger that may exist...that's a pretty big assumption, but let's make it anyway...assume that both Democrats and Republicans are patriots above party... It seems to me that the seriousness of the situation does not arise from the fact that these public investigations create confusion and suspicion in the country... The damage to our relations with foreign countries is considerable but no one can measure the extent of the damage with any accuracy..but even that isn't the important thing...It is of course true that a considerable number of people are brought under suspicion, often without any substantial supporting evidence. Their denials never catch up with the original accusations... These people suffer a very real damage...this may be deplored and denounced, but I suggest that this is not the most serious aspect of these investigations...It seems to me that these minor curcuses on Capitol Hill... the screaming headlines and general confusion that results may well mislead our enemies into the fatal error of believing that this country is more divided than it really is...but even that does not represent the real danger that stems from these public investigations...If we stick to the original assumption that these investigations are an attempt to uncover spies and subversive elements...that Senators McCarthy and Tydings, for example, are equally concerned for the public welfare and the security of the State...that this current investigation is not an effort to embarrass the administration, to 'get' Acheson or to get headlines...even if all these things were true and that's a pretty big if...the basic trouble would remain...the method being employed just won't work...it's no way to catch spies or uncover Communists. It might turn one up, but the very nature of the investigation would make such discovery something of an accident. What we are getting is all the danger and damage both at home and abroad of a witch hunt without having much chance of catching a witch... To say this is not to suggest that investigation, careful screening and constant vigilance are not necessary safeguards for the nation in face of the conscienceless cunning of the communists...It was for that purpose that the President's loyalty review program was established... There are those who doubt the effectiveness of this program...that being true...the congress is entitled to review it and its practices. The Congress is of course entitled to look for spies and communists in government whenever and however it wants to...But the trouble with this present method is that it doesn't work...Even Senator McCarthy has said that this procedure won't produce results...It seems to me that the most intelligent suggestion has come from Senator Lodge of Massachusetts...The creation of a twelve man non-partisan commission which would hear evidence, study the whole matter and produce its findings...This procedure has worked well in other countries...The one we are following now doesn't seem to be getting us anywhere...."

MEMORANDUM to: Ben Shute and Ed Murrow

The following are a few general suggestions on handling the immediate attack on Murrow.

1. It is vital in my view that the entire network be pre-empted for at least 15 minutes directly following the McCarthy presentation for Murrow's immediate counter-attack.

a) No defensive explanation

b) Use most blatant distortions in the filmed attack to expose McCarthy technique of the "half-lie"

c) Have prepared sequence on theme: McCarthy can't take criticism. "He is trying to put himself above criticism and his critics under suspicion." Anyone who refuses to pay homage to him is at once attacked as a pro-Communist. Use a Vishinsky clip from UN to show this technique in action. Use clips to show him employing the technique against General Marshall, Time, Life, Washington Post - all are tarred with the same brush. Get and use a clip showing McCarthy trying to suppress criticism of himself - perhaps the Leo Cherne encounter reproduced in Life may have a useful sequence. This was a TV show where McCarthy got rattled.

d) Use editorial from ~~Newark~~ Trenton - Catholic editor - as printed in the Denver Post to feature question, "Is McCarthy really a Communist?"

e) Repeat clip about Gen. Swicker- and statement about "army blackmail" to keep issue in hearings clear- then get arm in arm with General Marshall, Swicker, etc. - the issue is not Murrow but McCarthy's tactics - whether he realizes it or not, he is serving the Soviet cause.

f) Depending upon how the film McCarthy produces is handled, I suggest a brief introduction of it with a photograph of the telegram, and an announcement of the trailor program so all will stay tuned to hear. This is the most important time spot Murrow may ever get because SEE IT NOW will draw the biggest TV audience in history, including the majority of McCarthy supporters who now reluctantly say "he is doing more good than harm".

g) Perhaps Murrow's commentary might be along lines of the attached statement.

"I do not intend to pick up the booby-traps of half-lies and deliberate distortion Senator McCarthy has laid for me. I intend to stick to the facts, to face McCarthy with McCarthy, and to try to get him to answer to the American public.

Attacking me is no substitute for answering the record of his own distortions and half-lies. I will not let him change the subject.

I know from long experience in covering the tricks of Soviet and Nazi demogogues exactly what he is after when he tries to change the subject. He will not get that from me.

He started out in a telegram by stating that he would prove that I am a "conscious supporter of Communism". He retreated from that to a lame attempt to connect me by the old guilt by association trick with a few persons and institutions. He knows that my record in exposing and opposing Communism is clear and also clean. I have never lied about General Marshall or served the cause of Communism by undermining our relations with our allies.

He knows he cannot prove in any court of law that I have ever consciously supported Communism. I challenge him to state over the air or TV that I have and accept the consequences of a libel suit. He is obviously afraid to bring his so-called proof into court because he doesn't have any that will stand the tests of evidence.

Therefore, I do not intend to answer his innuendoes and thus play into his hands by helping him change the subject. Nor do I intend to retreat one inch from my position that the American people have a right to know the facts about McCarthy. If what I report are not facts, let him answer and prove they are not."

2. Suggest a release in time for morning papers featuring Murrow attack and text of the trailor program to assure maximum play with McCarthy put in the defensive position instead of Murrow.

3. Suggest following up on a few major points of probable attack to get in hand documentary evidence of distortion.

a) Communist attack on Murrow when he was President of NSFA- check Intercollegian and Student Review and files of Daily Worker from dates of possible attack shown by student sources. Best bet here is a photostat from the Daily Worker - also check on New Masses.

b) Check through Murrow's files and book for strong quote exposing Soviets, especially during the war re: Poland.

4. As part of facing McCarthy with McCarthy and adding a bit of humor, get McCarthy quote of a year or so ago that Murrow is fair and accurate.

5. Suggest going slow on libel front until or unless there is an open-and-shut case. Better in my view to needle, and to expose tricks by which he seeks to avoid court test of his innuendo - Exposure of tricks always fascinates the layman.

6. Suggest stockpiling of questions on cards that can be used by Murrow and all CBS commentators and reporters to keep McCarthy on the defensive without making categoric statements. Such questions could be drawn upon according to the news pegs of the moment. Later they may prove useful in a booklet, because there is need of such a document for general use and especially for correspondents who go on such shows as MEET THE PRESS. A booklet under the title, "QUESTIONS MCCARTHY WON'T ANSWER" might be projected.

Memorandum to Ben Shute and Ed Murrow

From: C. Williams

Subject: Proposed 16 mm Film

Many organizations are anxious to show the kinescopes of the March 9 and subsequent programs re McCarthy. This appears to be an interest which is impractical for CBS to meet but vital to Murrow's position with regard to effective public support.

Therefore, it is proposed that a special film be put together quickly under the auspices of Freedom House and made available through non-theatrical channels of distribution. The availability of the film can be advertised through many interested national organizations and local community forums.

1. The film might be called "Murrow Faces McCarthy With McCarthy".

2. The film should be put together as a thirty-minute production with a selection of clips as follows:

a. The best newsreel and TV clips of McCarthy from the March 9 SEE IT NOW.

b. Selected clips of Murrow's commentary from March 9 SEE IT NOW.

c. Selected TV clips from the Moss record used on March 16.

d. Selected TV clips from the April 6 program, if McCarthy appears.

3. This sequence could then be put together with a special commentary by either Harry Gideonse, Chairman of the Board of Freedom House, or Leo Cherne of that Board.

4. Freedom House would want to select the clips by reviewing the kinescopes; secure a list of sources for the clips selected so that they could buy the ones chosen for use; and receive permission from CBS and Murrow for those sequences containing Murrow's commentary as well as any specific TV clips owned by CBS.

5. It is understood that the film would not be used on TV without special arrangement and permission. The film would be handled on a rental basis by the distributors. Time is, of course, of the essence. Hence, the project is not feasible without the fullest cooperation of CBS and Murrow's staff.

MEMORANDUM

Industry Committee on Freedom of Expression

It seems to me that immediate steps should be taken to establish a special committee of radio and television on freedom of expression to coordinate public relations. This is essential to meet, by coordinated public relations, the forthcoming attacks of McCarthy in his private expose of the mass media.

The only way to beat him off is by a show of strength and unity and a planned program in defense of the industry. His hope is to divide and conquer - to pick off one program at a time by getting at the advertisers on the grounds that the particular victim is "controversial". The shot-gun attack on the mass media as a "hot-bed for Communists" is designed to put all on the defensive in hopes that each will seek self-protection. Unless all show immediate unity and determination to defend their public trust collectively, he may succeed in this maneuver.

The document he is privately putting together, largely under the direction of J. B. Matthews, will attempt to make each network and various publications appear vulnerable, but in such a way that each one could assume that it could get immunity from further attack by getting rid of a few people "unfriendly to McCarthy". If they do not, then they will be given the works as "coddlers of Communists", etc. The only answer is coordinated defense and offense.

Perhaps a pattern is indicated by the way the cigarette companies got together in a new Research Committee on the lung-cancer threat, using Hill and Knowlton as their public relations counsel, acting as a group to deal with this one issue.

Certainly, the radio-TV industry ought to have a well-financed, central set-up to deal with this threat. It can be predicted with fair certainty that the very announcement of such a Committee will cause McCarthy to back away from his projected plans.

It may be found useful for the industry to set up a committee of distinguished Americans to protect the reputations of loyal Americans and sift accusations that are made by various self-appointed groups. Surely, it must now be clear to all that the independence and integrity of the industry are in jeopardy and that it cannot save itself by tossing victims out of the sleigh indiscriminately to the pursuing wolves.

McCarthy has threatened to get Murrow off the air for good. This is not a threat limited to Murrow, CBS or even to the industry. If it is made good, Freedom as we have known it will be finished in the United States.

An American spokesman in UN . . .

"It is a real pleasure to report the sense of satisfaction I personally felt in knowing that a man of his calibre, intelligence, and ability is a representative of the United States in the United Nations. Mr. Williams performed his duties in an outstanding manner and was of great help and assistance to me during my stay in Paris."

—Mike Mansfield,
Senator from Montana

From an off-the-record forum . . .

"Once again you captured our distinguished Washington audience with your pointed humor and your amazing grasp of international issues. Do you realize that you batted out answers to 34 questions? They certainly pitched you some fast, curved ones — especially the Senators and the officers from the Joint Chiefs at the Pentagon. I've had many calls today expressing sheer admiration for the precise, clear, and succint way you handled the questions. Of course, the speech itself was provocative, stimulating, packed with fresh information, and profound in its analysis."

—Cooperative Forum,
Washington, D. C.

From Philadelphia . . .

"On behalf of the Young Businessmen's Committee, I want to thank you for having been the guest speaker at the luncheon yesterday for, what I am sure, will be the most outstanding meeting of the year."

—World Affairs Council

From the former U. S. Commissioner of Education . . .

"In my years of association with him, I have found Chester Williams to be a man of great integrity—capable of interpreting the philosophy of the free society and current world affairs not merely out of an informed head, but also out of a loyal heart. He has much to say, and he says it well both in print and on the platform.

ANGLO-AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF THE FIRST MOSCOW UNIVERSITY

Dates of connection: 1934-1935.

Origins: Experimental session of 25 persons at the American Summer School in Russia in 1933, under auspices of Zorbaugh (NYU), Kulp (Teachers' College, Columbia U.), Sollins (reputedly of NYU). Based on success of this venture, Soviet educational authorities organized Anglo-American Institute to offer regular instruction in English-Speaking summer courses. (IIE Summer School Announcement).

History: Operated summer session in 1934, with approximately 150 American students and teachers in Moscow for three weeks of courses accompanied and followed by Soviet-conducted tours. Session scheduled for 1935, but cancelled on or immediately prior to commencement by Soviet authorities. IIE thereafter severed connections with the Anglo-American Section. Arrangements satisfactory to the students, but not under auspices of the Institute, were made by the Soviets for the 200-odd students, who had then already arrived in the U.S.S.R. (See 16th Annual Report of the Director, 10/1/35, p. 11.)

Relation of ERM: Member of "Advisory Council" with Counts, Heber (Advisors), W. W. Charters, H. W. Chase, John Dewey, Stephen Duggan, Hallie Flanagan, F. P. Graham, R. M. Hutchins, Charles H. Judd, I. L. Kandel, Robert L. Kelly, John

A. Kingsbury, Susan M. Kingsbury, Paul Klapper, Charles R. Mann, W. A. Neilson, H. W. Odum, W. F. Russell, H. W. Tyler, E. H. Wolkins, F. W. Withers. T. Woody, H. W. Zorbaugh.

Institute files indicate that ERM handled funds in connection with the summer school to the extent of transmitting them to Sollins, the active manager of the program.

Contemporaneous publicity: Editorial comment in Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph (Hearst) in issue for February 18, 1935, attacked the summer school for fostering revolution, etc. No indication that this contributed in any way to cancellation of the 1935 session.

Nature of Summer Session in 1934 (see Report for the Institute):

Inclusive dates: July 20 to August 15 (3-1/2 weeks), followed by tours.

Sessions were followed by Soviet-conducted excursions to various institutions, as: galleries, museums, schools, clinics, with accent on sociology and education.

Courses announced in Institute publicity were:

Comparative Art & Literature in U.S.S.R.
Elementary Education in U.S.S.R.
Secondary & Higher Education in U.S.S.R.
Experimental Educational Programs in U.S.S.R.
Institutional Changes in the Soviet Union
Social Backgrounds of Communist Society
Political Economics of the Construction Period
Psychological Research in the Soviet Union Advanced Russian Phonetics & Grammar
Seminar in Soviet Social & Cultural Life
Crime and Punishment in the Soviet Union

Declared purposes of Summer Session:

". . . a means of furthering cultural contacts between American, English and Russian teachers and students."

". . . to provide foreign visitors to Soviet Russia with the academic facilities and programs necessary for serious study and research; . . . to publish material on Soviet educational, social and cultural movements for the information and use of educators and students in all English speaking countries . . . ."

"The spirit of the Anglo-American Institute is that of the true Soviet school. In its student organizations and student control of all physical and academic problems, the visitor to the institute will be enabled to see the workings of a Soviet University. Cultural and social activities will be provided for through the cooperation of Russian student bodies . . . In view of the imminence of the recognition of Soviet Russia by the United States, added importance attaches to an international education venture of this sort which seeks to further develop a more intimate contact between the students and educators of both countries."

Financial support: Tuition: $20 per course, with registration fee of $2.50, payable to Anglo-American Institute, First Moscow University, 545 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C. (Address of "Intourist").

Not clear from available Institute files that passage money, living expenses, etc., were paid by individuals. This was evidently the case, however, from a letter by Stephen Duggan to Skvirsky, 9/18/34, commenting on aspects of the 1934 session in which he said (p. 2) that he considered Intourist (official Soviet travel agency in this country) to be "a mere profit making scheme of the ordinary capitalistic kind, viz.:

they want to get the biggest return for the least possible outlay."

No indication exists that the Soviet Government underwrote the Summer School's finances in any way, or contributed any funds to the Institute. It did evidently bear some expenses, as the salary of a liaison man between the University officials and the student group. See Duggan letter, p. 4.

Position of Intourist: Official Soviet travel agency for foreign countries.

Evidently acted as clearing house for visa matters, passages, etc. (Cf., IPR hearings, pp. 5161, 5162, 5191).

See note above as to Duggan's view of Intourist as an ordinary "capitalistic" venture by the Soviets.

Position of VOKS: Per Duggan letter of 9/18/34 to Skvirsky, VOKS was directly responsible for physical accommodations of Summer School registrants and was one of the Soviet agencies with which summer school authorities (Sollins, and, to at least an extent, Duggan) dealt.

Told name means "Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries" (IPR report, p. 20). Aim was (a) importation of literature, (b) exportation of literature, (c) invitation of students, artists, etc., from other countries to U.S.S.R. Per testimony before McCarran Committee, it checked persons thoroughly and obtained NKVD clearance before inviting him, then would send tickets, etc. (IPR report, p. 37). Described (ibid.) as "cover organization" for getting information to Soviet intelligence and "sending infiltration of ideas and selling Communist ideas to the West."

Per report of Secretary General of IPR, 12/20-31/34, at that time VOKS represented 218 institutions and societies in the U.S.S.R. in the establishment of relationships with similar organizations elsewhere; furnished facilities to foreign students; "arranged for the American Institute which was held in Moscow last summer" (IPR Hearings, p. 4505; Report, p. 37).

Per the McCarran Committee (IPR report, p. 149), Carter, in 1937, said that Vox, in charge of all arrangements for visiting U.S.S.R., worked closely with the secret police; that Smirnov, its president, said it was important that social opinions and interests of "important Americans" be known to it.

Per E. C. Carter (IPR Report, p. 175), in 1937 VOKS paid all Carter's expenses from Vladivostok to Moscow on a trip in 1937--"thus in fact adding several hundred dollars to" the IPR treasury.

Contemporaneous Institute programs with other countries (see Institute Report for 10/1/35):

Summer Schools:

The Institute was accepting registrations, in 1935, for foreign summer schools in five countries: England, Austria, France, Germany and Switzerland.

Other Programs:

The Institute placed, for 1935-36, fellowship and scholarship students in Austria, China, Czechoslovakia, France, Germany, Hungary, Italy, Spain and Switzerland. Only one student (out of a total of 200) was placed in Spain. Two Spanish students (out of a total of 159) were placed by the Institute in U.S. institutions. No exchanges were effected with Russia.

Total Russian Students in U.S.

Tabulation by Institute shows following figures for Russian students and total foreign students in U.S. in years 1923-1935:

	Russian	Total
1923-24	391	6,984
1925-26	515	6,960
1926-27	340	7,541
1928-29	501	9,685
1930-31	473	9,961
1931-32	417	8,688
1932-33	327	6,894
1933-34	169	5,805
1934-35	152	5,887

Russian attitude toward Institute:

Per Duggan letter of 9/18/34, difficulties in relations with Soviet officials during 1934 session were not due to any hostility or apparent suspicion on the Russians' part, but to plain inefficiency among them. Relations were sufficiently uneasy so that Duggan was prepared to sever IIE connection with the Anglo-American Institute if student reports on the 1934 session were generally unfavorable. It was not cancelled on this ground, and plans went forward for a 1935 session.

Per Institute's 16th Annual Report of the Director, cancellation of the 1935 session was effected by the Russians, after the arrival of some 200 American students, on the ground that the English-speaking professors had been requisitioned for government work.

In 1946, the U.S. Department of State requested the Institute to make a survey of colleges and universities in the U.S. to determine if there existed any interest in U.S.-Soviet exchanges of students, professors and specialists. A favorable response was obtained, but the Soviet government, when approached by the State Department, indicated it was not prepared even to discuss the matter (see Vol. XXIV, No. 9, pp. 18-19, of IIE News Bulletin, 6/1/49).

In 1948, the Communist press attacked the Institute and Stephen Duggan, E. R. Murrow, Foster Dulles, Thomas Lamont and Virginia Gildersleeve, as trustees, in an article entitled "The High Aims of Mr. Duggan", printed in Uchitelskaya Gazeta ("Teacher's Gazette"), No. 5, dated January 30, 1948. The Institute was described as "the centre of international propaganda for American reaction, the nursery of a special detachment of American residents in all parts of the globe . . . a monopoly American Institution for international pedagogic relations, for training legal 'pedagogic' spies and informers and for establishing an 'American Column' in every country." A full translation (summary?) is attached.

D R A F T

Senator McCarthy attacked me because the Daily Worker on March 9th listed my television program as a "good bet" -- also, that in two subsequent issues this paper praised me. I cannot take responsibility for what the Daily Worker or any other publication has to say about my program or about me personally. I can say that I had no knowledge that I was to be the subject of notice by the Daily Worker or any other Communist publication. This is more than Senator McCarthy can say for the Communist support and the Communist funds he accepted in aid of his 1946 campaign for the United States Senate.

POSSIBLE INSERT

Senator McCarthy made considerable play with the Daily Worker's attacks upon him, and their commendation of certain of my television programs. Here again is the effort to prove that anyone who exposes McCarthy must be a Communist. I neither edit nor read the Daily Worker. That organ's opinion of me or of Senator McCarthy holds no fascination for me. But how does the Senator explain the fact that most of the responsible press of the free world opposes his methods and behaviour. To be consistent the Senator must contend that all those great organs of opinion are either communist-controlled or the dupes of communists. He can't have it both ways.

I

Edward R. Murrow, answering the charges against him made by Senator McCarthy on the 10:30 P.M. CBS SEE IT NOW TV program of Tuesday, April 6, 1954, tonight issued the following statement:

I deny that I have criticized Senator McCarthy for his tactics because he was engaged in digging out Communists. I am a loyal and patriotic American devoted to the task of freeing our nation from every vestige of Communist threat and infiltration. If I am critical of McCarthyism it is not because I desire to give comfort to our enemies but because I fear that McCarthyism, unless checked, may turn out to be as evil as Communism. A good portion of my life has been lived in the fish bowl of broadcasting and television appearances. My love of country and my dedication to its best interests have been passed upon favorably by experts and I am proud to abide by their decision. No intimidating threat by McCarthy that he will bring about an investigation of press and radio or destroy me will now or ever keep me from speaking the truth as I see it.

Never have I hesitated to attack the Communists nor will I ever. It was I who first pinned on the Communists responsibility for the horrible Katyn massacre, a charge which I broadcast to the world and which some six months later was substantiated by a committee of our own Congress. [Add Warsaw and February 8th or March 8th broadcast]. Yet when I join most of the responsible press of the free world and criticize McCarthy, the Senator chooses to label me as a Communist propagandist. The charge is as untrue as the vicious innuendos contained in the program tonight, all of which I label as false and misleading.

III

4. Senator McCarthy has attacked me as one who was "chosen" by the Soviet agency, VOKS, to act as its representative, doing work of the Soviet police, in connection with the Anglo-American Institute of the Moscow University Summer School session in 1934.

The facts are these: I was then assistant director of the Institute for International Education, an institution which was designed to improve American relations with foreign countries through exchanges of students and educational facilities. I have been associated with the Institute of International Education for more than 20 years, and have been one of its trustees since 1931. It is an association I am proud of and one in which I have had many distinguished associates--Ralph J. Bunche, John Foster Dulles, Milton Eisenhower, Virginia Gildersleeve, Thomas W. Lamont, to name just a few.

In 1934, the Moscow University had organized an Anglo-American Institute which proposed holding summer sessions in Moscow for English and American students. The Institute of International Education acted as American sponsor for the school in 1934 and I, as a representative of the Institute, was one of the 24-member National Advisory Council which was set up to advise the director of the Summer Session in its management. All of the members of the Advisory Council were selected by the Institute. None was selected by VOKS, or any other Soviet agency. The only contact which VOKS had with the school was in connection with procuring living and travel facilities for the group while it was in Russia. Inasmuch as VOKS was the Soviet bureau in charge of such matters for foreign visitors, so much contact with it was necessary if the students were to sleep and eat.

As for the Senator's charges that I was trying to Sovietize American students, the measure of the truth of this is that the Soviets refused, after the 1934 summer session, to have anything more to do with the Institute's program. It refused to permit students to attend the 1934 session under the Institute's auspices. When the Institute tried--at the request of the ~~Federal~~ United States Government--to arrange for American students to go to Russia in 1948, it was met with a Soviet blast, appearing in several Communist publications in Europe, calling it and its program "the centre of international propaganda for American reaction", and charging, among its trustees, John Foster Dulles as ". . . one of the most violent of the war mongers, publicly branded by A. Ya. Vyshinski." I was favored with the tag "reactionary radio commentator".

The Senator also states that "many" of the persons who attended the summer school later became Communists. He names two--and the Institute's roster of persons going to the 1934 school does not even carry the name of one of them, There were 190-odd at the summer session. In the Senator's language, two of these--one of whom may not have been there--is "many".

The Institute of International Education is today the contracting agency for the government of this country in administering various student programs abroad. It also administers student programs under the Fulbright Act and the Smith-Mundt Act. Over the course of the years, it has arranged, in all, some 30,000 exchanges of students and professors.

President Eisenhower has said of its work:

> "In these troubled days, the far-sighted policy of international education has become a firm foundation on which will ultimately rest the peace for which all the world is so earnestly yearning. I can assure you of my very best wishes and my full cooperation in the great achievements that lie ahead for the Institute of International Education."

I believed eighteen years ago, and I believe today that mature American graduate students and professors can engage in conversation and controversy, the clash of ideas with communists anywhere under peacetime conditions, without becoming contaminated or converted. To deny this would be to admit that in the realm of ideas, faith and conviction the communist cause, dogma and doctrine is stronger than our own. This reporter declines to admit that, but remains uncertain as to Senator McCarthy's position on this matter. I believe that even Senator McCarthy could hold his own in an interchange of this kind--although that conclusion may be open to some doubt inasmuch as the Senator accepted Communist support and Communist funds in aid of his 1946 campaign.

Statement Re Institute for International Education

Edward R. Murrow has been associated with the Institute for International Education for more than 20 years and has been a Trustee since 19 . The Institute is a private, nonprofit organization for the promotion of international exchanges in the educational field. It was established in 1919, right after the First World War, as a result of the concern of a number of eminent Americans (including such leaders in education as Nicholas Murray Butler and Elihu Root) with the obstacle to mutual understanding among nations formed by ignorance of other countries' ways. It was, at the outset, entirely financed by private funds. For many years the Carnegie Endowment was its principal support. The Rockefeller Foundation and, more recently, the Ford Foundation have also contributed generously.

During the 35 years of its existence, the Institute has carried out its purpose by establishing opportunities and providing means for the mutual exchange of students, technicians, professors and specialists between the United States and some 75 other countries. It has numbered among its directors persons distinguished in almost every field of affairs. Included among these, past and present, have been Nicholas Murray Butler, one of the Institute's founders, John Foster Dulles, Stephen P. Duggan, Frank P. Graham, Ordway Tead, Robert Benton, Virginia Gildersleeve, Robert M. Hutchins and Millicent Carey McIntosh.

Commencing in 1938, the Institute has done extensive work in cooperation with the United States Government. It commenced in that year, as a result of representations from the State Department, to make concentrated efforts to increase Latin-American exchanges in order to combat the effect of Hitler propaganda in this Hemisphere. Under a contract arrangement with the United States Government, it has since continued to administer Government funds for student exchanges and has acted as the Government's scholarship administrator under the Fulbright and Smith-Mundt Acts. It has also worked for and with the Department of the Army in reorientation programs with Germany, Austria and Japan.

With regard to the Institute's work, President Eisenhower has said:

> "In these troubled days, the far-sighted policy of international education has become a firm foundation on which will ultimately rest the peace for which all the world is so earnestly yearning. I can assure you of my very best wishes and my full cooperation in the great achievements that lie ahead for the Institute of International Education."

The Institute's connection with the Anglo-American Institute of the First Moscow University in the years 1933-35 was only a small part of the Institute's endeavors to help in bringing about understanding between this country and others.

It was the only instance of such an endeavor directed toward the Soviet Union. Because of Soviet interference, it was unsuccessful, and it was abandoned after the Russians withdrew recognition of the Institute as a student exchange agency in 1935. The summer session operated only one season, that of 1934, when some 150 American students and teachers attended, under the Institute's auspices, a three-week session of the Moscow State University Summer School. A 1935 session was scheduled, but Soviet authorities cancelled their recognition of the Institute before the session commenced and refused thereafter to recognize the Institute as an accredited exchange agency. In 1938, the Communist Press in Russia and other European countries attacked the Institute as a "center of international propaganda for American reaction". In the same article, Mr. Murrow was called a "reactionary radio commentator", and his position cited as evidence of the Institute's supposed purpose.

Any suggestion that the Institute, or Mr. Murrow, was a dupe of the Communists because of contact with the Anglo-American section of the Moscow State University in 1934 is, in light of these facts, absurd.

"The United States Government has also endeavored to foster such educational interchange in every way possible. The cooperation and assistance which it has received in this program from the Institute, and from the colleges and universities of this country, have been deeply appreciated. I am sure that the plan of the Institute for expanding its services will increase its rich experience in educational exchange and further benefit this country in its cultural relations with other nations."

--Harry S. Truman

"The Institute in reaching its thirtieth anniversary as a private organization which has so long recognized and fulfilled its obligation, deserves the thanks of the citizens of the U. S. and a deep appreciation of the services your Institute has rendered."

--Eleanor Roosevelt

"Further development of the Institute should be of distinct advantage to the perpetuation of the ideals of UNESCO."

Statement Re National Student Federation of America

Neither Edward R. Murrow nor the National Student Federation of America, of which Mr. Murrow was President in 1930, has, or has ever had, any connection with the National Student Union. The National Student Federation was organized as a Federation of student government bodies in 1925. It was, under its charter and in the conduct of its affairs, non-sectarian and nonpolitical.

The Federation continued in existence, holding annual conventions for the exchange of student thought, until 1942, and during this period encouraged various student activities, including the exchange of debating teams with foreign countries and the organization of student European tours. In November 1930 (when Mr. Murrow was President of the NSFA) President Herbert Hoover said of these activities:

> "Wisely directed efforts looking toward greater enlightenment upon international problems and a more intelligent sympathy between nations deserve commendation and support. The work of the National Student Federation in this field is most promising and encouraging."

During the war years, the Federation was unable to carry on its program. The 1942 convention was cancelled and the Federation thereafter went out of existence.

Several other student organizations came into existence after 1930, some of them as a result of secession of radical elements from the NSFA. One of these was the American Student Union. Any attempt to confuse the National Student Federation with the American Student Union is wholly without basis in fact.

Dear Ed:

Knowing how jammed your mail must be, I have asked Dottie to pass this on to you. It is probably a case of being over-zealous because you and Fred have no doubt already covered this. However, just on the chance that you have not----

Among the sources for background information on the McCarthy story I should like to mention a friend of mine who really knows it thoroughly. He is Lindsay Hoben, chief editorial writer of the Milwaukee Journal. He has done many of the Journal stories and editorials on the Senator and I'm sure could be of great assistance in furnishing you any material to round out the picture that you might require.

sent to Shuster 3/26 Dm.

For your information our switchboard count at CBS-Chicago showed that between the end of your March 9 See It Now and Friday noon of March 12 we had received 2440 calls. Of this number 86 were pro-McCarthy, the others cheered Murrow. On the morning after the Lewis Junior interview we received 60 calls of which one (one---sic) was pro-McCarthy. I have no figures on the calls to WGN-MBS locally. I needn't tell you, Ed, how much your friends here admire what you are doing to show that radio-TV can be the great instrument that it should be.

Thanks for sending Miles Jebb to us. He is a fine boy. Toni and I chose Washington's birthday (a bank holiday) to take him to visit the birthplace of Col. McCormick where he could better reflect on the sins of the British. As you may know, Col. McCormick was born in the up-stairs bar of the Key Club, 150 East Ontario Street, Chicago, Il. Miles was properly impressed when we took him upstairs after lunch. He said that although he didn't really collect such things, he HAD once seen Churchill's birthplace in Blenheim Palace, and as a matter of fact it was a similar-sized room.

If there is any way in which we might help you and Fred, I know you will call on me.

Sincerely,

AS YOU KNOW IN ACCORDANCE WITH YOUR WIRE OF MARCH 13TH OFFERING TO MAKE AVAILABLE ONE HALF HOURS TIME TO REPLY TO YOUR ATTACKS ON ME I DESIGNATED MR. WILLIAM BUCKLEY, AUTHOR OF "GOD AND MAN AT YALE" AND CO-AUTHOR OF THE FORTHCOMING BOOK, "MCCARTHY AND HIS ENEMIES," TO PRESENT A DOCUMENTED ANSWER TO YOU. MR. BUCKLEY ACCEPTED THIS INVITATION. I TODAY RECEIVED YOUR WIRE DATED MARCH 14TH TO THE EFFECT THAT THE TIME WILL NOT BE ALLOWED IF I SELECT SOMEONE TO ANSWER BUT THAT IT WILL BE AVAILABLE IF I PERSONALLY ANSWER YOU. NORMALLY I WOULD NOT WASTE THE TIME TO MERELY PROVE THAT A RADIO AND TV COMMENTATOR WHO ATTACKS ME IS LYING. HOWEVER, IF I AM CORRECT IN MY POSITION THAT YOU HAVE CONSCIOUSLY SERVED THE COMMUNIST CAUSE THEN IT IS VERY IMPORTANT FOR YOUR LISTENERS TO HAVE THE CLEAR CUT DOCUMENTED FACTS SO THEY CAN DECIDE WHETHER OR NOT YOU ARE AS TRUTHFUL AS YOU ATTEMPT TO MAKE OUT OR DELIBERATELY MISREPRESENTING THE FACTS. THEREFORE, I SHALL ACCEPT YOUR OFFER OF TIME. IF POSSIBLE I WOULD PREFER THE TIME TWO WEEKS LATER THAN MARCH 23RD, NAMELY APRIL 6TH.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
(CBS RADIO NETWORK)
(HARD NEWS PORTION)

FRIDAY, MARCH 12, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The government reports that unemployment increased by 584-thousand persons in February. It was the fourth straight monthly increase. There are now three million 671-thousand unemployed. In the past three months, December, January and February, the figure on the unemployed increased by two million.

Once again tonight, Senator McCarthy and Army Secretary Stevens are in violent verbal disagreement. An army report says that Senator McCarthy and his Chief Counsel, Roy Cohn, applied pressure and threats to the army to try to get special treatment for a former committee aide, David Schine, who was drafted into the army. The Army report says the 27-year-old Cohn threatened to "get" Secretary Stevens and wreck the army. Cohn denies this and he and McCarthy say the army has been using this report in an attempt to "blackmail" the McCarthy committee to give up up its search for Communists in the army. McCarthy today released an unsigned memorandum saying that Army Secretary Stevens once suggested that the Committee aim its search for Communists at the Navy, the Air Force and the Defense Department. The unsigned McCarthy memorandum says Stevens offered to "furnish leads and plenty of dirt" for such an investigation.

Secretary Stevens promptly called this "utterly untrue." And the Army's legal counsel, John G. Adams, who is alleged to have had conversations with McCarthy on such things, calls the McCarthy memorandum "fantastic and false."

One McCarthy committee member, Republican Potter of Michigan, called for a quick hearing to determine whether what he called "these shocking charges" against Cohn are true. Another Republican committee member, Dirksen of Illinois said McCarthy violated an agreement with other Republicans not to release his memorandum at least until they had discussed the Army's report on McCarthy and Cohn. Dirksen says "the present controversey has gone far enough."

The three Democrats on the committee want an early hearing on the Army's report - so does Republican Senator Mundt, another member. Senator McCarthy left Washington today to make some speeches in Wisconsin.

Chairman Millikan of the Senate Finance Committee says the Senate will probably go along with the House on a reduction in excise taxes. He promised to battle against any further moves to cut income taxes.

Chairman Cole of the Atomic Energy Committee says the committee has been checking all atomic installations for missing documents as "a routine" matter. Representative Pelly of Washington state says "highly secret" papers are missing from the atomic plant at Hanford in his state. He says the volume of the missing papers is "rather extensive."

In Europe today, an American military source in Frankfurt says a Russian-made Mig attacked two of our navy planes on the German-Czech frontier. One plane was badly shot up. Both managed to land safely at Munich.

And Belgium today joined Holland as the only two countries that have completely ratified the European army treaty.

I assume that most people have on their minds matters of more considerable substance than Senator McCarthy's opinion of this reporter, or mine of him. However, it might serve some purpose to set some part of the record straight. Let us begin with the subject of the Civil Liberties Union. Here is Senator McCarthy's statement on that subject, recorded while he was interrogating Reed Harris:

TAPE: HARRIS

Q. Did the Civil Liberties Union provide you with an attorney at any time?

A. I had many offers of attorneys and one of those was from the American Civil Liberties Union, yes.

Q. The question is did the Civil Liberties Union supply you with an attorney?

A. They did supply an attorney.

Q. The answer is yes?

A. The answer is yes..

Q. You know the Civil Liberties Union has been listed as a front for and doing the work of the Communist Party?

A. Mr. Chairman this was 1932.

Q. I know it was 1932. Do you know they since have been listed as a front for and doing the work of the Communist party?

A. I do not know that they have been listed so, sir.

Q. You don't know they have been listed?

A. I have heard that mentioned or read that mentioned.

Now here is this reporter's comment, made on a recent television program:

TAPE: MURROW:

"The Reed Harris hearing demonstrates one of the Senator's techniques. Twice he said the American Civil Liberties Union was listed as a subversive front. The Attorney General's list does not and has never listed the ACLU as subversive, nor does the F.B.I. or any other ~~government~~ Federal agency. And the American Civil Liberties Union holds in its files letters of commendation from President Eisenhower, President Truman and General MacArthur."

Here again is what Senator McCarthy said last night, when asked by Fulton Lewis, Jr., to comment on my remarks:

TAPE: MCCARTHY "May I say there are some individuals in the ACLU who are good Americans, but Murrow again was not telling the truth when he said it had not been listed. I have as you see, here, Fulton, the fourth report of the un-American Activities Committee in California. I quote from page 107 .. this is a quotation in regard to the organization Murrow said had not been listed. "The American Civil Liberties Union may be definitely classed as a communist-front or transmission-belt organization. At least ninety percent of its efforts are expended on behalf of Communists who come into conflict with the law" - so that again, Mr. Murrow is not telling the truth."

I specifically stated "the Attorney General's list, the F.B.I. and any other government agency." Someone lied - there's no doubt about that.

Now let us turn to another subject. Mr. Lewis last night asked the Senator to comment on a television program of which I am the editor. Here is Senator McCarthy's reply. I have no hesitation in giving it such circulation as this broadcast may enjoy.

TAPE: MCCARTHY: "I may say, Fulton, that I have a little difficulty answering the specific attack he made because I never listen to the extreme left-wing, bleeding heart element of radio and television.."

The Senator may have me there. I may be a "bleeding heart", being not quite sure of what it means. As for being "extreme left wing," that is political shorthand; but if the Senator means that I am somewhat to the left of his position and of Louis XIV, he is correct.

Now here are the facts about that Moscow summer school. The date was 1935. I was the Assistant Director of the Institute of International Education. This organization dealt primarily with the exchange of students and professors between this and foreign countries. It had established offices in London, Paris, Berlin, Geneva and elsewhere. It was largely financed at that time by the Carnegie Corporation and the Rockefeller Foundation. Among its board of trustees were such as John Foster Dulles, John Bassot Moore, Thomas W. Lamont, Virginia Gildersleeve, and others equally distinguished. This board of trustees created an advisory committee in connection with a summer school in Moscow for graduate students, teachers and professors. Here is the list of advisors:

W.W. Charters, Director, Bureau of Educational Research, Ohio State University.

Harry Wooburn Chase, Chancellor of New York University.

George S. Counts, Professor of Education. Teachers College, Columbia University.

John Dewey, Professor Emeritus of Philosophy, Columbia University.

Stephen Duggan, Director, Institute of International Education.

Hallie F. Flanagan, Professor of English, Vassar College.

Frank P. Graham, President, University of North Carolina.

Robert M. Hutchins, President, University of Chicago.

Charles H. Judd, Dean, School of Education, University of Chicago.

I,L. Kandel, Professor of Education, Teachers College, Columbia University.

Robert L. Kelly, Secretary, Association of American Colleges.

John A. Kingsbury, Secretary, Milbank Memorial Fund.

Susan M. Kingsbury, Professor of Social Economy and Social Research, Bryn Mawr College.

Paul Klapper, Dean, School of Education, College of the City of New York.

Charles R. Mann, Director, American Council of Education.

Edward R. Murrow, Assistant Director, Institute of International Education.

William Allan Neilson, President, Smith College.

Howard W. Odum, Professor of Sociology, University of North Carolina.

William F. Russell, Dean, Teachers College, Columbia University.

H.W. Tyler, General Secretary, American Association of University Professors

Ernest H. Wilkins, President, Oberlin College.

John W. Withers, Dean, School of Education, New York University.

Thomas Woody, Professor of History of Education, University of Pennsylvania.

Harvey W. Zorbaugh, Director, Clinic for the Social Adjustment of Gifted Children, New York University.

Some of the persons on that list are now dead, but presumably not yet immune from the Senator's attentions. It was and is a rather distinguished list, and I plead neither ignorance nor youth as the reason for my name being on it.

The Russian authorities abruptly, and without satisfactory explanation, cancelled the proposed summer school before it began, and most of the prospective members spent the summer travelling in the Soviet Union. I did not accompany the group to the Soviet Union. No effort was made to revive the venture, and the advisory council was therefore dissolved. The Institute of International Education continued to arrange student and professorial exchanges, and to make arrangements for American students to attend summer sessions in various foreign countries, but not in the Soviet Union.

I believed eighteen years ago, and I believe today that mature American graduate students and professors can engage in conversation and controversy, the clash of ideas with communists anywhere under peacetime conditions, without becoming contaminated or converted. To deny this would be to admit that in the realm of ideas, faith and conviction the communist cause, dogma and doctrine is stronger than our own. This reporter declines to admit that, but remains uncertain as to Senator McCarthy's position on this matter.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

We are sending along all pertinent file materials we can find in relation to the Moscow Summer Sessions. I hope you are able to make good use of this material. Please advise me if I, in Ken Holland's absence, can be of further assistance.

I want to call your attention especially to a copy of an article run in the "Teacher's Gazette" on January 30, 1948 in Moscow. It states pretty forcefully what the Soviets think about the IIE.

Sincerely yours,

Albert G. Sims
Vice President

enc.

P.S. I am also enclosing a copy of the latest "Study Abroad" (Summer 1954) and a quick run-down of the kinds of programs that the Institute "sponsors" for foreign governments and groups - sponsors in the sense of publicizing and screening candidates as a facilitating service.

THE "HIGH AIMS" OF MR. DUGGAN
(Full Summary of 2-1/2 column article)
by Prof. M. Bernstein.

The magazine "America" published for Russian readers by the US Information Bureau, kindly lent the pages of its twelfth number to Professor Stephen Duggan and his son, Directors of the Institute of International Education, in New York, on the question of "international exchange of students and scholars". The article is richly illustrated with idyllic pictures of students from Hungary, Mexico, India, Iceland, Greece, and Palestine, relaxing, eating, reading and working in laboratories. The authors are discursively eloquent on the "need for a mutual understanding which would pass the barriers of race, nation and creed" on "the strengthening of good will and community of aims between the democratic countries". They try to convince Soviet readers that their Institute of International Education (IIE) has from its very inception concerned itself only with the attainment of these high aims.

Duggan is trying to extend the activity of the IIE to the USSR. He has made similar attemps not a few times before, but without success, for it is well known in the Soviet Union what Mr. Duggan and the Institute, which he heads, represent.

The IIE came into being literally on the day following the end of the first World War when the most aggressive section of American monopoly capital had placed on the agenda the question of the world hegemony of the USA. The new foreign political tasks of American imperialism called to life new organizational forms of political, economic and ideological expansion. A distinct and important role in the general scheme for the ideological offensive was assigned to the "educational" cadres of American imperialism.

The Institute of International Education was organized under the stamp of the well-known philanthropic Carnegie fund. But this was merely a mask and not a particularly clever one. From the very first days of its existence, the IIE had been the centre of international propaganda for American reaction, the nursery of a special detachment of American residents in all parts of the globe. As from 1926 when the Institute had given practical evidence of its ability to perform the tasks laid upon it, a special conference of representatives of the Morgan and Rockefeller philanthropic organizations financing the Institute and of representatives of the American Education Council which was the ideological and political inspiration behind it, turned the IIE into a monopoly American institution for international pedagogic relations, for training legal "pedagogic" spies and informers and for establishing an "American column" in every country.

Moreover, from 1939 onwards the IIE in practice controlled the entire work of consultation, information and orientation as well as of supervision connected with all foreign students studying in American higher education establishments even of those who do not enjoy the material support of the Institute and who have no need whatsoever of its guardianship. In other words, since the beginning of the '40s, the IIE has held in its hands all the threads of American foreign pedagogic relations.

The annual reports published by the Institute and the writings of Duggan himself, give an idea of the proportions, forms and methods of the work of this outpost of US "pedagogic" aggression and reveal the immense danger which its many-sided activity presents to the independence of peoples, to real democratic peace and cultural progress.

As to the political colour of the Institute, it will suffice to say that one member of its management is the notorious John Foster Dulles - one of the most violent of the warmongers, publicly branded by A. Ya. Vyshinski; others are Thomas Lamont - big banker and director of a number of industrial and transport corporations; E. Morrow - reactionary radio commentator; Paul Monroe, Virginia Gildersleeve, and a whole pleiad of such educationalists with long experience in planting American "educational" institutions in colonial and semi-colonial countries.

The chief activity of the IIE is the organization of international student exchanges. In the 25 years of its existence it has sent about 2.5 thousand American students abroad, and placed more than 3000 students from Europe, Asia and South America in American colleges.

The American students have to pass through a two-fold political filter - they are selected by special selection committees attached to the establishments and colleges which have made the agreement with Mr. Duggan in the transaction concerned. The recommendation of their own colleges alone, however, is not enough; candidates must pass before a selection committee in the Institute of International Education itself.

Every student sent abroad must present two reports to the Institute - one during his stay, the other on his return home. These reports are secret and may be used only for the information of other students who are subsequently sent to the same country.

Two important criterions in the selection of candidates are: positive references from "politically reliable" persons and a capacity for getting on with other people. Students sent abroad by the IIE are advised not to confine themselves to their academic pursuits, but to "study the cultural, political and social life of the country to which they are sent, make friends with the local students and visit their homes, and establish friendly relations with the population".

The information which comes in through the Institute, as Duggan proudly declares, is more correct and reliable than that procured by the State Department through its Intelligence agents.

The real nature of the training which the IIE gives to American students staying abroad was "brilliantly" demonstrated during the recent war: in the words of its director the Institute became a reserve from which the American War Department and other state organs could draw trained cadres of occupation experts and colonisers. And one cannot but agree with Mr. Duggan that in this respect "the IIE justified the hopes of its real patrons and friends".

Since its inception the IIE has placed over 3000 foreign students in specially selected US colleges. They, unlike their American opposites, have to pass through a three-fold filter. Besides the selection made in Institutes in their own countries they must also come before a selection board organized in their countries and obliged to include two American residents there who enjoy the confidence of Duggan & Co. The final say belongs to a selection committee in the IIE itself.

When he has finally passed through all these filters and won a scholarship from the Institute, the foreign student comes under its total guardianship and the tireless supervision of its agents in American colleges. In practice he is told which college he must enter. There he is directed by a specially chosen "professor" who "advises" him in all questions, even in the choice of newspapers and magazines to read, meetings to attend, and in the organization of his private relationships. All this is done in order that the student shall form "real enthusiasm for the American way of life and American civilization".

In the words of Duggan, only very few foreign students fail to yield to this "ideological" suasion. This is very likely, for the "fortunates" honoured with Duggan's "bounty" are naturally the offspring of the families of the ruling cliques in foreign states who are, according to Duggan, "candidates for leading public service" in their own country. Such selection is, of course, no mere chance. In its work with foreign students the IIE sets itself far-reaching goals; it plans to establish an American core among the ruling classes of the corresponding countries. As the Second World War again showed, in its respect too its calculations have justified themselves to a considerable extent. Duggan maintains that "the majority of foreign students who have passed through the IIE have proved loyal friends of the USA". It is among them that the Americans now seek and find "convinced" supporters of the "Truman doctrine", who fawn to Uncle Sam and are prepared to sell and betray the national sovereignty and the national dignity of their country for a dollar sop.

The second extensive branch of the IIE's activity is its "academic exchanges", i.e., the organization of lectures by foreign scholars in American colleges and by American scholars in foreign colleges. The selection of scholars invited to America, like the selection of American professors sent abroad, has a specific character. Both, as a rule, belong to the openly reactionary camp. In any case they must all be absolutely "reliable" from the point of view of capitalist ideology and "loyal" to American policy.

The IIE has spared no energies to organize "lecture tours" for such venerable "scholars" as ... the former President of the German Reichsbank, Schacht, and the Italian diplomat, Carlo Sforza, as well as a visit of the notorious airman Lindberg to the Latin-American and Far Eastern countries "to study schools, universities and the education systems as a whole".

The Nuremberg trial of the main German War criminals proved beyond doubt the "academic" nature of Schacht's visit to the USA. Evidently Duggan did not foresee such an end for his fascist protege when in 1943 he tried to deceive American and world public opinion by asserting that "Schacht did not receive a cent of credit from America".

Nor could Duggan, evidently, foresee that the secret of the sudden "pedagogic" transformation of Lindberg would be given away by his friend and companion-in-arms, John Barrett, who told representatives of the press that the visit of the "American prince", Colonel Lindberg, to Latin America, had been planned in order to weaken the impression made by the visit of the then Prince of Wales.

On the other hand, Duggan not only foresaw but awaited with impatience proofs of the beneficial influence of the IIE on his friend, Sforza. When, with the aid of his American protectors, the latter attained to the office of Italian Foreign Minister, he instructed his newspaper to declare that "any power which has signed the peace treaty may make any armed landing it please on any part of the Italian coast ...".

After this, how could Duggan not boast of his successes in organizing "academic exchanges" and in "strengthening mutual understanding between democratic peoples"...

What is the real attitude of Duggan and his Institute to the Soviet Union? In his last article in "America" he writes that "ignorance and prejudice are the primary factors which give birth to ill-will and conflict between peoples". These words apply perfectly to Duggan himself. All his activity and writings have proved not only his prejudice and ignorance in questions concerning the USSR, but also his complete inability to learn the appropriate lessons from his personal "experience" in this sphere.

The Socialist Revolution aroused in Duggan alarm and terror almost bestial. With the solemn mien of the venerable "scholar" he took to producing vile fictions about the "Bolshevist terror which has deprived Russia of her intellectual forces", the Bolsheviks as disturbers of peace throughout the world", and so on.

With the generous means put at his disposal by Morgan and Rockefeller he has made repeated attempts to prepare an American core for the USSR - through his "Russian Student Fund" mobilizing White Russian emigrés and by personal visits to the Soviet Union in 1925 and again in 1934.

He has met, however, with repeated failure. The frontiers of the USSR have proved firmly barred to his agents. Nothing has been left but to return to his old weapon against the Societ people - slander. And in this respect, in his last, autobiographical book, - "A Professor in the Wildest Sense of the World" - he has excelled himself.

Such is Mr. Duggan, who conceals beneath the gown of "Professor of International Pedagogy" a poisoned weapon of Intelligence and espionage; such is the Institute under his direction.

On March 9th Mr. Edward R. Murrow, Educational Director of the Col. Broad. Co, devoted his program to an attack on the work of the United States Senate Investigating Committee and on me personally as its chairman. Over the past four years he has made repeated attacks on me and those fighting Communist infiltration of this nation. Neither Joe McCarthy nor Edward R. Murrow is of any great importance as individuals. We are only important in our relation to the great struggle to preserve our American liberties. The Senate Investigating Committee has forced out of government and out of critical defense plants Communists engaged in the Soviet conspiracy. The visiousness of Murrow's attacks is in direct proportion to our success in digging out Communists.

Ordinarily, I not take time out from the important work at hand, to answer Murrow. However, in this case, I feel justified in doing so because Murrow is the symbol, the leader and the cleverest of the jaeckle pack which is always found at the throat of anyone who dares to expose individual Communists and traitors.

I am compelled by the facts to say to you that Mr. Edward R. Murrow as far back as 21 years ago was engaged in propaganda for Communist causes. The Inst. of Internat. Educa. of which he was an ass't

Abe Feller - ? - John Bovington
Isodore Begun
Zablowsky

director ~~and acting director~~, was chosen to act as representative by a Soviet agency to do the work which would normally be done by the Russian secret police. Mr. M, sponsored a Communist school in Moscow. ~~and~~ IN The selection of American teaches and students who were to attend, Mr. Murro's organization acted for the Russian espionage and propaganda organization known as VOKS.

Many of those selected were later exposed as Communists. Wis organizer John Bullen B.E. Blaisdell joined the Commie party after attending the Murrow sponsored school. Zolley Johnson Isodore Begun

Zabodowsky

[Julia Older] was fired from the United Nations ~~SS~~ IN 1952 as a Fifth Amend. Communist after she had been exposed by Roy Cohn's grand jury investigating Commie's in the U.N. out of UN

[Here's a picture of the typicaly student selected to attend the Comm. school in Moscow by ~~Mr.~~ M.'s organizagion.]

Mr. Murrow by his own admission was a member of the IWW, the Industrial Workers of the World---a terrorist organization cited as subversive by the Attorney Gen. of the U.S. who stated that ~~it~~ IT was an organization which seeks "to alter the [form of] government of the United States by unconstitutional means". Other government committees have had

We can hardly make the same plea

before them actors, screen writers, motion picture producers and others who admitted Communist affilitations, but pleaded youth or ignorance.

On March 9th of this year Mr. M., a trained reporter who had travelled all over the world, who was the Eeducational director of CBS, followed implicitly the Commie line as laid down within the last six months not only by the Commie Daily Worker, but by the Commie magazine "Political Affairs", by the National Conference of the Communist Party of America [and by William Z. Foster, the former head of the Comm. party in the U.S.]

Why is it important to you, the peple of America to know why the Educational dir. and vice Pres. of CBS so closely follows the Comm. Party line? To answer that question we must turn back the pages of history. A little over a hundred years ago a little group of men in Europe conspired to deliver the world to a new system---to Communism. Under their system the individual was nothing, the family was nothing, God did not even exist. Their theory was that an all-powerful state should have the power of life or death over its citizens without even a trial. That everything and everybody belonged to the rulers of the state [even including the unborn child.] They openly wrote — nothing secret — that in their efforts to gain power any means would be justified by the end...deceit, lies, terror, murder, treason, BLACKMAIL, were elevated into virtues. If a convert to Communism could be pursuaded that he was a citizen of the world it would be easier to make him a traitor to his own country.

For seventy years the Communists made little progress.

Let me show you a map of the world as it stood in the middle of the first World War in 1917 before the Russian revolution. You see there was not a single foot of ground on the face of the globe under the domination or control ofthe Commies. Bear in mind that this was only 36 years ago.

In 1917 we were engaged in a great world war in defense of our way of life and defense of American liberty.

The Kaiser was obliged to divide his armies and fight on both the eastern and western fronts. In the midst of the war the Russian people overthrew their Czarist master and set up a democratic form of government under the leadership of Alexander Kerensky. Kerensky's government instantly pledged [continued loyalty of Russia] allout support to the allies.

At this instant, the imperial German government secretly financed the return to Russia of seven Commie exiles [who had been forced to flee led by N Lenin

the country. These men were Nikolai Lenin, Leon Trotsky, Carl Ruddek---

Once in Russia by the very methods which the Communists are employing in America today they underminded the army, the navy, the civilian heads of government, and in 100 days they were literally the masters of Russia.

Now with all the wealth of the nation at their command they proceeded to organize Communist parties in every country of the world. They sent to these countries trained propagandists and spies, and in every country they found men like Ed.R.M. who would sponsor invitations to students and teachers to attend indoctrination schools in Moscow exactly as Murrow did. They trained Communists in every country of the world, whose sole purpose was to infiltrate the government and once themselves in government employed others.

Now let's look at a map of the world as of tonight. This sixth day of April, 1954 and compare with the map of 36 years ago, then not even a red speck on the map of the whole wide world.

11 years ago one country with 180 million people in Commie chains. Tonight, on the sixth day of April 1954, over one third of the earth's area our partisans Guatemala seeping into Honduras.

is under Commie control and 8 hundred million in chains.

How much of this was achieved by military force and how much by the traitors and Commie line propagandists in our own governemtn and the other free governments?

Let's start in Europe. They took by military force a little piece of Finland; ~~thex~~ and in the same way they took three small Baltic States, Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia. When ~~xxxxx~~ they precipitated the second World World they took half of Poland the same way. They acquired the rest of Poland through Polish traitors and Communists in ~~their~~ OUR own governemt ~~xxxxx~~ WHO gave American dollars and American support tothe Communists in Poland.

They took over Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary without firing a single shot, by the infiltration of Russian Communists ~~xxxxx~~ and domestic Communists in these governments.

How did they get Yugoslavia?...who were the Communists traitors in ~~xx~~ our government when we repudiated Mihailovitch who had fought with us throughout the war? Who are the Communists in our governmen t who induced our support of Communist Tito?

The Commie's took ~~of~~ over Czechoslovakia without firing a shot. They did this by infiltration of Communists into the Czech governemnt.

Listen to what a high official in the anti-Communist government of Czech. said:

"In my country the pattern was identical with what it is here. If anyone, before the Communists took over, dared to attack us, those Communists who were preparing and shaping the policy of my government to betray my people. He was promptly attacked and destroyed by a combination of Communist fellow-travelers and those unthinking people who thought they were serving the cause of liberalism and progress, but who actually were serving the cause of the most reactionary credo of all times, Communism.

How about this vast land area and the teeming masses of China. 400 million captured by force of arms? Certainly not. They were delivered to Commie slave masters by the jaeckle pack of Commie-line propagandists who day after day shouted to the world that the Chinese Communists were agrarian reformists and our ally, the Republic of China, represented everything that was evil and wicked.

If there were no communists in our government would we have consented to turn over half of Germany and one half of Austria to the Russians?

omission this pg

If there was no Communists in our governemtn, why was Governor Winant when negotiating for the Corridor in Berlin advised by the State Department to try to get the Corridor, but don't irritate the Russians.

This decision has already cost the lives of 35 or 40 American boys and hundreds of millions of dollars.

If there were no Commies in our governemtn would we have given Russia 11 billion of Lend Lease even when they refuse to permit even a single American military observer to enter Russia? If there were no Commies in our government the very time we were saving the Russians from German army, would we have acceded in their refusal to permit a single American aviator to land in Russia?

The Germans were getting their oil from the Polesti oil fields of Rumania. We were bombing those oil fields from our bases in Africa. Three thousand American fliers were shot down and interned for the duration of the war in enemy prison camps in Rumania because our Russian allies would not permit them to land in Russia.

Now let us move to the East again. For (BLANK) months we were engaged in a live and death struggle in a war with Japan. During all of that time we were supporting Russian armies in Europe with men and armaments. Nevertheless, the Russians absolutely refused to ~~xxxxxxxx~~ lie a finger to aid us in the Japanese War.

After we had dropped the atomic bomb on Japan the Russian hastened to register dive day participation in the war.

If there had been no Commie influence in our governemtn would we have rewarded them with all of Manahuria, half of the Kurile Island, and one half of Korea. How many Americans have died and will die because of this No one will every know.

If there were no Commie influence in our governemtn why did Sec. of State D. Acheson invite the Korean War by telling the Russians that we had no interest in Korea.

When we abandoned 400 million Chinese to Commie slavery masters, the principle adviser on foreign policy was Owen Lattimore. He has since been named by a Democrat controlled Sen. Committee "a conscious, articulate insturment of Communist conspiracy". He has been indicted by a Fed. grand jury. On page (BLANK) of his book, he signles out and expresses gratitude for Murrow's ardent support.

If there were no commie in our government why did we delay for 18 months research on the hydrogen bomb even though our intelligence agencies were reporting that the Russian were feverishly ~~xxxxxxxxx~~ pushing the development of the H-bomb. Expand — we are my die

There is a saying that A GOOD LAWYER ~~xxxxxxxxxxx~~ always advises a defendant that time and confusion work in his favor. Communist-line propagandists are already ~~xx~~ ready to vilify and smear those who expose traitors and having done a deadly job of creating delays and confusions. Thanks to their efforts we have squandered hundreds of billions of dollars; we have engaged in an abhortive war, and we have lost a third of the world.

It is often said following that it is suffieient to fight Communism in Europe and Asia, but Communism is not an American domestic issue. But the record is that the damage has already been done by ~~carefully~~ clearly calculated subversion at home. IT is the problem of subversion that ~~This is the problem~~ our committee faces.

Let us quickly glance at some of the work our Committee has done in slightly over a year's time. 238 witnesses were examined in public session. 367 witnesses were examined in executive session. 84 witnesses refused to tesitfy as to Communist activities or espionage on the grounds that thruthful testimony might go send them to jail. 24 witnesses with Communist background were ~~xxxxxxx~~ discharged or resigned top secret material because of their Communist activities which were exposed before our committee. Of course you cannot measure the success of the Committee by a score based on the number of Communist heads that have rolled from secret jobs. It is completely impossible to even estimate the effect of our government's day by day plotting and exposure of communists.

For example, exposure of one Fifth Amendment Communist in the government printing office, having access to secret material from almost every government agency would result in undisclosed numbers of suspensions, and removal of the printing office loyalty board and a revamping of the loyalty rules. Disclosure of Communists in the military and radar laboratories result in the abolition of the Pentagon board which had cleared and ordered reinstated Communists who have for years been handling government secrets.

Army orders have been issued to prevent a recurrence of the Perris scandal which was exposed by the committee.

To evaluate the effective work of an investigation committee would be as impossible as to attempt to evaluate the effects of well-trained watchdogs upon the activities of potential burglars.

We Americans live in a free world--a world where we can stand as individuals; where we can go to the church of our choice and worship god, each in our own fashion; where we can freely speak our opinions on any subject.

Whether we shall continue to so live has come to issue now. We will soon know whether we are going to go on living this kind of life or whether we are going to live the kind of life that 800-million slaves live under Communist domination. The issue is simple-- life or death for our civilization.

If you think I've been rough with Mr. Murrow --and there are those who complain my methods in attacking Communists-- Mr. Murrow said on this program and I quote "The actions of the junior senator from Wisconsin have given considerable comfort to our enemies."

That is the language of our statute on treason.

If I am giving comfort to our enemies I ought not to be in the Senate of the United States. If Mr. Murrow is giving comfort to our enemies he ought not to be brought into the homes of millions of Americans by the Columbia Broadcasting System.

could be resolved with very little difficulty.

Reel 3 begins

This is a question which is not too difficult to resolve. What do the Communists think of me and what do the Communists think of Mr. Murrow?

One of us is on the side of American freedom and one is on the side of Communism and ~~mm~~ slavery.

The Communists have three official publications in America. These are not ordinary publications but they have been officially determined transmission belts from which the Communists in America, instructors of the party line the positions to be taken by the American communist writers, playwrights, broadcasters and hidden communists in the govt.

The First of these is a booklet which I show you. The name of it "The main report delivered at the national conference of the Commie party USA"..published in New York in October 1953.

The very first page of the report states: "The situation created by the new Soviet peace initiatives "enhances the possibility of broadening the struggle against McCarthyism." On page 32 the report states;" A struggle against McCarthyism is developing currently along the following main lines...struggle against witch-hunting investigations , the McCarthy-McCarran type of ~~investigating~~ congressional committee; defense of the victims of

Does this record take E M 3/9 program the station

of McCarthyism such as Lattimore, [Hiss] etc; .... in addition there is the direct attack on McCarthy himself..... In this report the Commies do not hesitate to instruct the comrades that their fight on McCarthy is only the means to a larger end.

Again I quote: page 33.... "Our main task is to mobilize the masses for the defeat of the foreign and domestic policies of the Eisenhower Administration and the defeat of the Eisenhower regime itself.... The strrugggle against McCarthyism CONTRIBUTES TO THIS general objective..."

One more quotation. On page 51: "since the elections McCarthyism has emerged as a menaceof major proportions..." You know what they mean. ... a menace to the Communist effort to overthrow the government by traitors from within.

[Just for the moment what other aims do the communists set forth. They advocate the overthrow of the present governments of western Europe... the abandonment of NATO...securing the recognition of Red China in the United Nations...stopping our preparations for defense, keeping Communist teachers in our schools.]

Now let us look a little further to see who is giving comfort to our enemies.

Here's the Communist Daily Worker of March 9th. containing 7 articles and a principle editorial attacking Mc. The same issue lists Mr. Murrow's program attacking me as one of "tonight's best bets on tv."

Here's the issue of March 10th..the day after Mr. Murrow made his attack on me. This single 8 page issue contains 11 seperate articles and the principle editorial attacking Mc.

Here's the issue of March 17th. Its principle front page article is an attack on Mc and its three other articles attack Mc. Its has a special article by Wm Z. Foster, former chief the head of the Commie party of America, now under indictment on charge of attempting to overthrow this government by force and violence. This article attacks Mc and praises Mr. E RM.

Here's the issue of March 26 it has two articles attacking witch hunting, three articles attacking Mc, a cartoon of Mc, and an article in praise of Mr. Edward R. Murrow.

Now I show you the Commie house political organ "Political affairs". The lede article is a report dated Nov 21, 1953 of the national committee of the Commie party of the US attacking Mc. and telling how loyal members can help by

Now you know who is fighting Mc. Who is fighting Murrow.

Owen Lattimore who has been named "a conscious articulate instrument ofthe Commie conspiracy" by the Sen. Internal Security Comm. He is now under criminal indictment for perjury in regard to his testimony with respect to Commie activities. In his book, "Ordeal by Slander" he says "I owe a very special debt to men I've never met. I must mention at lease E.R.M.".

Here is a book by Harold J. Laski admittedly the greatest Communist propagandist of our time in England, [and a man who was expelled by the British Labor Party for Communist activites.] Title of book This book is dedicated, and I quote "To my friends, ERM and Lionel Tichner, with affection".

I am perfectly willing to let the American people of America decide who is "giving comfort to the enemies".

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Attorney General Brownell announced today that at least eight government officials were aware of an FBI report labelling the late Harry Dexter White a Russian spy - at the time former President Truman promoted White. Following up his Friday night speech, Brownell issued a statement saying that Justice Department records show that copies of a report on White sent to the White House were also sent to Supreme Court Justice Clark, then the attorney general - then Secretary of State Byrnes - the late James Forrestal, who was navy secretary at the time. The report also went to: Spruille Braden, then an assistant secretary of state, to Admiral Leahy who was Mr. Truman's chief of staff, to General Vandenbergh, then the air force assistant chief of staff, and to Fred Lyon, a state department official, and the late Fred Vinson, then secretary of the treasury. So far we have a comment only from Admiral Leahy and Mr. Braden. Both say they do not remember the report on White.

Mr. Brownell's statement today quotes one paragraph from the report distributed by the FBI in 1945 and early 1946. It says the information was received from confidential, reliable sources. And it says: "in no instance is any transaction or event related (in the report on Harry Dexter White) where the reliability of the source of information is questionable."

Senator McCarthy said today that William Henry Taylor, whom the senator describes as a "protege" of White, testified today that he was never a Communist or a spy. I'd like to review the developments in the White case in a few minutes.

At Harvard, President Nathan M. Pusey said today: "I am not aware that there is any person among the Harvard faculty who is a member of the Communist party." Last week Senator McCarthy asked Pusey about "his attitude towards retaining teachers who refuse to state whether they are communists." Pusey said today: "Harvard is absolutely, unalterably finally opposed to Communism. It exists for the sake of free inquiry and the free mind."

In London today, Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons that the recent bloody riots in Trieste had been caused by Italian extremists. He said Great Britain will resist violence in Trieste from any quarter.

An Italian foreign office spokesman says this charge is completely false. And the Vice President of Yugoslavia says the western powers are "prone to yield before the blackmail of the Italian government."

My colleague David Schoenbrun cables from Paris that Prime Minister Churchill has invited President Eisenhower and French Premier Laniel to a Big Three conference to decide policy on the future of western Germany. Schoenbrun says no time or place have been set. The British news agency Reuters says the Big Three are planning a meeting, probably in Bermuda.

Secretary of State Dulles today told Washington reporters that Russia's most recent note on Germany is "not acceptable," as far as we are concerned. Dulles said the Kremlin wants the free world to "unconditionally surrender their protective principles and practices of security" before any East-West meeting can be held. Mr. Dulles also told the reporters that we might consider recognizing Communist China if the Chinese change their anti-western policies and stop supporting aggression in Indo-China and elsewhere. Mr. Dulles in this first hint that such a move might be considered said that the Administration has never specifically said it would oppose recognizing Red China forever.

On Formosa today the touring Vice President Nixon told the Chinese Nationalist legislature that we recognize their country because they are "truly representative of the Chinese people."

There was no progress in Korea today on the enemy's "explanations" to prisoners who do not want to go home.

In the Philippines, some 5-million persons have started voting for a new president. The incumbent, President Quirino, predicts his re-election by half a million votes. His opponent, Ramon Magsaysay says he'll win by at least one million votes "in a clean election."

At the United Nations, American Ambassador Lodge urged the rulers of Russia to change their minds and attitudes and negotiate honestly towards a genuine disarmament.

And the western powers, American, Britain and France, condemned Israel for last month's raid on a Jordan village which resulted in the death of 53 persons. Lodge endorsed Sir Gladwyn Jebb's statement that Israel is apparently unwilling "to punish those responsible and hence, by implication, their willingness to condone" the raid.

In Iran today former Premier Mossadegh told a court martial that if he is convicted of trying to overthrow the monarchy defying the Shah, and dissolving the parliament he will not appeal. And, he said, if he's released he'll commit suicide.

King Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia died today. He was believed to be 73; the world's richest and most powerful absolute monarch. His son, Crown Prince Saud, has succeeded to the throne.

In Washington, the Supreme Court rules today that baseball is a sport and not an interstate business and therefore cannot be challenged in courts as an illegal monopoly. Chief Justice Warren said, in the majority opinion, that if there are any evils in this field, Congress should talke action to correct them.

In Hugo, Oklahoma, Mrs. Tommie Doughty, a 17-year-old former carnival strip teaser, was arrested and admitted kipnapping 5-months-old Richard Lee Stammer in Indianapolis. The baby was not harmed.

The case of Harry Dexter White, deceased, has so far raised more questions than it has answered. This is perhaps because there has been much talk but little evidence. This reporter does not pretend to know whether Mr. White was or was not a Communist spy, as alleged by Attorney General Brownell. Mr. Brownell asserted on Friday that President Truman promoted White after he had been told by the F.B.I. that White was a Russian spy. Mr. Truman denied it. General Harry Vaughan, the President's aide, who according to Brownell received the information about White, said he'd never heard of the man. Chairman Mitchell of the Democratic National Committee suggested that the whole matter should be placed before a Grand Jury.

Today, Vincent Quinn, now county District Attorney in Queen's County here in New York, said that in 1947 a Federal Grand Jury had studied the matter of Mr. White - all the evidence - and had failed to return an indictment because it felt there was insufficient evidence to warrant such action. He said this was the same Grand Jury that later indicted twelve top Communist leaders in this country.

Today Senator McCarthy said: "Anyone with an ounce of brains knows you can have a completely documented case of espionage which would not be a legal case." And the Senator said: "It is completely dishonest to say that unless you can send them to jail they are innocent." But our traditional concept of the law says that aman must be presumed innocent until there is sufficient evidence to send him to jail; or to otherwise penalise him for breaking an established law. One can only assume that what the Senator meant was that agiven body of evidence might convince him that a man had engaged in espionage, but the evidence would not convince a jury.

Mr. White, three days before his death, denied before the House Committee on Un-American Activities, that he had ever been a Communist or ever committed a disloyal act. This statement might not have convinced a jury either. It would probably have depended upon the evidence. And the difficulty in this case is that so far we do not have - any of us- the evidence. The House Committee, in a report rendered after Mr. White's death, said that no charge of Communist Party affiliation had been made against him. But here again this cannot be regarded as proof that he did not supply information to Russia.

Today's statement by Mr. Brownell - reported earlier in this program - does not add substantially to the available evidence. He says, in effect, that the adverse report on Mr. White received wide circulation in government departments. He does not say what evidence the report contained..We do know that it was an F.B.I. report. And we also know that the F.B.I. does not evaluate material, which means that it does not reach conclusions. It reports fact, rumor, gossip - attempts to give some indication of the credibility or reliability of witnesses, but does not go beyond that.

Mr. Brownell may have in his possession conclusive evidence that Harry Dexter White was, as he alleges, a Russian spy. He may have evidence, as he alleges, that Mr. Truman was acquainted with this fact when he promoted him. But if he has such evidence it has not been produced. There are sound security reasons why the details of an F.B.I. report should not be make public. But it would seem that a charge of this nature, made with the approval of the President of the United States against a former President - a charge which clearly implies that Mr. Truman was either knowingly or unknowingly an instrument of espionage, should be backed by rather more evidence than has so far been produced.

Again this reporter doesn't know who's right and who's wrong, for the evidence has not been disclosed. But this procedure raises a question that is perhaps more fundamental than whether Mr. White was or was not a Russian spy; for it involves the Attorney General, with the approval of the President, with the combined authority of those two offices, asserting that a man was a spy, without producing evidence. In this particular case the man is dead. But if this practise is to be pursued it may subsequently be applied to you or to me. The basic question would seem to be the selective release or interpretation of material gathered by the F.B.I., when that interpretation or conclusion is unaccompanied by evidence or witnesses. The question here, as I see it, isn't whether Brownell is right, or Truman is right, or whether Harry Dexter White was a spy. We are being asked to make up our minds about access to evidence. And if that should become our habit, then our heritage is in danger.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were discussing the case of Harry Dexter White...and the danger of drawing conclusions based on insufficient evidence. Mark Twain once wrote: "I think there is no sense in forming an opinion when there is not enough evidence to form it on. If you build a person without any bones in him he may look fair enough to the eye, but he will be limber and cannot stand up; and I consider that evidence is the bones of an opinion."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS: MURROW: AUGUST 20: 19.45 DBST: LEAD. 1252

THIS IS LONDON: The Germans say that American armour, ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ assisted by airborne troops is across the Seine between Mantes and Vernon. The Allied High Command remains silent. # There is no official news of ~~the~~ progress towards Paris. In the South of France more than twelve thousand prisoners have been taken. Allied casualties are light, and we are reported halfway to Avignon.

The Russians have made some progress northeast of Warsaw, but there have been no significant developments on either the Russian or the Italian fronts.

PASSED FOR PUBLICATION
PRESS AND CENSORSHIP BUREAU

At the beginning of the great week that has ended General Eisenhower told his soldiers that he saw a "fleeting but definite opportunity of victory. Later in the week the Supreme Commander warned against premature optimism. On Friday one of General Montgomery's staff officers announced that the battle of Normandy had been won, and that the enemy's power to resist effectively in France was gone. And he added: "The Germans are no longer able to conduct anything beyond strong rearguard actions. There will now be a phase of pursuit battles." Anonymous staff officers have been overcome with optimism before; and it would probably be the part of wisdom to remember General Ike's warning. Rommel's retreat from Alamein to Cape Bon involved strong rearguard actions and pursuit battles; and a great many British and American boys were killed in the process. It is true, beyond dispute, that the battle in France has gone better than anyone would have predicted at midweek. But the Germans are fighting furiously, and the ridges in the Falaise gap are littered with the bodies of German soldiers who fought their guns to the end. There has been no great mass surrender. ~~Inx~~ The Germans have not been fighting like men who know they are beaten. It is true that they are short of supply and transport; ~~but~~ they are taking an unprecedented pounding from the air. But they have succeeded in getting a considerable proportion of their armour and guns out of the Falaise pocket; and these, together with some of their best units, are falling back in considerable confusion towards the Seine. The bridges are all down, and the Americans have reached the river at Mantes. The germans say we have chassed the River near there But this country along the left bank of the Seine is rolling and wooded - well-suited to a final fanatical defence. There will be a tremendous concentration of ack-ack guns in the area; they did the same thing on the Straits of Messina some at least of the German formations will get across at night in barges and on pontoon bridges.

The victory in France is assured, but it would be an injustice to the men who must fight for it, to create the impression that the only thing that is left is a tour of the country in tanks and armoured cars. There are only about eight weeks of good fighting weather left, and the Germans may be expected to buy time, whatever the cost. The best opinion here in London, based upon an appreciation of the political as well as the military situation, is that the Germans will fight their stubborn rearguard actions on the Seine, on the Marne, on the reversed Maginot Line and on the Siegfried Line. The assumption that they will not fight on German soil is certainly not borne out by events on the borders of East Prussia, where they are fighting stubbornly and laying waste their own villages.

The fall of Paris, when it is finally announced, is not likely to cause great celebrations in London. It may well be an effective symbol for the rest of Europe; but for people in this country its main significance will be the increased opportunity to cut off Northern France and to speed up the capture of the doodle-bug launching sites. And, as the nights grow longer most people here consider that a worthwhile objective.

The campaign in Southern France has not been attracting a great deal of attention in London. It was known that the area was lightly held, and while there was great satisfaction with the progress, and with the co-ordination of a mixed force, even more satisfaction is expressed as a result of the magnificent cooperation of the French Forces of the Interior. The scattered reports coming in from Normandy, Brittany and the South have done a lot to restore confidence in France and the French. It is much too early to reach any final conclusions, but a great deal of the anxiety and doubt about what we should find inside France has evaporated. The Allies, ~~and indeed some of the Frenchmen outside France,~~ had been thinking of a period of tutelage and control in a situation where there would be chaos, starvation and a breakdown of government machinery. But the scattered reports do not indicate great demoralisation or the imminence of civil war. They tell rather of self-restraint, patience ~~and an overwhelming desire to aid in the job of getting rid of the Germans~~. Four years of Nazi rule have not been sufficient to destroy the civilised conduct of Frenchmen. In vast areas the progress has been so swift that destruction has been reduced to a minimum. There are serious shortages of ~~food, clothing,~~ food, fuel and clothing, particularly shoes. But it seems that most of the French harvest will be saved, if for no other reason than that the Germans lack the transport to take it away. The distribution, the transportation will be a tremendous problem, due to the bombing of bridges and railways, the destruction of rolling stock and the fact that the Germans take with them nearly everything on wheels. ~~However~~ The whole French economy has been geared to feed the German war industry, and the re-adjustment must be a lengthy process. However, these preliminary reports, incomplete as they are, give some reason to hope that France will again astonish the world with her recuperative powers.

Of course, the post-war health of France depends upon that of the whole Continent, and there the prospect is still obscure. Last week was the anniversary of the Atlantic Charter. You may not have noticed it - most people over here didn't. There was, I think, one mild editorial praising the sentiments expressed in that document. When it was issued the prospect of victory was dim in the distance. Now it is assured. In those days it was easy enough to speak of no territorial aggrandisement. Now it is not so easy, particularly since territorial changes have already been agreed upon. ~~When defeat was possible, and victory distant, the view was clear. Now it is not so clear. For the day of decision is approaching.~~ Early last week General Eisenhower spoke of "a fleeting but definite opportunity of victory". Within a matter of months the same thing may be said of peace. We failed to make a peace at the end of the last war for one reason only. The Allies agreed to certain things which they were not later prepared to enforce. The League of Nations failed, not because of the small States but because the great powers refused to act. The problem of security after this war xxxx is not how to dismember Germany; it is not how to keep Japan on her islands; it is simply how to create an international order for which great nations will be prepared to fight fifteen, twenty, thirty years from now. ~~Two of the slogans of the last war were: "To make the world safe for Democracy", and "Homes for Heroes". And a disillusioned generation laughed at them. And we are now fighting for substantially the same things.~~

It will be easy enough to impose a hard peace upon Germany. Not only easy, but probably wise; but wise only if it is done with the full understanding that we may be called upon to use force to sustain it in a few years' time. For example, if the Polish frontier in the West is moved to the Oder, we may hear in fifteen years the echo of the 1939 cry: "No war for Danzig"; only then it will be: "No war for the Oder". If we split up Germany it must be done in the knowledge that within a few years we may be called upon to prevent the peaceful union of Saxony and Bavaria, by force.

There does exist an agreement between the United States, Britain and Russia as to the zones that their armies shall occupy in Middle Europe. But that is all. The D-Day of peace is approaching, and there is none of the sense of urgency, none of the agreement that preceded the military D-Day in the West. Unless that agreement is reached, fatigue and frustration will walk hand in hand across the Continent of Europe, and no one can predict the result. That is the real background for the security meetings at Dumbarton Oaks tomorrow.

Lest I be accused of personal polemics here is a single example of the situation as it is today. In response to orders from the Polish Government in London, the men and women of Warsaw came out to fight the Germans. The Moscow radio had been urging such action, not only in Poland but elsewhere on the Continent. Allied bombers - at least a hundred - flew from Italy to Warsaw with supplies. They went in over the city with full flaps (on the edge of their stalling speed,) in order to place their supplies in the proper district. One in five failed to return. The Russian newspaper Pravda is quoted as saying that the Polish Government in London "engaged in a perfidious, political manoeuvre in organising the revolt in Warsaw; that it desired to make propaganda to strengthen its prestige in the United States and Britain". Pravda, as quoted by the Associated Press, blamed Generals Sosnokowski, Anders and their adherents, and declared that they "deserved to be tried by an international courtmartial of representatives of the United States, Britain and the U.S.S.R. and Poland." Pravda further says: "that the people of Warsaw had been fooled by political speculators among the London exiles".

But the boys who went in low over Warsaw - the pilots who called for full flaps - and when the flaps are down you seem to stand still while you smell cordite from the flak bursting round you - they weren't political adventurers; they were merely doing what the Mediterranean Air Command had told them to do.

No progress has been made in solving the Polish-Russian difficulties. XX The dispute about the future government of Poland is unresolved. I am told, on what I believe to be good authority, that the Russians suggested that three members of the government, including the Prime Minister Mr. Mikolajczyk, might be drawn from London; one from the Polish underground, and the remainder from the Polish Committee in Moscow. Such a solution is obviously unacceptable ~~xxxxxxxxxxx~~ to the Poles in London and in Poland. If it should seem that this argument about Poland is remote and unimportant, just remember that this war which has sent American boys to the far corners of the earth, began right there.

~~Thxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ And it might be well to remember, too, something that Woodrow Wilson said in St. Louis in 1919, when he was losing his fight for American participation in the Peace. He said that if he lost he would say to American soldiers: "You are betrayed; you fought for something that you did not get." And the glories of the Armies and Navies of the United States is gone like a dream in the night. And there ensues upon it, in the suitable darkness of the night, the nightmare of dread which lay upon the nations before this war came. And there will come, some time in the vengeful providence of God, another struggle in which not a few hundred thousand fine men from America will have to die, but as many millions as are necessary to accomplish the final freedom of the peoples of the world."

The prophecy was correct, and the problem remains the same.

ERM Reply to McCarthy

In 1935, I was assistant director of the Institute of Interanational Education, an organization engaged in the exchange of students and professors between this and foreign countries.

In this capacity, I was a member of the advisory committee for a summer school in Moscow.

In addition to the Senator's reading of a newspaper article published 18 years ago, Fulton Lewis Jr. more recently broadcast similar information

And various versions of both these stories were widely mentioned in former Senator Frank Graham's campaign in North Carolina in 1950.

In actual fact, the summer school was cancelled by Russian authories before it began. Those graduate students and professors who had signed up for the school spent the summer travelling in the Soviet Union, and activity which was not then, and is not now illegal. I did not accompany this group of distinguished educators.

The Senator's reference to the Civil Liberteis Union is another example of his too familiar technique.

In a recent television broadcast I actually said: "The attorney general's list does not, and has ~~xxxxxx~~ neverlisted, the American Civil Liberties Union as subversive, nor does the FBI, nor any other government agency. And the Amer Civil Lib Union holds in its files letters of commendation from Pres. Eisenhow, Pres. Truman and Gen. MacArthur".

The Junior senator from Wisconsin accuses me of lying, his contention being that the ACLU was listed by the California State Senate Committee investigatin un-American activites. I specifically stated...."the attorney general's list"..."the FBI".... and "any other government agency."

I shall attempt to deal adequately with Senator McCarthy's latest reckless handling of the truth on the radio tomorrow night.

MARTIN AGRONSKY

APRIL 7, 1954 - AMERICAN BROADCASTING COMPANY

Wisconsin's Senator Joseph McCarthy had his say last night on the T V program time of C.B.S. commentator Edward R. Murrow. Mr. McCarthy used the time in his usual manner.

It is the habit of the junior Senator from Wisconsin whenever anyone has the temerity to criticize him, to attempt to link his critic to the Communist cause. With Mr. McCarthy, it is always very simple - someone is critical of him or his methods - presto chango, that someone is a Communist. Accordingly McCarthy said of Murrow last night - "He is the leader and the cleverest of the jackal pack which is always found at the throat of anyone who dares to expose Communists and traitors."

The rest of Mr. McCarthy's remarks were a rambling pot pourri of allegations concerning Mr. Murrow and his alleged connection with Communist causes - allegations that ranged all the way from a quick glance by the Senator at the beginning of the Communist revolution in Russia in 1917, to a charge that research on America's hydrogen bomb was deliberately stalled for 18 months in the face of reports that Russia was feverishly pushing a similar project. Unless extraordinarily precocious, Mr. Murrow must have been in diapers at the time of the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution. And just what connection Mr. Murrow was supposed to have with this alleged delay in this country's production of the H-bomb, Mr. McCarthy did not make clear. But the fantastic allegation enabled him to drag in by the heels the question - "If there were no Communists in government, why did we delay?"

This particular statement of Mr. McCarthy's regarding the H-bobm was immediately dubbed by Democratic Representative Melvin Price of Illinois, a member of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, as "completely ridiculous." "He doesn't know what he's talking about," said Mr. Price, "he shows complete ignorance." So far there has been no opportunity to get any additional comment from the Atomic Energy Commission or other official sources.

Time limitations make it impossible to take up in detail the various other allegations by Mr. McCarthy concerning Mr. Murrow. A look at Mr. McCarthy's technique may be rewarding, however. A typical example of the McCarthy method which he employed last night, and which the Senator always uses, was on display. First Mr. McCarthy quoted from the Communist Daily Worker various criticisms of himself. Then he placed these alongside the comment of the Communist paper's TV radio critic that Mr. Murrow's "See It Now" show was "recommended listening." This according to Mr. McCarthy's curious ratiocination, apparently demonstrated that the Senator from Wisconsin is anti-Communist and Mr. Murrow is pro-Communist.

Such reasoning, of course, gives the Communist sheet a tremendous influence if its editors are sufficiently prescient to recognize it. Presumably the Daily Worker critic need only list any program as 'good viewing' or 'listening' and it immediately becomes unAmerican and Communist inspired. This is a two edged weapon that Mr. McCarthy places in the Daily Worker's hands. For example, if the Worker's critic were sufficiently Machiavellian he might recommend to his readers the next radio-TV appearance of Mr. McCarthy, himself.

This kind of reasoning raises, too, the awful possibility of the Communist newspaper's editorial board deciding someday that the criteria of Senator McCarthy is just what they need to win friends and influence people in the subversive directions that suit Communists best. The Daily Worker's editors might just draw up a list of everything they hate in our Democratic society and publish a passionate defense of these things. They might, for example, insist that they are for American patriotism and thus automatically make it unAmerican to be patriotic. Or they might name Mr. McCarthy as the finest example of an American Senator. And what an awful dilemma we'd all be in if the Daily Worker came out against sin.

These examples, of course, carry the McCarthy analogy to the point of absurdity. However, that's not an unreasonable place to leave it.

Mr. Murrow, of course, is well able to take care of himself against Mr. McCarthy's charges. Murrow responded last night that he had no knowledge he was to be the subject of favorable notice by the Daily Worker. And Mr. Murrow commented then, "This is more than Senator McCarthy can say about the Communist support he accepted in aid of his 1946 campaign for the U.S. Senate." Mr. McCarthy has said that he knew of no Communist support for him. Well, the fact is that Mr. McCarthy, in his election campaign against Lafollette in Wisconsin in 1946, did indeed have the support of the Communist party in the state of Wisconsin and this helped Mr. McCarthy beat Lafollette in that race. Mr. McCarthy may prefer to forget this phase of his political career, but it's nevertheless a matter of record.

It's not easy to handle reasonably the kind of charges that Mr. McCarthy makes when he's out to get someone like Ed Murrow. When there is a total disregard for responsibility on the side of persons who make charges defaming someone, and responsibility is adhered to in rebutting such charges, the advantage is invariably with the irresponsibles. The technique Mr. McCarthy uses is on the surface so plausible that anyone can be damaged in the public mind unless the method is understood.

Perhaps the best way to demonstrate this, and it apparently needs demonstration, is to turn on Mr. McCarthy his own technique, labelling it very carefully, of course, for what it is. In such a McCarthyist vein, let's start with President Truman's announcement on January 31st, 1950, that the United States, after much soul searching, had decided to go ahead and make the H-bomb. A perfect example of how to use McCarthyism against Mr. McCarthy immediately offers itself. How? Well, you just take the fact that this decisison of Mr. Truman obviously denotes a major American government policy decision to beat Russia to possession of the H-bomb, which naturally would be disadvantageous to Russia - anti-Communist. Then you play the numbers game. You note that nine days after Mr. Truman made this historic anti-Communist decision, on February 9th, 1950, Mr. McCarthy at Wheeling, West Virginia, launched his first attack on the Truman administration.

Then you complete the formula - President Truman makes an anti-Communist policy move. Senator McCarthy, nine days later, attacks President Truman and his administration.

So now you've got it all together. And you next put the McCarthyist question - 'What does this make Senator McCarthy?' Get it?

Dear Ed,

Nice work! The steady bead on this SOB has a delightfully deadly effect.

And how that camera and sound-track hit with a telling impact.

Incidentally, there seems to be considerable debate out here whether it was you or Stevenson who touched off the whole thing and what begins to look like the demise of some of the "hatriots."

I'm sure you recall it, but you might wish to bear in mind what McCarthy is alleged to have said about you in the March 9, 1953 issue of Newsweek.

And attached you will find something which might be of value or interest or both.

Again, nice going and a hell of a lot of us are at ringside ready to clout him another one if you'll work him toward the ropes.

The following is from pages 24 and 25 of MOSCOW AND CHINESE COMMUNISTS by Robert C. North of Stanford University, published 1953.

The quotes from Lenin which North uses here are indicated in a footnote on page 24 and in the bibliography as coming from LEFT-WING COMMUNISM by Lenin, Foreign Languages Publishing House, 1947.

Here is the quote:

"Lenin suggested that the exploitation of antagonisms was something more than the mere driving of wedges and fracturing off of isolated groups. Communists, he thought, must learn to turn the enemy against himself. Ever since the Bolshevik Revolution in Russia, he observed, the whole world.....and especially the bourgeoisie.....had changed. Capitalists were now terrified of Bolshevism, 'incensed with it almost to the point of frenzy,' a fact which supposedly accelerated events to the Communist advantage. The capitalist world, by concentrating its energies on the suppression of Bolshevism by force, was thereby weakening its position in a number of other vital fields and at the same time drawing mass attention to the very ideology it wished to suppress. '.....when the American bourgeoisie, having completely lost its head, seizes thousands and thousands of people on suspicion of Bolshevism, creates an atmosphere of panic, and broadcasts stories of Bolshevik plots; when the British bourgeoisie.....the most solid in the world.... despite all its wisdom and experience, commits incredible follies, founds richly-endowed anti-Bolshevik societies, creates a special literature on Bolshevism, and hires an extra number of scientists, agitators and parsons to combat it.....we must bow and thank the capitalist gentry. They are working for us.'

"Thus is was not sufficient for the Communists to win over the working class. Bolshevik leaders must also goad their non-Communist opponents into weakening and even destroying themselves. Bolshevik strategists and tacticians must recognize not only whether they had won sufficient proletarian support for a telling blow, but also 'whether the historically effective forces of all classes.....positively all classes of the given society without exception.....are aligned in such a way that everything is ripe for the dedisive battle; in such a way that (1) all the class forces hostile to us have become sufficiently entangled, are sufficiently at loggerheads with each other, have sufficiently weakened themselves in a struggle which is beyond their strength; that (2) all the vacillating, wavering, unstable intermediate elements....the petty bourgeoisie and the petty bourgeois democrats as distinct from the bourgeoisie.....have sufficiently exposed themselves in the eyes of the people, have sufficiently disgraced themselves through their partial bankruptcy; and that (3) among the proletariat a mass sentiment in favor os upporting the most determined, supremely bold, revolutionary action against the bourgeoisie has arisen and begun vigorously to grow. Then, indeed, revolution is ripe; then, indeed, if we have gauged all the conditions indicated and briefly outlined above, and if we have chosen the moment rightly, our victory is assured.'

"Lenin also used other words to put the same concept across; e.g., that successful revolution is impossible without a nation-wide crisis: 'it is not enough for revolution,' he said, 'that the exploited and the oppressed masses should understand the impossibility of living in the old way and demand changes. It is essential for revolution that when the lower classes do not want the old way, and when the upper classes cannot carry on in the old way.....only then can revolution triumph..... It follows that for revolution it is essential, first, that a majority of the workers (or at least a majority of the class-conscious, thinking, politically active workers) should fully understand that revolution is necessary and be ready to sacrifice their lives for it; secondly, that the ruling classes should be passing through a governmental crisis, which draws even the most backward masses into politics (a symptom of every real revolution is a rapid, tenfold, and even hundred-fold increase in the number of members of the toiling masses....hitherto apathetic.... who are capable of waging the political struggle), weakens the government and makes it possible for the revolutionaries to overthrow it rapidly.' There are times when I consider that the three years I volunteered to serve in the Army of the United States paid off my debt to society for the rest of my life. For my money, you paid off your debt forever with your presentation of the McCarthy Story as you saw it on See It Now.

You made a plug for freedom and the American Way of Life that might well start the turn of the tide that our "Mr.Joe" had fostered. I have wondered whether we had a figure left on the American scene with guts you showed tonight. Fortunately for us you had the intelligence to go with the guts. SUGGESTED ROUGH DRAFT OF LETTER OF REPLY TO "PRO" MAIL

Dear _____:

This is a form letter and I am sorry about that. I wish to take this opportunity to tell you that your communication has been read and that it is appreciated. We presented a factual report on two aspects of Senator McCarthy's career, and acknowledging at the outset that the subject was controversial we pursued the established policy of CBS in offering time for the Senator to reply. We are of the opinion that the presentation of this report and the opportunity for the Senator to reply to it was in "the public interest and in conformity with the traditional American practice of fair play."

Permit me to thank you for your communication and to say that we shall always be grateful for your comments regarding subsequent programs whether they be favorable or unfavorable.

DRAFT OF LETTER IN ANSWER TO CRITICAL COMMUNICATIONS

Dear _____:

This is, of necessity, a form letter due to the volume of correspondence received regarding our recent broadcast dealing with Senator McCarthy. We presented an entirely factual report on two instances in the Senator's career. I made a certain comment regarding his action which I believe to have been demonstrated by film and in the Senator's voice. I offerred at the outset to provide adequate opportunity for the Senator to reply. I do not know what more I could have done in accordance with CBS policy and the American tradition of fair play. The Senator has now accepted my offer of equal time to reply. He has requested and received a month in which to prepare and document his reply.

Permit me to thank you for your communication and to say that we shall always be grateful for your comments regarding subsequent programs whether they be favorable or unfavorable.

Dear Ed:

Yours truly and many others... doubtless millions of them, who were just hoping that somebody, sometime, would forcefully say what they had been thinking all along of the junior gentleman (this is used most loosely) from Wisconsin, have been overjoyed with the very able job you did on the Senator in question.

I have never forgotten a conversation we had -- you probably have forgotten, since you did many far more interesting jobs since -- as we were waiting for a train connection prior to going into the Maginot Line for the first broadcast from inside a fortress. We were discussing the spread of the Nazi threat (which yon poor Maginot line did mighty little to stop!) and trying to figure out how we could best give expression to our thoughts while remaining objective. You told me, at that time that, in effect, there were times when you just had to speak out the facts as you saw them, and be good and loud about same.

Since we are much of an age, it makes me feel younger to see that you have kept the fire which, at times, I am inclined to call "old" (after all, this was 16 years ago...), which makes you say, with the authority which you have so richly deserved, the things so many of us would love to be able to tell... whatever number of millions of viewers you have on your shows.

It so happens that, in this little shop of ours, there is small affection for the Senator from Wisconsin and his ways. When I called your secretary to pass on my own message of appreciation, they overheard me and wanted to add their signatures to mine. This, I am only too glad to have them do.

More power to you and all those who refuse to be intimidated by the threadbare, overworn methods it has been the sad lot of many of us to study at first hand in the palmy days of Josef Goebbels.

Congratulations. Keep up the good fight. I will see you at the Waldorf when they give you that award anyway. I had always voted for the winner until 1952, when I made my first "error"... but this will be remedied some this November.

As ever,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Ed -

this is just a word to add to the many you have received over the past six weeks. tho' it's late I know - I did want to write you.

Bogie and I have been in Europe for the last three months - and were in Rome when your McCarthy broadcasts were done. We missed seeing them but are keeping after CBS if and when they become available. But I can tell you - you are unquestionably the man of the years from Rome to London - to say nothing of our United States from coast to coast.

I really only wanted to say thanks for starting the ball rolling. God knows (over) we're all affected by what's been going on.

Continued good luck - Ed. You're doing a fine thing.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I want to record my revulsion at the performance which Senator McCarthy was permitted to put on last night.

I suggest that in giving the half-hour to the political blackguard you should have at least stipulated that he address himself, however indirectly, to your magnificently documented case against him.

At any rate, I know of no decent person in the news business who is not proud of you.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Murrow:-

No doubt your mail concerning the touchy subject: McCarthy vs. Army, must be prodigious.

And there is no question in my mind, that your particular stand on the case, comes from a firm and sincere conviction about that man's foul tactics.

I am 66, widow of an archaeologist, republican and Roman Catholic, just an ordinary person, and you may not be interested in what I have to say. However, I am one of the people, who make up this great nation.

My husband and I faithfully listened to your reports on the "Battle of Britain". Your broadcasts had a ring of truth, convincing and deep reaching.

When you – may I say "exploded" and deserted your "observer" role in the case of McCarthy, it was not a commentator, but a human being, who just could not take any more of that charlatan's exhibitionism.

It was like a cry from wilderness – to stop that madman. Many of us wanted to do the same thing, but our cry would not have reached the ears of the nation. So for one, I am grateful to you.

To me this man is a psychopatic case - dangerous.

Hitler was one, and isn't it amazing how the mob is easilly influenced, and led by such men.

His issues were foggy - as was his expression, his speech muffled - nevertheless ruthless.

No ones honor was spared.

When cornered, he switched the questions and accusations entirely out of scope of the actual case, in order to confuse.

His stooge Cohn, brilliant and vicious actually handled McCarthy as a puppeteer handles his props. And Shine, son of a millibnaire, Harvard graduate, so innocent and yet indispensable poor Shine so badly abused.

What contradictions.

There is no doubt that the man has done some good at one time and that the army brass are not beyond criticism, for that matter no big organization can boast of an absolutely clean record - just as none of us individuals can cast a stone at another and say, we have never made a mistake.

As I see it McCarthy is suffering from the delusion of grandeur, His alone must be the final judgement of right or wrong. No really "big" man succumbs to such conceit.

I hope that your "Crusade" (may we call it so) might bear fruit, and that McCarthy-ism will be a thing of the past - a bad, bad dream.

Sincerely

Re: McCarthy

My dear Mr. Murrow:

I refer to your telecast of yesterday on the subject of Sen. McCarthy. I believe that the general public is not even remotely aware of this great danger.

Last year three men marched past the receptionist in my office, right into my private office and stated they were from the McCarthy Investigating Committee, investigating the Government Procurement Service. A request, which was subsequently honored, to identify themselves was met with insults and refusal at first. Then a series of the most insulting statements, insulting questions, and above all, continuous efforts at intimidation began. After turning the office upside down for three weeks, they walked out.

I was born in Holland and came to this country in 1935. I had an opportunity to see the Hitler regime at work in Germany. The methods of McCarthy and Hitler are identical. Democracy, such as we have known it in this country, is in great danger.

Any organized anti-McCarthy movement will have my strongest support.

Joining a few hundred thousand others, this is merely to say that your profile on McCarthy was one of the jobs that justify continued faith in American journalism and in the radio broadcasting phase of it. I think it is a turning-point in this fantastic struggle. The inevitable counter-attack on you seems to have been merely childish.

Let us hope this phase of post-war development will now begin to fade away. We had the extreme-left elements running their own campaign of combined intrigue and slander against their enemies. Now we have the opposite group of demagogic fascists tackling it in their turn. Perhaps in a year or two we shall be back to sanity with both groups assigned to the limbo of unrespected unimportance, where they belong. You have rendered a real service on both fronts and you are entitled to the thanks of the public, including as one thereof,

REMSEN BIRD

Dear Ed:-

Now McCarthy will attack the networks. We shall watch to see if they knuckle under! Public schools, churches, universities and colleges, departments of government, the army, various liberal institutions with honest intentions, certain distinguished individuals, etc. etc. How he does follow the proved pattern which the demagogues have employed through the ages.

During the pre-reformation days there was a group of gay souls who thought that the best way to break down the claimants to infallibility over state and church was to spoof them.

They wrote imaginary letters to a man named Ortius Gladius under the title of "Letters of Obscure Men". For a time they were regarded as authentic and commended and then the truth came out. They helped a lot in extricating the New Learning from the powers that would destroy the same.

Its an idea; but it would be I think profitable for the saving of those who were born free, to collect letters of such a sort addressed to this strange creature who is, whatever he thinks are his motives, is softening us for an American brand of a pusher around!

Yes.

Anyway if you have a moment you might read the enclosed.

It could be done better, but it helped me on a certain day to release some pent up emotions.

What we really need is someone like the little Saint of the Umbrian Valley. I am enclosing one of his prayers. I am not easily moved to satire for this that is going on moves me rather to tears and prayers than to scoffing and such.

Thank God for you, Elmer Davis, Cecil Brown, — even Kaltenborn!

Best to Janet

The Honorable, Joseph McCarthy
The Senate of the United States
Washington, D. C. (Top Secret!)

Dear Joe:-

We certainly have them on the run now! Now we must be exceedingly careful, for some of these birds may see what is really going on, and it is important that they do not see! My counsel is that we begin at once, and very very quietly to organize the Purple Shirts and I suggest that we call them, when the time comes for us to get the power of such organization into the open, "The Sons of Freedom". I am enclosing a picture of the uniform, insignia, etc. which you will want to look over.

What I would like to see worked out at once, is groups of ten in every community, in every organization, in every school, among the politicos, the business men, even in organized labor if we can get in, and in the churches, who can be absolutely counted on to report, to propagate, and to spread into the larger groups when the time is ready.

You can always learn from those who have sought to get control in other lands and in other days. The organization that Togliatti has produced in Italy is an example, also Hitler, also Lenin, and there are as you well know many other illustrations in the past.

The country is now thoroughly softened. These frightened pigeons are ready to fly in any direction to save the land from the communists and the fellow travelers, they see everywhere. They now distrust everybody except you!

The year 1956 is not far off and we must be ready! By the time it comes around we must be thoroughly organized and whatever these poor saps who back Eisenhower may plan, we shall be smarter. You will be one of the candidates, the Dewey Forces will swing to you. You will be the candidate, and then the President, and all so legal, and all so hunky dory. Remember how Hitler worked it out. You can learn even from the devil. Poor Hindenberg. Poor Ike!

Where are we now. As your specialist in propaganda, let me give you a kind of reassuring summary;

(1) We have liquidated the egg-heads! Harvard University, that refuge of the sissies and the subversives. Its President you have thoroughly slapped down as well he deserved, for as I recall he was pretty nasty when he was in Lawrence. You failed in getting Conant, but don't worry about that. We'll catch up with him presently. The whole crazy loyalty oath business has well fogged the mind of the Californians and most of the more conservative still think that's a hot bed of communism. And as for the Middle West, good old Red Grange has now liquidated Stoddard, who has been a real power in this effort to keep America in the World understanding groove!

As to the rest of the colleges and universities, we have some pretty powerful trustees and regents and benefactors who are thoroughly suspicious of anyone who presents controversial issues!, and fewer and fewer of these so-called scholars want to stick their necks out. Economic necessity is a powerful weapon on our side.

(2) As to Public Education, thanks to Zoll and his campaign against progressive education, and frills and furbelows, and for the three rs, and all that Hearst did in paving the way, and the work of the various sappy patriotic societies over the country, who slap down anybody who has anything to say that isn't right in the groove, and with the little gray guys needing the money in the monthly check to pay for the new baby, over the country from the superintendents down to the janitors public education is thoroughly intimidated, and soft as butter.

(3) Let us take a look at the Protestant Clergy and the Protestant Churches. There was a time when these were very powerful in this country. They have stiff necks and believe that no one should push them around, and they seem to think that the teachings of this Jesus on love and such guff can be applied to meet the problems which people face in town and country and business and government. They are starry eyed in this but they have been pretty tough when it comes to standing up for the — what they call, the freedom of the conscience. But we have them now getting soft. There are so many of the trustees and elders of churches who are afraid of all this socialism, which they mix up with what these preachers say, that thousands of them are talking more about theology, pie in the sky and what happens after death and less about politics and what is going on in the world.

These churches are made up for the most part of frightened bourgeois who want to hang on to their investments, who have observed what is wrong in the world and who blame it all on the democrats and among the democrats on the pinkos who are in their minds fellow travelers and as such Fifth Amendment communists, and are not to be trusted. That is the screwy way their minds run, but you old screwer have helped to make them so! Very naughty, Hey what?

The Velde attack built on absolutely nothing threw about a lot of sand and there are some ministers of great power who are completely on our side and who can be counted on to work against us. But watch watch very carefully, this John Mackay, Moderator of the Presbyterian Church who got out a letter to the 8,000 Presbyterian Churches against you and your method, and watch Bromley Oxnam, the top bishop of the Methodist church going over the country shooting his face, and the Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, this man Sherrill. He sits with the rich and mighty and a lot of the rich and mighty are very much more concerned with Christian principles than they are with their accumulated gain. They are very very dangerous.

(4) As to the government, the poor sappy government! There is where you have had your greatest success. The people who are in the State Department are thoroughly cowed. You ever had Acheson cowed, and in this liquidation business and in bringing up opinions expressed long ago, you have something on nearly everybody of any importance in that arm of the government. No one in the State Department now would really dare come out against you.

And who in any other branch of the Federal Government will dare come out flat foot against you. Its all ready for you there, believe me.

(4) Hitler was so smart in getting the patriotic organizations back of him. His technic was superb. The Jews are against our chosen people! The enemy is rings around. Look out for the subversives within. We want our Saar and our Ruhr, and we want to get rid of this Weimar crowd who don't know their right hands from their left. The Sons of the Revolution, give you their plaques! The Daughters of the Revolution swear by you. The Veterans of Foriegn Wars, by and large are on your side, and want everybody every year or thereabouts to take the oath. And there are the Liberty Belles, and the Pro Americas, and the Christian Economists, and the American Legiona chapters — not all of them -- we must look into this.

But wherever you go if the conversation turns to you and your method, always someone stands up and says, "Well he's got the communists on the run. What more do you want!" Very good.

(5) Let us report on the Roman Catholics. We've got to silence the Jesuitical "America" and this Catholic pinko sheet, "The Commonweal". They can do us a lot of damage. But Cardinal Spellman is out and out for you and he is the most powerful priest in the USA and he may be the Pope. It could be. It could be! Talk to any group in any town in America now, that is right of center, and someone will say, "Well, the Catholics are against the communists, and the protestants are wishy washy, so I am for the catholics!" Good, I say, very very good.

(6) Now the writers and the painters and the musicians and all these other dreamers who get easily cockeyed ideas. I am making for you a catalogue of them. I will list those that are reds, and those that write like reds and those that we can count on. There are writers who have tried out the communist line and have sprung over, but they have the same kind of psychology, in whatever category you find them. They who once fall for the guy that tells them what to think are your meat. We need some good writers, commentators, radio announcers, and makers of songs! By the way, we need a good song? I must find you someone to write it, a real bang up song like Giovenezza, or the Horst Wessel thing or the International. Nothing like a song. Think what the Marsellaise did for the revolutionaries in France? Very important that I find you a good song.

(7) Now the Army and the Navy. The Navy will be easy. Those guuys don't know much of what is going on, and they are picked pretty carefully by those who want to be sure that they will be easy on the ship. They can for the most part be counted on. There are stiff necked ones in the Army, but you have them on the run. It got a bit dangerous there for a bit, but very soon the Zwicker affair will be forgotten and the fact that you found a communist promoted and honorably discharged will not be forgotten. When we get this special Purple Shirt organization well oiled, we will filter into the army and they will behave, they will behave. The conflict between the Westpointers, who also don't know much outside the military and the Reserve officers is right down your alley. "There's not to reason why. There's but to do and die!" Well we can use them, living or dying.

(8) The Press! That is easy, easy. There is no real democratic press. The pink sheets, the New Republic for example are struggling to exist. Most of the newspapers of the little towns are republican and on our side. The New York Times, the Herald Tribune, the Washington Post, and a few others we have to watch, but give us time, give us time. As to the Periodicals few read the slicks, Henry Luce has an Achilles heel, and Raymond Moley has a grudge against the New Dealers, his heel! When we take over we will have a list and we will have local leaders who will know when and how to turn the newspapers to shout for you. No difficult job, that!

(9) Commentators, columnists, Radio broadcasters, TV shows and comments, all this sound and fury that goes over the air. The sponsors are shrewd enough to know whose voice wins soap buyers and whose doesn't. Little by little we get rid of the ones that speak out. Fulton Lewis is superb and I should imagine he would be the one we would want to give the whole plan when it seems a proper time to you. Ed Murrow, Cecil Brown, Elmer Davis, even Kaltenborn we must discredit. We haven't been able to get anything on Murrow, but we will.

(10) Nixon, Dirksen and Jenner have what it takes. They are tough, ruthless, and are on your side. They should know that there are top places in the New Government. Nixon certainly grows in Savvy, and he is becoming very popular over the country with the old ladies and the frightened pigeons. I would pull him in close pretty soon.

(11) The Democrats are more and more divided. We can play them against one another. The bogey of the negro is all we need in the South. In the North the New Dealers and the Anti New Dealers are at one another's throats now. Adlai Stevenson is the most powerful force they have, but whenever he speaks we have immediatelythe power of Winchell and Lewis and the Press to show him up as the one who is causing the hatred and bitterness and division of our times. Nixon did a good job in the Campaign in tying Hiss to his tail! But he is smart. We have to watch him.

So much for now.

I have been making a careful study of just how Lenin, Hitler, Mussolini, Franco, and Mao got the countries softened and then took over. I am also making a very very careful study of how it was that Hitler and Mussolini lost out!

Keep at it big boss! Don't bother to answer. Just go on to the next attack. Attack! That is the motto! Throw sand in their eyes and mud in their faces. and in 1956 we take over.

Yours for Freedom!

Dr. George M. Day

My dear George:-

Thank you for your letter from San Francisco and the note concerning Harold Fisher and Dr. Timoshenko. You will presently tell me what this is all about! Harold will be down here to-morrow for a Stanford Conference and Helen has invited a few friends in to talk with him. We are at the moment especially interested in the location of the Ford founded, Institute of Human Behavioral Studies. Monterey is an ideal place for it!

The other after noon I met the widow of Walter Lyman Brown, a distinguished mining engineer, associated with Mr. Hoover, William Honnold and others in Belgian relief, friend of the Various famous mining engineers, Harvey Huid, etd.

They lived in Russia in connection with the work of mining explorations and helping Mr. Hoover in the work of relief he undertook there during the famine time! Remember?

She talked to me with great interest and precision concerning the Russian people and she shares completely your ideas. This cruel fearful government will pass. It is the product of some strange philosophy, opportunism, and the accumulated evil that blew up the top.

The Russian people are possessed by and large of great talents and have a tremendous future. The land is rich beyond all compare in minerals and other resources. It is, as she says, as the USA was in the days of Lewis and Clark.

We must be ready to cooperate and to work with these people when the day arrives that it will be possible. That day will come!

This point of view interests me intensely, and especially when I realize that over the hill there are 200 Russians teachings hundreds of Army personnel the Slavic Language and there are Slavic students, especially under your care, spread across the land.

Cruelty, evil, malice, bitterness, mal treatment of various sorts pass in time, but faith, hope and love are eternal!

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Co.
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am writing to you from a very personal standpoint about your recent showdown with Senator Joseph McCarthy. Last Spring I had the good fortune to be assigned to assist Ed Scott and Leo Rossi as they filmed Oberlin College's commencement, the latter institution being my alma mater and my current employer. At the time, Ed and I discussed Mr. McCarthy at some length, in fact it was a student ACLU poster on one of our bulletin boards which prompted Ed to stage the student debate on "Academic Freedom" which you used in broadcast.

It is from this background then that I would like to take this opportunity to extend to you my heartiest congratulations for the recent stand you have taken against Mr. McCarthy, the magician of the mass mind. As you undoubtedly realize by the mail that is pouring into your office, I am not alone when I express this sentiment. There are many people not only in the circles of higher learning who are in complete sympathy with your viewpoint. Far more important, I believe, is the middle group of people who have just recently come to think about the issues involved. Even the most reactionary groups (the glassy-eyed Right Wingers, to paraphrase a McCarthyism) could not sit still when the United States Army became caught up in the wave of intimidation. Individuals may seem insignificant in our society, but symbollism is still pre-eminent. When Mr. McCarthy attacked the Army many of his followers as well as the sideline observers felt that he had bitten off more than they could chew.

To my way of thinking, your all-out challenge to the Junior Senator from Wisconsin has its greatest single value in the fact that it has come at a most strategic time - a time when many minds are in transition. The fact that this challenge came from a recognized and respected news analyst did not lessen its effectiveness. For many unknown reasons the true facts about Mr. McCarthy, his background, his methods and his truly anti-democratic philosophy have been too glossed over by the mass media, the Democrats and especially the Republicans. A public expose of Mr. McCarthy is very much in order at this time but it seems to be a "hot potato" that no one wants to handle. Many people, including this writer, are very pleased to see that you have taken such a large measure of this task upon your own shoulders.

If I may be so presumptuous, I would like to make a comment or two about your current approach to Mr. McCarthy. I do not know what "class" of listeners has comprised your radio and TV audiences, but since Mr. McCarthy has publicly acknowledged your challenge I am sure that many of the "undecided" will take and active interest in your programs. The limitation that I foresee in your present broadcasting is the same one I felt during Adlai Stevenson's campaign; that is, that despite his efforts to "talk sense" to the American people, Mr Stevenson inadvertently talked over the heads of many people who did not have quite the background of understanding he possessed. For many people who listen to your program regularly, you make quite a bit of sense and have for some time. These people both understand what you are saying and agree with you for the most part.

Should my premise be correct, many people will be listening to your programs for the first time. These people may also be listening to you without having the background presupposed by many of your commemts. For this reason I feel that your approach to Senator McCarthy ought to have a two-fold purpose, to criticize the Senator but also to educate your new and perhaps undecided listeners. I believe that comments such as you made on your news program of Friday, March 12 concerning Mr. McCarthy's assumption that a clash of ideas implies defeat for democratic values needs to be spelled out in words of one syllable. In many ways this one point is basic to all of Mr. Mc Carthy's maneuvers. The more people who can clearly see such a common denominator in the hodge-podge of his activities, the sooner Mr. McCarthy will assume the role befitting his character.

The second limitation that I am wary of in your attack is the possibility that your criticisms will be put off as partisanship - as the voice of the Democratic party or worse. This would not be so bad ordinarily, but at this particular moment I believe that no possible area for "labeling" should be exposed. The listeners who have just recently joined your audience to more clearly understand your views of Mr. McCarthy may react if they sense that you are blasting the Republican Party as Mr. Stevenson did recently. I have no doubt that you consider McCarthyism as transcending party politics, but I feel that this must be made very clear to your newer audience so that they too can become more objective in their analysis of Mr. McCarthy.

I have enclosed a cartoon which summarizes rather well the feelings of many people, I sincerely hope that nothing deters you from the progress you have already made. With best wishes for success in your campaign for truly democratic ideals, I am

Dear Ed:

I'm dreadfully sorry that anyone has to become involved with such as Senator McCarthy...particularly a man such as I believe you to be.

Through the years that I have listened and read to and of you I have been impressed that you were of top-quality as a thinker and reporter. I have been impressed that perhaps in your personal thinking, that is politically, that you were probably a bit of a liberal...certainly in the human sense. But most of all, your unbiased, comprehensive and condensed reporting. You have truly become an institution in our family.

Unfortunately McCarthy has a following...I don't say that he is wrong if he is hunting reds...but it is disgraceful, or so it seems to me, that we have a man seemingly just wantonly maligning and defaming people. And he and his gang talk of "smear" and "blackmail"....disgusting!!

I don't believe that you need any help with this alleged varmint...but I hope that if you do I can help. A neighbor of mine upon hearing of his comments, charges, etc., regarding you, suggested that probably you should ignore the guy saying that, "Doubtless McCarthy never had a father".

As always....

Sincerest Best Wishes

Dear Sir:-

May I take this opportunity to express my views on the latest appearance of Senator McCarthy on your television network. Americans have always appreciated objectivity and fair play. Mr. Murrow's offer to sacrifice his own time on the networks and your readiness to carry Mr. McCarthy was certainly a good example of such objectivity. It gave every person who saw the programs a chance to evaluate for himself just who operates in a constructive pattern and who is interested in his own self-aggrandizement. I firmly believe as a result of Mr. McCarthy's appearance on Tuesday, April 6th, the American public is finally beginning to realize that this man is not only a serious threat to the moral, spiritual and political welfare of America, but is also a person who has all the potentialities of becoming one of the nation's leading demagogues. The bright lights of television showed him up for what he really is and you are to be commended for such a fine public service. You helped give Mr. McCarthy enough rope to begin, what I am sure, will be his own political self-strangulation.

May I further commend you for carrying such a fine news analyst as Edward R. Murrow. He has in the past and does presently serve the American people well, and I pray that you will continue to give him the opportunity to bring to America a fair and objective analysis of the news.

Sincerely,

Balfour Brickner

Just a line to say that of all the superb programs you've been responsible for, last night's "McCarthy Show" was the greatest.

The excellent production, the fair, dispassionate and truthful treatment of your subject should prove the most influential factor to date in bringing home to the people of the United States the real story of "McCarthyism."

Thank you for doing what we, as average citizens, have neither the ability nor the opportunity to do for ourselves -- to help restore the Four Freedoms!

On March 10th at New York, I telephoned your office congratulating you on your March 9th "See It Now" television show in which you discussed the speeches, announcements and tactics of Senator McCarthy. That special program of March 9th was televised in Minneapolis last evening at 8:30 p.m. My wife and I enjoyed seeing it.

I have also liked all of your other comments regarding McCarthy. I congratulate you for having the courage to tell the truth about this unscrupulous political adventurer.

My latest indictment of him will be in the April issue of Fortune magazine.

Dear Ed:

I took occasion last evening to tune in WHBF-TV, Rock Island, Illinois, to hear Senator McCarthy's reply to your program of March 6. Although our television reception was not the best, it was sufficiently clear for me to see and hear confidentially what I thought to be one of the worst presentations of its kind. I have no desire personally to be quoted in this matter, but I wanted to tell you that in my opinion, Mr. McCarthy's response was the worst type of "smear campaign". It seemed to me that his one basis of attack upon you was the fact that you belonged to some international educational group about twenty years ago and frankly, in the program I could find no other record of your association with subversive organizations. It is my understanding that our present Secretary of State was a much older member of the same organization.

Mr. McCarthy then proceeded to bring us up to date regarding communism and then, not too cleverly I thought, attempted to tie in the current communist newspaper comments as an endorsement of one of their brethern, namely, Mr. Murrow. It was interesting to note that the newspapers quoted all seemed to be dated and published after your broadcast of March 6, and I was very amused because of my three years of Intelligence service in the Army Air Force dealing in such matters, to note that this type of endorsement has been established by the Communist Party and their members for many, many years. It is a very clever way of "damming with praise". It has been used so long that I would think even Senator McCarthy would be familiar with such tactics. I am sure you are. It is my feeling that Mr. McCarthy last night confirmed everything that most of us have thought of him for some time.

Heartiest congratulations from Brooks Watson and myself for the courageous position that you have taken in this matter, and best wishes for a successful conclusion of it.

Kindest regards.

MCCARTHY!

Your broadcast last night was greatly appreciated by myself and my colleagues. We heartily approve of what you say and the way you say it.

Watching the way McCarthy handles the truth, and the manner in which he treats men and women is a disgusting spectacle. Any American citizen can do nothing but cringe when he hears the proceedings of these so-called investigations.

I must admit Mr. Murrow that I am rather glad that the Man from Wisconsin took after you Thursday evening. At last there is a STRONG, respected person who will oppose the senator vigorously and with out fear. You seem to be the only person in or out of government able and unafraid to oppose him.

These few lines I hope will serve as a small measure of appreciation. You Have MY Support.....

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am so very proud today! Proud to be an American and proud to work for the CBS Television Network. May I congratulate you and your staff on the magnificence of the SEE IT NOW program last night.

It is admirable that a man in these frightened days feels the overwhelming necessity to say what you did, and horrifying that it had to be done...that it should take courage to telecast those words that we, the small, still, plaintive voices have been repeating for so long.

It was doubly wonderful to me because I saw the program during a party for a few Herald Tribune High School Forum exchange students, one of whom is a guest of my brother. We had all discussed the "McCarthy situation" earlier in the evening and it embarassed me that teen-agers throughout the world, "the hope of the future", thought so little of this country politically. They watched you with open admiration...and it came to them that here was the greatness, here was the shining light of enlightened intelligence, reason without emotional coloring, fact, and, therefore, realization of that which is -- the necessary criticism of democracy at work.

I feel, somehow, that it was an historic speech, that we will all long remember the things you said. I pray that it has given us an impetus to speak up and to raise our voices and thereby to make ourselves heard to rid ourselves of the half-gods of half-truth. Perhaps we can now be masters of our fate.

Sincerely,

Marge Schwartz

Mister Murrow:

Overnight apprentice writer, third grade, speaking -- and briefly. No television set where I live, I was lucky enough to get to the Newsroom last night early -- in time for SIN. You know that newsmen must write the news objectively, when subjectivity is cried out for in certain cases, day by day. I think you helped most of us get it at least vicariously off our chests. Thanks for picking that fine target, that evil man, Senator McCarthy.

Gentlemen:

In my opinion, Ed Murrow's "See It Now" program last night devoted to showing the American people exactly what kind of a man Senator McCarthy is, was about as thrilling and soul-satisfying a half hour as has ever been done in television. By sponsoring this program, it seems to me that Alcoa has performed an outstanding public service, and I for one hasten to express my deepest appreciation.

May I add that I believe, from a purely commercial point of view, this program will do more to create good will for Alcoa than a double color spread in every newspaper and magazine in America.

Dear Mr Murrow;

Being in the radio business myself, and specifically, in the news category, I have long since ceased to expect fan mail, myself, or to pay overmuch attention to flattering letters when they do arrive. I am, however, moved by your last evening's TV triumph to write you and to include my heartfelt thanks for as brilliant a job of analytical reporting as I have ever seen or heard.

Only by full and frank discussion of the tactics of the junior Senator from Wisconsin can we hope to beat him at his own game. Because a demagogue must be feared in order to be a success. If such coldly brilliant spotlights as yours of last evening are continually trained upon him, the American people must surely come to understand the feet of clay of this political Moloch. Then they will no longer either fear or trust him and we can move forward to a united effort to defend ourselves in peaceable and sane manner.

It has long seemed to me - ever since that Wheeling West Virginia speech which started the whole McCarthy legend that sooner or later, a crisis would be reached which would inevitably lead to such a battle as is necessitated now. The pity of the whole thing has been that up to recently, the Republicans thought that McCarthy would be a handy dandy weapon against the Democrats, and so would do nothing about him, and more recently, the Democrats have seen McCarthyism as the righttin can to tie to the tail of the administration, and now they seem unwilling to move against him. Oh, brave new world that has such creatures in it!

This letter - which is essentially one of thanks for your brilliant and necessary program of last evening - has dragged out far too long. But the most taciturn of us are wont to become voluble when McCarthy is concerned. So disregard the rest of it, and just accept the thanks of a very grateful listener.

Very truly yours

Dear Mr Murrow

You are deluged, I am sure, with letters, telegrams and telephone calls endorsing your position in the current air-debate with Senator McCarthy. Permit me to add my small tribute to you and to wish you continued success as our nation's leading news commentator on both radio and television.

Of all the men whose opinions I listen to and respect, you are by far the one in whom I would place secure confidence. Your integrity, honesty, fair-mindedness and accuracy of reporting would never be questioned by any American whose primary concern is one of patriotic devotion to country.

Not only as a broadcaster myself, and one who in his time has done considerable writing and reporting of the news, but as a loyal citizen of this greatest of all Democracies, do I wish to support you in any such controversy as this and to pledge my continued loyalty to men like you in any future debate wherein the welfare of our nation is involved. It would behoove me, as well as all true Americans, to rely on your sense of fair play and your courageous approach to any problem affecting the good of the country, rather than to respond to the ofttimes hypnotic spell of an irresponsible office-holder like the junior Senator from Wisconsin whose actions, at least so they seem to this listener, appear selfishly motivated and based on every unethical tenet foreign to our American spirit.

This personal note , from me to you, is late but--

It's a sorta sickening thing to have a man like Mccarthy attack a man like you. Next thing I suppose, he'll have the gall to go after Eisenhower.

People foget that back in the thirties, we were not on to the Russians' slick undercover stuff---using noble sounding set-ups for dirty work and so on. People just forget. McCarthy knows all that of course, but it'sjust his way.

Both myself and Mrs. C (a swell Virginia lady and one of our best followers and admirers, byt the way.) listened to your 7.45 and the Person to Person. Thought your answer to M. was fine. Dignified and to the point and factual. (Typewriter stick, hence the x-out line.)
Nancy--Mrs. C. --clapped her hands at the end and said : "He said just what I wanted him to say." That was anent your saying you are all for right to think and talk about things in the American way.etc.

Thought the Person to Person was grand. Two really big men

I know a thing like this McCarthy attack hurts a little, but I think he's on the way down now. Hope the solid people in Congress have the gumption etc. to see to that shortly.

So, if I may be excusec for saying it, Carry on, Ed, the country and all of us need clear thinking guys like you

I'm 100% for you. Night before last, I phoned WTOP here in Washington and CBS in New York to say that I think you are exactly right and that Mc Carthy's attack on you is another example of the foul play that characterizes the rat.

I think all of us who share your opinion about Mc Carthy owe you a debt for expressing so admirably our feelings. Unhappily I think too many Americans fail to see that Mc Carthy is just as potentially dangerous to America as Hitler was to Germany. That is where you are performing a wonderful service: exposing the guy for what he really is. I think this is a tough fight; but I have a lot of faith in the fundamental decency of the American people, and I believe that with the kind of fearless, intelligent reporting you are doing, the right people will win.

April 7, 1954

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Mr. Harold Laski, to whom Senator Joseph R. McCarthy has referred (in his broadcast of April 6, directed against Mr. Edward R. Murrow of the Columbia Broadcasting System) as a "Communist," was one of the leading figures of the British Labour Party.

Following a temporary strategy of external cooperation and simultaneous secret infiltration, the Communist Party of Great Britain on January 21, 1946, petitioned the Labour Party, alleging that it desired affiliation with Labour. This offer was rejected by the Labour Party, which charged that the Communists really aimed at "breaking up the Labour Movement, so as to increase their own chances of establishing a party dictatorship."

Prof. Laski, then chairman of the Labour Party, reviewed the fundamental differences between the two parties in a special study, entitled The Secret Battalion; he stated that the Communists, through "the conspiratorial side of their work," seek to "destroy the very parties with which they seek alliance in order to command their own ends." Rejecting the idea of Communist affiliation, Laski, said that "they would wreck the Labour Party by undermining its morale and directing the energy of its members to contesting with all their strength the effort of a secret minority within the greater movement from turning it into one more instrument, not of working-class power in Great Britain, but of subservient devotion to the dictatorship of the Communist Party in Moscow."

~~The apparently quite erroneous assumption that Prof. Laski was a Communist~~ has been made by other students of the rather intricate subject of world communism; notably, Mr. Ernie Adamson, when acting as Counsel for the United States Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities, ~~[illegible]~~ said on November 8, 1945: "Mr. Laski is, I believe, one of the leaders in England of the Communist movement."

Dear Sir:

Congratulations on your firm and forthright stand for America against those who would make it a less desirable place in which to live.

Regretfully, I missed your television program of Tuesday March 9th. I have heard and read many good things about your documented, factual presentation.

Isn't it anomalous that to answer such a reckless individual one has to be so factual and show proof when the one being challenged has so little regard for such things.

Your presentation of the true side of the story on your newscast this evening was very good.

My primary purpose in writing, aside from offering my heartiest congratulations and encouragement, is to inquire if there are available any printed copies of your comments of this evening's news (Friday March 12th 1954) and your comments of last Tuesday. I would appreciate very much having a copy if they are available.

My position in this regard may be somewhat contradictory. I am the manager of a small (100 watts) radio station that is affiliated with the American Broadcasting Company. Though our network affiliations differ we apparently have at least one thing in common and that is to curb, at least, the reckless and irresponsible activity of the junior senator from Wisconsin.

Keep up the good work.

Very truly yours,

Bill Farrell

CORRESPONDENT — 4414 SHOALWOOD AVE. AUSTIN 5, TEXAS — SILENT PARTNER

22 March 1954.

Dear Mr. Murrow, —

Would that we belonged to the oil-cattle-cotton-sulphur fraternity or had influence in some other way, in order to do something really worth while in this McCarthy-cancer situation. We surely do not need to tell you what we think of you and have thought, since the days of WW II.

Your photo came into our gallery, 3-12-'45 — over nine years ago. It was sent by Mr. Geo. Crandall — as we believe you were overseas. It wasn't autographed — of course, we wish it were — but we never been willing to mutilate one of your treasured letters by slipping the signature to place on the photo. We still hope that, some day, when you write again, you'll write an extra signature & date below, so we can transfer it to the photo.

But — back to McCarthy. If any thing we can write to anybody, could possibly ...be of any help to you we'd gladly write to any one you might suggest — even to McC. We'd like to let him get our opinion of him. Sometimes we think the best way to delete him would be to forget him & his doings — giving him no publicity whatever. Or — if skilled speakers & writers would concentrate on a barrage of ridicule — it might have some effect.

However, he's so power-mad, everything, even ridicule, would be turned to his advantage by him. He's a duplicate of Molotov in that ability. What stumps us is — what has he on the Congress personnel, that they fear, and so cringe to him? Can it be merely the political mania?

In the end, right must win — that's the Divine law. In conditions as they are in our bewildered McWorld, there's no time to waste. Our one contribution that is always available is the "fervent prayer" of unassailable faith — and that is yours. Anything else is yours, if you suggest it.

From our hearts.

Faithfully,

The Floods.

Dear Ed:

Congratulations on your standing up to the Big Blow from Wisconsin. We think you're the man to cope with such demogoguery. You have the skill and command respect.

I was particularly exasperated by the slur at the Institute of International Education. It would seem that the Institute's endeavor to encourage international understanding is merely a facade for seditious connivings; therefore, as a corollary, Fulbright Fellows are traitors.

I suppose you are aware that the Los Angeles Board of Education scuttled the UNESCO program here some time ago. I recall that the device of out-of-context readings entered that controversy too, the Hearst papers booming up the so-called evidence on Page One. Another source of agitation was an alarmist housewife, a pawn, who snooped on a classroom and came back screaming that Communism was being taught in the schools. Actually what she had seen was a program encouraging intercultural appreciation: the teacher had invited the students to bring in specimens of their diverse cultural backgrounds (Mexican, Japanese, etc) for classroom display. It's the sort of thing teachers have been doing for a long time. But the Board, or at least the pressure group dominating it, is blind to the meaning of the ESC in UNESCO. I'm enclosing a clip reflecting the issue.

Now I turn this letter over to Hannah, who had good words for your recent demonstration of principles.

All the best,

Mark

I thought we should add our voice to the chorus of approval which sprang up when one man dared to speak up against a wrong which had kept everyone cowed with fear. There are a good many teachers in our schooland elsewhere fortunately who speak up strongly in defense of real Americanism. I have personally seen in the past two years too many instances of a sort of creeping fascism to be easy about the trend of popular thought, but I know there are also thinking and courageous people in every occupation - what they needed was leadership to follow and you gave it.

Burke Plays Stormy Petrel Role at Meeting

The varied subjects of UNESCO, antirabies inoculations and Communism found Member Paul Burke in the role of stormy petrel at yesterday's meeting of the Los Angeles Board of Education.

He took the occasion to denounce statements about him in the public prints as lies, to demand that the board clarify its UNESCO policy and to criticize a pamphlet submitted by Mrs. Edith K. Stafford for distribution among teachers as "a passionate pitch for bigger and bolder legislative investigating committees."

Burke's solo performance, accomplished in a series of statements, motions and militant gestures, heightened the friction between him and the two women board members, against whom he sparred in a preliminary bout last Monday.

Reading Blocked

First, he succeeded in blocking, at least temporarily, Mrs. Ruth Cole's attempt to have an anti-UNESCO letter from the Native Sons of the Golden West read into the official board minutes.

Next he stood up to assail an afternoon newspaper for carrying a story in which Mrs. Cole was quoted as calling Burke a political opportunist.

He ridiculed the paper's stand against antirabies inoculations and its policies on patriotism, then defended himself as a loyal American who has only the best interests of Los Angeles school children at heart. He didn't name the paper.

Counterstatement

When Mrs. Stafford reintroduced her plan to have all teachers read an anti-Communist tract printed by the government, Burke countered immediately with a statement for the record.

"It is an unwarranted invasion of our teachers' professional and personal right of privacy for a board of education to set up a required leisure time reading list," his statement said, adding:

"Teachers are professional persons and first-class citizens in every respect, second to no other group in their loyalty to their country and their alertness to the menace of totalitarianism in any form . . ."

Voting Postponed

The 74-page pamphlet, entitled "Permit Communist Conspirators to Be Teachers?" was first brought in by Mrs. Stafford at Monday's meeting. Burke said he favors making it available but opposes forcing teachers to read it. Voting on the issue was postponed.

Burke also revived his UNESCO policy motion which failed at last Monday's meeting for want of a second.

Dear Ed:

I should have written this note of applause at home last night, but I was so stirred by the skill and courage and impact of your program, and of Hollenbeck's newscast that followed, that not until I got to my office this morning could I think about putting these words on paper.

I always knew you had the courage of your convictions and the ability to get to the heart of the most complex problems; but frankly I didn't believe that CBS still had the guts to let you do it. You and your crew, Alcoa and Stanton and Paley, deserve every accolade in the book.

If nothing else, I think you have set Eisenhower an example worth following. Your magnificent presentation on McCarthy ranks with some of the finer words written by the late Justice Oliver Wendall Holmes.

You make me proud to be an American and a broadcaster.

Dear Sir

This is the time for men of Good Will to stand up to be counted. I rise to salute you, for your Selflessness in taking on the "Bully Boy of our Times".

This Wisconsin Hitler, this Murderer of Legal Ethics, this Senator, who does violence to the whole concept of Due Process of Law, this megalomaniac who has done so much to destroy this beloved land of ours, must be stopped at all cost.

McCarthy cannot succeede, he cannot paralyze or cripple us with fear if we have the Courage, the Will to meet him head on.

Hence I say, Let's at him for if we falter we have no right to our Great American Heritage

Dear Mr. Murrow;

The letters et al that you have received on the Mc Carthy program are in the thousands, but in a rare spurt of letter-writing, I should like to add my two cents' worth.

The show was excellent, and it can only be hoped that it may be the beginning of the end for a small, but very despicable character; unfortunately, as the junior senator from Wisconsin well realizes, he has five more years to run on his term of office. I can only hope that you will not at any time in the future take in your horns, and that many others not inclined to do so now will speak up loudly.

Again, for the "See It Now" program of 9 March 1954 a very loud bravo.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

This is a rather belated note to tell you how very much I have enjoyed your programs, particularly in the last few weeks.

I had the good fortune to listen to your brilliant presentation of McCarthyism on the night of March 9th with DeWayne Kreager. After the program he told me a good bit about your days together at Washington State College and I found it extremely interesting to learn that you had been at Washington State College. I taught one year at the Eastern Washington College of Education at Cheney (1936-37) before going on to join the faculty of Princeton University. I still have a fond recollection of many pleasant days spent in the State of Washington.

With very best wishes and hearty congratulations on the good work which you are doing to reveal to Americans the need to take stock of their own principles, to reinvigorate their courage, and assume the full responsiiblities of citizenship.

Dear Mr. Ed Murrow:

My parents went to the same college you did, Washington State; I think my mother was even in your class. I am their only child like your son is your only child---except I am nearly fifteen and a Sophomore in Grant High here in the City of Roses. I cut my teeth listening to your broadcasts and I worried and wondered how you could hold off so long in telling Mc Carthy off.

In my own small world, I used every chance to speak out against the witch-hunting practices of Mc Carthy----especially when he crucified Bishop Oxnam-----I used the man for every theme and current events talk that I could manage. All the time I kept wondering how long you could stand to let this man go on ruining good people with half-facts or worse, out and out lies.

Finally, you spoke out. I am proud that you did and relieved. When Mc Carthy pulled out the "Moscow-student-committee" our family thought for a split second that he was going to accuse you of being friendly to Moscow---(Idaho)----and he would not have been above using even something like that for his self -publicity.

BUT IN THE CASE OF MR. MCCARTHY, I FELT THAT HIS WAY WAS ALL WRONG RIGHT FROM THE FIRST----and a lot of the kids feel the same way. We aren't top heavy with learning but we can smell an show-off a mile away and we can soon tag a phoney.

Thank you for renewing my faith in your courage and in the honesty of the men we listen to on the air and see on television.

Gellhorn, Martha

Dear Ed;

I should have written you long ago to express my admiration and thanks; emotions which are obviously shared by most of the civilized world. I missed your program about McCarthy, but feel I have seen it, from reading of it and ~~xxx~~ hearing of it. I did see McCarthy's reply and I think he is far worse and far more dangerous than I had realised (he, personally; everything he does and stands for and produces has from the beginning seemed to me as bad as it is possible to get.) I had not understood that he was as clever as he is; and around now, I am willing to think he makes Goebbels look very old-fashioned and inefficient.

(Anyhow) This must all be loathesome to you like taking a long slow bath in a specially nasty type of mud; it is quite awful that civil courage should be the hardest kind there is, and therefore the rarest. This sort of battle has nothing to recommend it (no ~~xxxxxxx~~ scrambled eggs and jolly talk when the kites return; no buddies; nothing.) You are infinitely admirable, really; I can't tell you how proud I am about you.

And what sickens me and what I can't get over is how this monstrous man, McC., has managed to gain his strength through terror. I begin to feel ~~kinder~~ less snotty about Germans and Italians, remembering that they had gone through wars and economic defeats, and were unemployed and crazed and that they had ancient bad habits of accepting tyranny and that, also, they had operational concentration camps. Without any such goads and excuses, this perfectly recognizable evil seems to flourish in America; it is as if willingly great numbers of Americans enjoyed hypnotizing themselves into fear and its ~~xxxxx~~ inevitable offshoot which is insane bullying. I cannot understand it, nor forgive it; the feelings aroused are not pity but contempt.

Anyhow there you are, and I bet you are sick and tired of having to fight the same kinds of rot, under different names, all your lifes and you are a very good man to go on doing so.

Blessings,

Martha Gellhorn (Matthews)

Dear Ed,

When I used to argue with you on the Board of the Overseas Press Club I certainly didn't dream that one day I'd be writing to you as one of the major heroes of the American Scene. But so you have become, and every thinking American must feel deeply a sense of gratitude and admiration for both your courage and your journalistic perspicacity.

The timing of your McCarthy show was wonderful, and the timing of the other anti-McCarthy developments during the week so extraordinarily effective that those of us on whom final frustration had begun to nibble felt again the almost forgotten sensations of hope and faith that the American way might some day be revived.

On March of Time in its days of vigor I had the privilege of exposing with the camera such sinister ambitions as those of Huey Long, Gerald Smith, Fritz Kuhn, Father Coughlin, et al. We realized in those days the potential propaganda power of the camera, and we tried to use it well. But whereas our product reached the public only once a month and could be seen only by paying admission, yours goes once a week right into the living rooms of the nation, free to all and inspiring to those who treasure liberty. And of course this brings up a rather frightening responsibility for you and the Aluminum Co. of America and CBS -- for all television: The tremendous power of TV as a propaganda medium has been historically demonstrated; what happens if the Murrows should be supplanted by the Fulton Lewis Juniors? God forbid!

I believe when the history of these sordid times is written your name will shine high on the list of those who implemented [redacted] faith without fear. As a former newspaperman myself, I am not easily given to hero-worship, and while none of us are saints, you're the smartest journalist around these days, and my battered hat is off to you. It's a pity you did not get decent support from the administration in what could have been the climax of the growing drama of Anti-mccarthyism (the Nixon speech), but which turned out to be an unctuous half-hour apologia for a timid president and an insult to the intelligence of the nation's people. Nixon's snide insinuation that those of us who hate equally Communism and mccarthyism would somehow be comforted if the fight against Communism were lessened will not be lost on those who want to wear no label except that of American. It's not that we want to see the fight against Communism lessened -- it's that we want to see the fight against mccarthyism won!

I'm tired of both Republicans and Democrats and their idiotic juggling of our Freedoms. Why don't you and Adlai Stevenson form a third party (and this from a man who voted for Eisenhower!) ? I'd vote for a ticket reading "Stevenson and Murrow". Sounds stupid? Not at all.

Meanwhile, I hope none of us will forget that McCarthy is still around, and that he, like any skunk, is capable of sending up an awful odor even after he is dead. Sadly enough, that odor may persist for the rest of our generation.

Warmest thanks again, Ed, to you, the Aluminum Co. of America and the Columbia Broadcasting System, and the best of everything to you.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I would be remiss in my responsibilities to my own conscience if I failed to express my appreciation for your documentary on the McCarthy technique last night. You and Mr. Friendly are to be heartily congratulated for one of the finest editorial presentations I've ever seen on television.

It was quite pointed and couldn't possibly have been more fair to the Wisconsin Senator --- since you used his own words to tell your story. You were a bit unfair on one point, though. You offered him rebuttal time --- even before he had a chance to yell for same. But for that you should be receiving the thanks of every reporter, editor and headline-writer in the business.

Last night's show was even more enjoyable than your editorials on the Radulovich case in Michigan and the American Legion-A.C.L.U. squabble in Indiana. Again, my thanks for a most enjoyable half-hour and the realization that despite the hue and cry we're really living in a democracy.

I wonder if Senator McCarthy asked somebody to look up Louis XIV and tell him about him.

What a dangerous man, McCarthy--a cross between a crustacean and an octopus. That was a nice comment in ~~London~~ the Guardian, to the effect that perhaps your Heroism will make bravery fashionable. I hope so.

The fumes of the fight seem to have distracted the country form worry about the depression.

Dear Ed:

One of my Chicago friends bestirred himself sufficiently on the McCarthy subject to write a letter to the editor of the Chicago Daily News which published same. He has sent it on to me with a note that perhaps there were some ideas in it that might be of use to you. Attached is a copy of the letter to the editor.

In case you forget, I am going to call you in another day or so on the circus for Casey and you as discussed Monday at lunch.

Dear Editor:

Is there a lesson for all of us in the recent Army - McCarthy controversy?

The wheel of fortune turns and suddenly the Senator is the accused. His critics will claim that he has rather belatedly called for the right to counsel; the right to cross-examine; the right to air all the facts; and other legal rights such as the presumption of innocence till one is proved guilty. Will not the question be asked - has the Senator thus pleaded guilty to the charges made against him in the past? Aren't these the rights he's been accused of denying to others?

These are important parts of the Bill of Rights and our Constitution. These are the pillars of American justice on which the land of the free and the home of the brave depend.

There should be no question that despite any previous action by the Senator these rights should not be denied him.

Nor should they be denied to any alleged communist or to any suspected atheist or any alleged murderer. These American rights are for all Americans, popular ones and unpopular ones, redheads and brunettes -- yes, regardless of race, color or creed.

More important than any defendant or any single accusation, it is still the first principle of American justice that it is better for a dozen wrongdoers to escape punishment than for one innocent man to be unjustly damaged.

The Senator still makes one mistake, however - the call for the lie detector. It has never been accepted by our courts as the final judge and jury. There is no mechanical short cut to justice. No Geiger counter can separate the guilty from the innocent. No electronic machine can preserve the civil rights of Americans. Our legal and constitutional processes are our only real protections.

It is an over-simplification to excuse our unfairnesses and prejudices on the grounds that we are engaged in so-called "rat hunts." We don't burn our cities to destroy rats nor dare we burn our traditions and charters in attempts to capture human wrongdoers.

There have always been some sort of "church mice" even in our temples. The real issue, however, is - are we continuing to build great cathedrals dedicated to the teaching and development of human dignity and man's virtues in a free and liberty-loving society.

Very truly yours,

Halpern, Nathan

Now for the letter to the editor written by WHCU newsman Charlie Chatfield, who says:

We are going to discuss today that very important matter of telling the truth. Each one of us places a value on truth...and each one of us relies upon devices to measure it. The doctor measures diagnosis with the aid of a stethoscope; the machinist judges his piece of steel by using micrometers; the homemaker relies upon the oven thermostat to tell her when the cake is done.

For almost 20 years, the American people have relied upon Edward R. Murrow as a leading instrument for gauging their judgment on foreign and domestic affairs. And now that Senator McCarthy has impugned Murrow's loyalty, it is time for us to re-check our bearings.

When a cake burns or a piece of steel doesn't take accurate shape, we do not at first discard the oven thermostat or the set of micrometers. The first thing we do is take another reading. And since Murrow has been depicted as a friend and sympathizer of Communism, it seems unlikely that fair-minded Americans will discard their instrument of veracity on world affairs before they take a second reading.

Possibly more than any other man, Murrow has been responsible for the development of informed and honest analysis to news events. He is the man who made us understand the Battle of Britain and the fallacy of isolationism.

Murrow is the man who developed the best news gathering system in Europe, the man responsible for telling us what Hitler was up to when Anschluss came to Austria and the German troops marched on Poland and Czecho-Slovakia. Murrow is the man who went to Korea to report to Americans what their armed forces were actually meeting in the field.

Murrow is the man responsible for the series, "This I Believe", the one-post war effort to reaffirm belief in religion and moral precepts.

To this reporter, if Edward R. Murrow were soft to Communism as Senator McCarthy has charged, he would have compiled a 20-year record far different in all respects. Communism does not thrive where men strive to tell the people of developing events. Communism has no place for persons who pronounce the religious and moral truths they believe, for remember the only faith expounded by Communists is not to God, but to the State.

On the basis of a long record, consistently expressed, the facts indicate that few men have advanced as much as Murrow the principles of the American way of life.

Yet by the measurements Senator McCarthy used last night, it is not enough to apply a keen mind and talent, a fighting heart and devoted soul into the battle against Communism. One must publicly proclaim to the world, "I hate Communism, I fight Communism, and anyone who fights another way is soft toward it."

Murrow, like many other American leaders of opinion, IS guilty of pegging McCarthy as one who gives comfort to the enemy. Those who heard James Reston speak in Ithaca this week were exposed to the same reasoning.. for Reston told how reckless investigations have weakened the foreign and civil service, and how the rest of the free world is distrustful of American leadership.

Those who heard Arthur Dean speak at Cornell's Farm and Home Week recall his grave warning of peril to southeastern Asia, at a time when official Washington is enmeshed in the business of investigating whether someone's secretary was a Communist five years ago.

By McCarthy's yardstick, these men are soft toward Communism.

And last night, McCarthy injected more fear and confusion among the American people with his innuendo that the development of the H-Bomb was delayed 18 months because of Communists in government. Such a premise overlooks completely such facts that scientists and officials were plagued with questions of the workability of such a weapon, and the matter of morality in ordering its development. By McCarthy's yardstick, the scientists, National Security Council, Atomic Energy Commission and cabinet must likewise be considered soft toward communism.

It would seem that a paramount issue for the American people to decide is what type of yardstick they want to use in fighting Communism. If we choose to distort, smear and confuse...to spread fear and vilification...if we subvert the principles of the American way to a mere mouthing that we hate Communism, then we should value the measuring stick which Senator McCarthy uses.

But should we agree that the Senator's measuring stick does not relfect American freedoms and principles which once were viewed by the rest of the free world with respect, then we can only judge that more is needed in our arsenal fighting Communism than press clippings from the Daily Worker which attest the Communists hate McCarthy as much as he professes to hate them.

A greater weapon in our arsenal than hate, is truth.

Very truly yours,

Charlie Chatfield

Dear Ed,

We heard McCarthy last night. After the honest sincere talk by Mr. Eisenhower, it made us want to throw up. We are sick of this poisonous McCarthy and his personal inquisition. We are sick of Cohn and Schine. We did not ask for them. We wish they would shut up and go home.

Ike told us the FBI is our official agency to search out Communists and render them harmless. If we think we know one, Ike said, call the FBI. That sounds simple enough. Somehow I don't feel we have need of McCarthy. Keep up your brave fight against this opportunistic ambitious politician whose only stock in trade is suspicion and fear at a time when we stand on the threshold of atomic horror.

Hats off to you and CBS, Ed. If you guys are Communists I'm the Prince of Wales grandfather!

Dear Mr Murrow:-

Being long time friends of your parents we have been following with very keen interest your discussions anent Mr McCarthy. Being a transplanted American I naturally try to keep abreast of affairs in the U.S. and for years we have tuned in your broadcasts every day. We have been alarmed by the placidity of the American people in their acceptance of McCarthyism and their seeming blindness to its similiarity to Hitlerism. In fact using McCarthy as a symbol for Hitler and Fulton Lewis as a Dr Goebbels and the V.F.W. as Storm Troopers, you have an identical set-up.

I am not a crank about this Mr Murrow. I am a veteran of World War One and have been totally disabled ever since it finished. Both of our sons were in W.W.2 serving in the Canadian Navy, and both of them suffered too in that scrap. So we do not want to see any more strife. From the foregoing you will see that my wife (bless her) has had plenty to put up with. We are not complaining, and there is nothing that we want --- except to have the freedoms that we fought for and the right of free speech. This we seem to be losing. We have not seen you parents for some time, your dad being bedridden and me being confined close to home also, but from friends who do visit us we have gotten the impression that they do not feel free to express themselves. Their theory being that if they do not agree with the Republican Party they will be classed as Commies. Mr Murrow such a state of affairs in a supposedly free nation is wrong. I listened to your Vice-President Mr Nixon, last night on the radio (not having television) and I was amazed to hear him say that the U.S.A. with all its shouting had weeded out only 2400 employess who were considered non-security. I was amazed, because last week in the House of Commons at Ottawa, the government was asked how many Canadians had been dropped as security risks and the answer was over 3000, and that from a nation of only fourteen millions. But my point is there was no ballyhoo and no playing to the gallery. No one, not even our Members of Parliament can find out who these people are. To my mind that is a much better way than smearing their names all over the press, because once smeared they can never live it down. That is enough of this. I feel so strongly that I could go on indefinately. We know you are swamped with letters etc. so we do not expect any reply. But we did want to assure you that we are with you at all times. Knowing your parents, we know that no child of theirs can go very far from the right path. But we had to let you know how we felt.

Americans in general not your parents

I am sorry about your dad, and sorrier still that I cannot get to see him. I must tell you a story about him. When your brother Lacey was called up. He had bought a new Cadillac. He wrote your dad to get it and look after it. Your dad went to Spokane and getting the garage man to show him how, he proceeded to drive off. All want well until he came to a stop light. He stopped all right, but he could'nt get started again. Finally a young policeman came over to him and said "what's the matter Pop ? Having trouble?" "Yes replied your dad "I can't get the/// thing to go." Said the cop "Just take your foot off the brake pop and she will roll. " He did, and it did. He was so mad that he did'nt stop at hom, but drove right up here to show me the infernal gadgets that the younger generation were inflicting on the world. At that time he was driving a very ancient Chev and I had an old Stude of the same vintage. We both agree that we like the old things, but I hear that both of your parents enjoy seeing you on the T.V. Let me close by wishing you and yours the very best of wishes and praying that you will always keep up the fight for freedom. We have written you mother . Keep up your radio programs as that is our only means of hearing you We get you every night at 5.00 p.m. P.C.T.

Best of Wishes to you and your staff and family.
Yours.

Dear Ed:

Last night television journalism made history. Before the Jack O'Briens, the Fulton Lewis's and the other pea brains, including the bourbon boobs who underwrite them, confuse the issue, I want to tell you how much I admire you, your staff, CBS and ALCOA for "See It Now's" brilliant tele-portrait of McCarthy.

Whether or not McCarthy decides to answer himself - I can't believe he would be so foolish - you booted home a winner. I have heard nothing but praise for the show which apparently had a large audience; not since the Ford anniversary tv show have I heard so much comment.

It would be too much to hope McCarthy will see himself "as others" see him, but we can hope that you opened some eyes, stiffened some spines and pried open the repository for the responsibility for the likes of McCarthy in countless "ourselves" across the land.

Leadership is a lonely business at times, and without yours in this case the job would never have been done; it is so easy to say "no" or "it's too complex to explain" or "let's see what develops."

So, again, bully for you!

The continuity of our American Institutions requires men like McCarthy to be put in their correct category, machination of the Jesuits have no place in this century. Jefferson planned for no return tickets for tyrants - nevertheless they are in places of too much power.

The Effect of American Security Measures on American Foreign Relations

By

Philip C. Jessup

We should understand what we are discussing. By "American security measures" we mean measures for internal security. We want to examine their impact on our international relations. These internal "American security measures" are of two kinds. One kind is the standard long-established operation of the government to protect itself from spies and saboteurs. This a necessary and normal function of government which has been well handled for many years. Maybe numbers don't lie, but those who quote numbers may. In spite of "agonizing reappraisals," figures finally extracted from government witnesses show that few if any spies or saboteurs have been newly discovered. The legitimate search for others must of course vigilantly continue. If the part of the Government charged with this function is not also utterly disrupted as other parts have been, the job will continue to be done successfully. This contributes to the totality of national security.

The other kind of security measures which, with shame, we must admit now carry the label "American," are very different. They have no roots in our constitution, law, character or tradition. To air on television undisclosed and unproved charges against an unidentified one of three persons in the District of Columbia named Annie Lee Moss, has no bearing on security. It has a bearing on America like the bearing of a millstone around the neck. These egomaniacal antics, as Senator Flanders has pointed out, divert us from serious consideration of the dangerous world problems which face us.

Our security is not promoted by publishing without authorization Army intelligence reports on our actual enemy; by disrupting vital military scientific work at Ft. Monmouth; by trying to discredit our Army; by destroying the morale of the devoted men and women who have given their lives to the Foreign Service; by undermining the church, our educational institutions, the radio and the press; or by turning every man against his neighbor through sowing the seeds of suspicion and distrust.

This partial list of the evils recently perpetrated in the name of American security measures reads like a blueprint of a Kremlin program. Actually it is taken from the apocryphal Americana of McCarthyism.

It is this perverted kind of American security measures which I will discuss in terms of its impact on our foreign relations.

It was "Only Yesterday," in the words of Frederick Lewis Allen, that A. Mitchell Palmer made a kind of name for himself with his hysterical persecutions in the 'twenties. "A cloud of suspicion hung in the air," writes Mr. Allen, "and intolerance became an American virtue." At that time too, organizations like the League of Women Voters and the Federal Council of Churches were pointed to with alarm. "America," wrote Katherine Fullerton Gerould in Harpers Magazine in 1922, "is no longer a free country in the old sense." But there were men like Theodore Roosevelt and Charles Evans Hughes and papers like the New York World who dared to speak out. The hysteria of the postwar era subsided and we Americans were again, as we were born, free.

In those days America was also busy rejecting Woodrow Wilson and the League of Nations. Our foreign relations were submerged in isolation. The Kaiser's Germany was humbled in defeat, Bolshevik Russia was torn and still weak; there was no new enemy confronting us on the world stage. We had reneged on our world leadership and it made no great difference if other countries were nauseated by our local hysterics.

Today the picture is very different. America, thank God, has not abdicated. Democratic and Republican Administrations alike identify the United Nations as the cornerstone of our foreign policy. We are the leader of the free world. We stand strongly across the path of the great and ruthless power of a highly developed Soviet Union which has risen from the ashes of Nazism as the director of the new world communist menace. What we do, but especially what we are, is the concern -- the legitimate concern -- of peoples everywhere who are, or who yearn to be free.

In Western Europe are some of our strongest allies. Most of them know by personal experience the methods of totalitarianism which accompanied Hitler's armies of occupation. It is not surprising that the New York Times correspondent reports from Paris that Frenchmen see "McCarthyism as a manifestation of native fascism"; that they "have doubt of the ability of the United States to assume leadership of the free world." It is not surprising that the Times correspondent in Bonn reports that "Germans inevitably draw a parallel between McCarthyism and Hitlerism." It is not surprising that the Times correspondent in London reports that "an ambassador from a member nation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization declared that 'the dangerous reluctance of France and Italy to vote for a European Defense Community which is an instrument of the United States' can be explained by the growing fear that fascism is coming to America and that E. D. C. is a step to war." On last November 17th Dr. W. A. Visser't Hooft of the Netherlands, who is the administrative head of the World Council of Churches, told ninety American Protestant leaders that "irresponsibility in the United States, as indicated by McCarthyism, looms as large in the Western European mind as the threat of aggression from the East." So-called American security measures are clearly doing Malenkov's work for him.

Europeans, Latin Americans and Asians will agree, as do I, with one statement of Secretary of State Dulles in his article in Foreign Affairs just published: "We want to end this era of danger . . . The way to end the peril peacefully is to demonstrate that freedom produces not merely guns, but the spiritual, intellectual and material richness that all men want."

Who believes that the highly publicized capture of the scalp of a "pink army dentist" reveals that our freedom has produced "spiritual and intellectual" or even "material" richness? Even though the team was at least 50% well-heeled materially, who would select to tour Europe as exemplars of our spiritual and intellectual attainments Messrs. Cohn and Schine?

On May 19, 1953 President Eisenhower said " . . . no nation is secure whose Government does not command respect at home and honor abroad." An essential American security measure is therefore to put an end to the identification with the United States Government of a symbol of disrespect of our great traditions and of dishonor to our reputation as the home of the free.

The critical problem of American foreign relations today, acknowledged and avowed by this as well as by the preceding Administration, is the maintenance of our leadership in the free world. As Secretary Dulles recently said: "The United States has inherited a responsibility for leadership . . . " His predecessor in office, Mr. Dean Acheson, pointed out that "We will continue to be accepted as the leader only if the other countries believe that the pattern of responsibility within which we operate is a responsibility to interests which are broader than our own."

Our national defense depends upon our relations with our allies in whose territories we have bases. If they reject our leadership we have only two alternatives. One is to lose the security which as we are told depends on the capacity to retaliate. The other alternative is to go in for the massive ground forces and ruthless domination by which the Soviet Union maintains its bases on the territory of unwilling satellites. Once we adopt the pattern of totalitarianism we will have lost our national soul and "What is a man [or a nation] profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" We may create a sense of dependence through our wealth and our stockpile of atomic and hydrogen bombs, but that is very different from leadership.

We appeal to the other peoples of the world when we remind them of what we stand for in terms of human decency and progress. For that, we rely on quotations from Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln rather than from Henry Ford and General Patton. If other peoples become convinced that we have foresworn our tradition of freedom, we will have lost the capacity to lead. If we lose the capacity to lead the free world, we will have lost the capacity to retaliate against the enslaved world of the aggressor.

Foreign relations are carried on by people. President Eisenhower said at his press conference three days ago that the success of an army depends upon its morale. It is equally true that the success of diplomacy depends upon the morale of those who are waging the campaigns from our State Department and in our embassies and missions abroad. The famous letter of the five ex-ambassadors and the recent statement of former Ambassador George Kennan bear striking testimony to the damage which has been done to that morale by so-called "American security measures." The damage is not irreparable; much could be regained by an early and forthright vindication by the Secretary of State of that distinguished Foreign Service Officer, John Paton Davies, a man who was ready to sacrifice personal interest to comply with his obligations as an official of the United States.

The battle against aggressive international communism is being fought daily all across the free world in foreign offices and in the minds of men. There have been notable victories and some setbacks in that long campaign. The Truman Doctrine for Greece and Turkey, the Marshall Plan, Nato, and the instant resistance by the United Nations to armed aggression in Korea, made the aggressive tide roll back. The forces which Soviet communism can mobilize within the United States are minimal compared to their still existing strength in such of their hunting grounds as the jungles of Indo-China, and the Communist party in Italy.

We would fire a gardener who drove a steam-roller over the flower beds in order to crush a Japanese beetle, but some people would apparently try to defeat the Soviet Union by dropping a hydrogen bomb on the Department of State.

The Kremlin uses insidious tactics, often of diabolical cleverness. They have tried to appropriate to themselves the mantle of peace and to cloak us with the shroud of the warmonger. A recent column in the Times reports that the Communist Information Bureau has sent out a directive which would support and encourage McCarthy's campaign to prove that anyone who opposes his methods is a communist. This is in line with communist tactics in Europe: in West Germany a neo-Nazi newspaper was started with a subsidy from the Communist Central Committee in East Germany; in Italy the Communist Party financed a magazine written by and for the remnants of Mussolini's fascists. Naturally one must refuse to surrender the fight for the preservation of our national interests through peace abroad and through free democracy at home in face of the effort of the communists in Moscow or the scaremongers in Washington to try to pin a red label on those who defend these vital causes.

Our leadership of the free world is about to be put to a severe test at the conference which is soon to meet at Geneva. Our representatives in those negotiations will labor under a heavy handicap. As they argue our points with the representatives of friendly powers it is inevitable that the latter will be saying to themselves: "Does the representative of the United States honestly believe that, or is he just afraid of McCarthy?" The considered view of the Secretary of State of the United States of America is weighty and influential. A barker for a Senate sub-committee side show adds weight only to the sly arguments of the communist representatives. In a contest for driving wedges to split the free world coalition, a McCarthy may succeed where a Molotov will fail. One hopes that the able performance at Berlin will be repeated. Much may depend upon what happens in Washington in the meantime.

Perhaps it will be thought that these matters of which I have spoken should, on this occasion, have been discussed with scholarly detachment, using symbols for names and abstract principles instead of facts. In less dangerous times that might be true. Today the free use of knowledge is a necessary measure of American security and there is need for blunt speech.

The situation is dangerous, but it is not desperate. It calls for neither complacency nor despair. It is probably true that some of our friends in other countries are unduly disturbed, because they have no power to influence developments in this country and lack confidence that we will influence them in the right direction. Their worry and distrust are facts affecting our foreign relations and we can not overlook these facts. The persons conducting our foreign relations can not overlook them. There is reassurance in the fact that we have faced similar difficulties in our history and have surmounted them. We will do so again. It is good to find that a brilliant former Attorney General of the United Kingdom on returning home after a visit here to participate in our Bicentennial Program was able to say: "We sometimes disapprove of the things they [the Americans] say and the methods they adopt, but in the end they always do the right thing."

We may well hope that our Government will act upon the advice of Secretary Dulles in his address of January 12 when he counselled reliance on "conduct and example [which] shall continue as in the past to show all men how good can be the fruits of freedom."

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It was with interest, eagerness and appreciation that I viewed your recent telecast devoted to honest factual reporting on the McCarthy subject.

Unfortunately there has been much suppression of the truth on this subject, both by newspapers, radio and TV.

Thank you from someone who enjoys an honest presentation of facts, be they popular or not.

Dear Joe:

For the past few months I have been trying to put together two half-hours of television and five fifteen-minute periods of radio time each week, and this is literally my first opportunity to say my thanks for your gracious communication regarding the television program we did in regard to the junior Senator from Wisconsin.

I trust you will not regard this long delay as any indication of any lack of appreciation on the part of myself and my colleagues for your thoughtfulness in sending us an encouraging word.

It is our hope that future programs may merit your approval.

Sincerely yours,

13 March

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I remember with pride the night you spent in my exec's pit in korea. It was the first night the First Marine Provisional Brigade landed in August 1950. That was the night you wanted to contact General Craig but Brigade headquarters was having a little battle of their own and you consented to spend the night with my battery.

I'm writing to tell you how much I enjoyed your program on Senator McCarthy. As you pointed out, this is no time to remain silent, however, we in the military service are limited as to the political action we can take.

In my opinion, McCarthy is the most dangerous threat to our way of life in the history of the United States since our independence. Most McCarthy supporters do not subscribe to his methods, but feel they are necessary. Their thesis is that we have to chose between McCarthy of communism. This I do not believe.

I have faith that the American people can resist any threat from internal communism. Sometimes, however, that faith is shaken a little when I see otherwise intelligent Americans willing to turn our freedom over to a would-be tyrant like McCarthy.

Congratulations again on your fine and brave stand, and be assured that I will do everything in my power (and within existing regulations) to fight McCarthy and all he stands for. We all detest communism both internal and external, however, McCarthyism is not the only alternative. As President Eisenhower pointed out, we have sufficient investigative and law enforcement bodies in existence. If they do not do their job, then make them. If they cannot do their job within the framework of the constitution, then change the constitution but do it legally. McCarthy evidently feels that he should be given special dispensation wo operate in violation of the constitution, and gives as his reason the gravity of the communist situation. The constitution is the instrument which protects us from the dangers of communism, and the dangers of McCarthyism.

I have heard many people state that they hope that some one will assasinate McCarthy. I hope McCarthy will live to a ripe old age as an example to the american people and to the world that our democratic system is the best type of government to maintain freedom of the individual and guarantee the rights and dignity of man.

I hope this doesn't seem presumptuous, but since you accepted my hospitality in Korea, I hope you will be able to do it again, this time in my quarters here at Quantico. If you are ever in this vicinity, my wife and I will be honored if you and your family will accept this invitation.

Yours Very Truly,

Dear Mr. Wilson:-

The press, this morning, indicates that the stockholders of your company are a bit uneasy about the controversy between Senator McCarthy and Mr. Edward R. Morrow in which Alcoa appears to be involved.

I do not think that there are an intelligent people who would construe "See It Now" as reflecting the opinions of your Corporation. Certainly, there are no people in Washington who believe that Mr. Murrow is in any way connected with Communism or that he ever was connected with any subversive organization. Mr. Murrow appears to be doing an excellent job of reporting and that is appreciated by most Americans. I can not conceive how any harm can befall Alcoa by remaining the sponsors of this program. It does seem odd that the gentlemen from Texas and from other parts of the country do have a way of effecting any program where the spotlight is upon the junior senator from Wisconsin. You will recall that, while Adams Hats have canceled their contract with Drew Person, they stated that McCarthy had nothing to do with it. Millions of people believed and still believe that the Adams Hat people were being blackmailed into such actions. I do not think that your great Corporation should find themselves in that position and I would like to counsel with you not to discontinue the program because of any pressure that may be brought to bear along those lines.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I should feel remiss in my civic responsibility as a publisher were I not to acknowledge the splendid reporting on Alcoa's recent TV programs.

While you are to be commended personally for your unbiased presentation of the "McCarthy case", I think the Aluminum Company of America which makes this wonderful program possible, is equally deserving.

As a small town publisher of a weekly paper, no one understands better than I, the importance of the work you are doing, thanks to Alcoa.

Without appearing to be presumptuous, and as one small voice crying in the wilderness, please keep up the good work regardless of what obstacles certain well meaning individuals may toss in your path.

KUP'S COLUMN

KUPCINET

OF ALL THE STATEMENTS, true or false, hurled by Sen. McCarthy in his widely ballyhooed "I'll-tell-all-about-Adlai Stevenson" speech here Monday night, the one he definitely never should have made was his invitation to the press to inspect the documents, pamphlets and photostats he offered as proof of his charges. As McCarthy spoke, he waved these papers for his audience to see and exclaimed in a challenging voice, "I've got the proof right here and the press is invited to examine them." He never should have said that, because some members of the press accepted his challenge and what they discovered on close inspection of these documents bore little relation to the charges made by the senator.

LET'S TAKE ONE of the major points in McCarthy's speech. That was the one in which he first held up a picture of a desolate looking barn and then another photo to show the elaborate furnishings inside this barn. This, according to McCarthy, was the secret headquarters of the Institute of Pacific Relations. And then came a photostat of a letter—a letter, according to McCarthy, which his investigators dug out of the secret files of the IPR.

SEN. McCARTHY

AND THEN, WAVING the photostat as proof, McCarthy stated: "This shows that Alger Hiss and Frank Coe recommended Adlai Stevenson as a delegate to the Mont Tremblant conference in Canada, called to determine our postwar foreign policy in Asia. Alger Hiss is a convicted traitor and Coe has been named under oath before congressional committees seven times as a member of the Communist Party. . . . Why did Hiss and Coe name Adlai Stevenson as the man they want? I don't know."

NOW LET'S EXAMINE the photostat of that letter, containing such damaging evidence. What does it show? It was a two-page letter, written by a Joseph Lockwood, an official of the IPR, to a man identified only as "Bob," discussing possible speakers for a conference. And the only reference to Stevenson comes in a brief paragraph on the second page, thusly: "In the field of foreign relations, I understand from Hiss that there are several good assistants working under Navy Sec. Knox, one of them an Adlai Stevens." This misspelling of Stevenson's name by a person who obviously didn't know him was the lone—THE ONLY!—reference to the Democratic candidate in this "devastating" bit of photostatic evidence. Damaging, isn't it?

BUT THAT'S NOT ALL this "revealing" photostat unveiled for reporters. If McCarthy had read the next paragraph of this same letter, he would have noted the name of one of the nation's most respected publishers also was listed as a possible speaker because of his qualifications in foreign relations—Gardner (Mike) Cowles of the newspaper and magazine chain. Cowles, a personal friend of this reporter, is as far removed from communism as McCarthy usually is from the truth.

NOW LET'S TAKE McCarthy's implication that Stevenson WAS in Chicago on Nov. 12, 1946, and DID introduce Hiss at a Northwestern U. lecture. Stevenson already is on record with proof that on such a date he was busy with UN affairs in New York. McCarthy, in the part of his speech that ran too long for radio and TV, admitted that "whether Stevenson introduced Hiss is unimportant, but I was curious so I made some checks as to his [Stevenson's] veracity."

McCARTHY THEN RELATED THAT HE examined a Chicago afternoon newspaper of Nov. 11, 1946, the day before Hiss was scheduled to speak here, and found a notice in the paper saying that on the next day, Nov. 12, Stevenson was scheduled to give a lecture at 4:30 p.m. at the University of Chicago. "If Adlai made that speech at 4:30 p.m., then he was IN Chicago on that day," charged McCarthy, leaving the obvious implication that Stevenson was in Chicago and was able to introduce Hiss earlier that same day at Northwestern. . . . "And here are the facts," bellowed McCarthy. "Stevenson was paid the sum of $250 for appearing that day at the University of Chicago."

BUT WHAT ARE THE FACTS? Reporters who had accepted McCarthy's challenge to inspect his documents asked for proof. And the only "proof" was a notarized statement from a Henry A. Heinly, a Chicagoan, who had taken it upon himself to search through the Chicago newspapers in an effort to dig up evidence that Stevenson had introduced Hiss at the Northwestern lecture. It was Heinly who found the Chicago newspaper clipping referred to in the above paragraph—not McCarthy.

IN HIS NOTARIZED STATEMENT, Heinly pointed out that he had visited the office of the Walgreen Foundation at the U. of C. and talked to a secretary there. His direct quote: "The secretary told me that the Stevenson speech had been published in a book . . . and a few minutes later she went through the files and said Stevenson had been paid $250 for the speech on that day." The reporters pressed McCarthy and his investigators for further proof. Did they know Heinly? Had they checked the secretary of the Walgreen Foundation? Had any additional evidence been uncovered to show Stevenson was present that day? The answer to each question was the same: No. And on this flimsy evidence, McCarthy made his "accusation."

NOW LET'S DO A LITTLE checking of our own. James G. Kerwin, a political science professor at the U. of C., is chairman of the Walgreen Foundation. And here is his story, in effect:

Heinly, posing as a Northwestern U. student, a personal friend of Gov. Stevenson and a worker for the Volunteers for Stevenson (he really piled it on!), went to the Walgreen Foundation office and made inquiry about the lecture Stevenson had delivered Nov. 12, 1946. Kerwin dug into the files and produced a copy of the university's official calendar which showed that Stevenson had delivered his lecture on Nov. 21. The calendar carried this note: "Postponed from Nov. 12." The $250 check presented to Stevenson also carried the Nov. 21 date.

SEE NOW WHY JOE McCARTHY never should have invited the press to examine those "documents of proof" he was waving to his audience? And why every accusation he makes must be subjected to close scrutiny?

THE "CASE" against Sen. McCarthy of Wisconsin will now be resumed without further ado, inasmuch as he has let the news seep out that he will give his "I'll-tell-all-about-Adlai Stevenson" speech of last week one more twirl Monday night, this time on a network radio broadcast. According to the announcement, McCarthy is giving this repeat performance because his radio-television time ran out on him last Monday night, when his speech originated in the Palmer House, and apparently he feels too many listeners missed too much of his "well-documented" material.

IT IS THE SINCERE HOPE of this reporter that McCarthy has checked his facts since last week, for we have shown what a soft touch the senator is for any one who troubles to check his documents. The papers, documents, photostats, etc., which he waved with such austerity for his television audience last Monday night proved to bear little relationship to the charges McCarthy hurled at Stevenson. And if he intends to follow the same script this Monday night, we should like to turn the spotlight on a few more "well-documented" McCarthy "facts" which the intervening week has given us time to check.

LET US PICK UP WHERE WE LEFT OFF last week by examining this statement in McCarthy's speech: "In his (Stevenson's) biography, we find on Page 73 that in the summer of 1943, after Mussolini's government had fallen, Stevenson was given the task of formulating America's postwar policy toward Italy. Truman, in speaking before an Italian group in New York on Columbus Day of this year, confirmed this fact. Gen. Bedell Smith, head of the Central Intelligence Agency, in his book and on Pages 35 and 37 of his sworn testimony, told what that policy for Italy was—namely to 'connive' to bring Communists into the Italian government and to bring the Italian Communist leader, Togliatti, back from Moscow. . . . I do not know what their defense of Stevenson's plans for foisting Communists upon the Italians will be."

NOW LET'S DO SOME DISSECTING: On Page 73 of Stevenson's biography, written by Noel Busch, this appears: ". . . Stevenson headed a foreign Economic Administration mission which had three objectives. One was TO REPORT on how best to keep the Italian economy going and the Italians from starving, while the Allied armies fought their way to the richer industrial North. Another was TO REPORT on how to re-establish local government in a nation where all the experienced administrators were presumably Fascists. The third was TO REPORT on what elements could be counted on to help with these objectives."

THE CAPITALIZATION OF THE WORDS, "TO REPORT," is ours—to show how McCarthy can twist black into white, even off the printed page. Stevenson was not sent to Italy to formulate policy—but TO REPORT on conditions in Italy, obviously for those who had the graver responsibility of formulating policy. A little more careful reading by McCarthy could have established that difference very easily—if McCarthy wanted to establish a difference.

GEN. SMITH

NOW FOR PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S PART in "confirming" this "connivance," as McCarthy put it so glibly. What did the President say in his Columbus Day address in New York? A search of the New York Times reveals the complete text of that speech and here is Mr. Truman's reference to Adlai Stevenson: ". . . He was sent by President Roosevelt TO SURVEY (our caps again) the condition and problem of the Italian people in the liberated zone. He found them without transport, without enough food and fuel and suffering under a terrible inflation. Yet, in spite of their misery, he recognized in the Italian people their underlying courage, their hope, their eagerness to help the Allied cause. He recommended that they be treated, not as former enemies, but as valuable and useful co-workers in the fight for freedom. . . . Adlai Stevenson's plan for what ought to be done in Italy contained the seeds that eventually flowered in the Marshall Plan for the defense of Europe against communism."

TIE THAT ONE, IF YOU CAN, for twisting the facts, and any resemblance between President Truman's exact statement about Stevenson and McCarthy's "connivance" is strictly coincidental.

NOW LET'S JUMP to Gen. Bedell Smith's book, as mentioned in McCarthy's speech. On pages 18-19 of "My Three Years in Moscow," the general writes:

"Viewing events in retrospect, it is as easy now, as it was difficult then, to appreciate the nature of Soviet political aims in Italy. We of the West were determined to establish a democratic government with as broad a base as possible and this made it easy for us to accept Communist participation in the Italian government, and even to accept, and indeed to facilitate, the return of the Italian Communist leader, Palmiro Togliatti, who had been in Moscow.

"The Communists were the hard core of the Partisan movement, and their initial participation in the reconstructed Italian government was on a co-operative, collaborative basis."

THE ABOVE, MIND YOU, comes not from Stevenson, but from Gen. Smith, a man recognized for his present Communist-fighting values. Where, then, did McCarthy get his facts that our government's policy was to "connive" to get Communists into the Italian government—a policy he so erroneously attributes to Stevenson? The answer to that question begs another question: Where does McCarthy get most of his facts?

AS GEN. SMITH POINTS OUT, the Communists at that time were the hard core of the resistance in Italy to the Nazis, the common enemy. No one, excepting perhaps McCarthy, needs be reminded that the Russians were our allies in this period of history. And is it necessary to ask what Gen. Eisenhower was doing while the Communist leader Togliatti was being brought back to Italy? Why, Eisenhower was "collaborating" with a Red—Marshal Zhukov, the Russian army chief—to squeeze the life out of the Nazis!

An official protest by Sen. McCarthy (R-Wis.) against the CBS and NBC networks should be in the hands of the Federal Communications Commission any hour now. But sources close to the Wisconsin senator have informed this reporter that "McCarthy is just going through the paces because he realizes he doesn't have a leg to stand on in this case." McCarthy summoned his Washington attorney, Edward B. Williams, to help him draft the letter of protest to the FCC, which includes a repetition of his publicly stated charge that he "was personally attacked by Adlai E. Stevenson on radio and television and is not being given an opportunity to reply."

WASHINGTON OBSERVERS REPORT a "distinct cooling off" toward McCarthy in the last week by persons usually standing at his side. This includes the so-called isolationist wing of the Republican Party, composed largely of Midwesterners. One member of this group, who long has looked favorably on McCarthy, remarked the other day that "mentally and physically Joe has taken a terrific beating and he needs a rest—a long rest—more than anything else."

ED MURROW, WHOSE TV blast at McCarthy Tuesday night created a furor, is upset about only one follow-up story in the press: A report that Bill Paley, head of CBS, told him to "tone down" his attack. Murrow vehemently denies Paley made any such suggestion. . . . Personal to Joan Benny and her groom, Seth Baker: You have a perfect example after which to pattern your marriage. Jack Benny and his Mary Livingston, after 27 years, are still one of Hollywood's "ideally married couples."

JOAN BENNY

A RECONCILIATION IS in the making for Dorsey Connors and Jim Bannon of the TV lanes. "Our separation was just a matter of two careers in one family," Dorsey told us, "and that takes a lot of readjustment. But I'm sure we can work it out." . . . Don Cherry, the singer and amateur golf champ who's visiting in Chicago, has been burning up the wires to his ricochet love, songbird Peggy Lee. (Or isn't three long-distance calls to Hollywood in four hours burning up the wires?)

CHICAGOANS WITNESSED this example of how the U.S. armed forces' no-segregation policy is working out: An Air Force pilot visited here one day this week and, upon arriving in town, he immediately phoned the family of his navigator. The family invited him out to the house for a chat—an invitation he promptly accepted. What makes the story significant is that the pilot is a white boy from Virginia and the navigator is a Negro, whose family lives on the South Side.

ONE OF CHICAGO'S UNSUNG HEROES, Carl Becker, will be honored at a testimonial concert at Thorne Hall on April 4. Becker is a modern Stradivarius who makes and repairs, with delicate precision, the musical instruments used by such figures as Mischa Elman, Jascha Heifetz, Isaac Stern, Nathan Milstein and Gregor Piatigorsky. None of these artists ever comes to Our Town without visiting the aging Becker. Dr. Maurice H. Cottle is chairman of the testimonial, sponsored by the Midwest Music Foundation.

THE BIGGEST NAMES in the auto industry will gather under the same roof Monday night, when the Chicago Automobile Trade Assn. celebrates its 50th anniversary at the Palmer House. Among those present will be Paul Hoffman of Studebaker, Harlow Curtice of General Motors, L. L. (Tex) Colbert of Chrysler, James Nance of Packard, Ernest Breech, executive veep of Ford, and Edgar Kaiser of Kaiser-Willys. . . . The new U.S. solicitor general, Simon E. Sobeloff, will be feted April 11 at the Morrison Hotel by the American Jewish Congress.

THIS NEW CATCHY TUNE, "Goombye, Goomba" (ah, there, Martha Raye!) caught the fancy of the Music Operators' Convention at the Palmer House. It was recorded by Tony Romano for Vito Records. Romano, a well-known accordion player, is blossoming out as a singer for the first time. He traveled the globe during World War II as a member of Bob Hope's troupe. . . . The story of Chicagoan Ben Lipsner's efforts in founding Uncle Sam's airmail service is now in the Congressional Record, thanks to Rep. Hoffman (R-Ill.) Lipsner, then an Army captain, was ordered by President Woodrow Wilson to organize what eventually became the world's first airmail system.

SPIKE JONES

PARDON A PERSONAL NOTE, but in reply to many inquiries: No, we have no association whatever with coffee grills or cafes bearing our name. (And never will have!) . . . Tommy Ferris, the Singapore's piano player and owner of the largest collection of old-time music in Chicago, surprised George Jessel the other night. He came up with a song, "My Mama's Baby Boy," which Jessel sang 'way back in 1920. . . . The popular Sam Workman obviously expects a "few pals" to show up for his 25th anniversary in business on Thursday. He's rented the grand ballroom of the Conrad Hilton for the occasion! . . . Spike Jones wires another Liberace gag: "My son, Spike Jr., has quit studying piano—he's now taking candelabra lessons!"

Dear Sir:

As a newer and younger member of the same profession, and as one of the many in the business who claim you as an alter ego, I'm breaking my vow of never writing "fan" letters long enough to send along hearty congratulations for proving that radio-TV news can and occasionally DOES have guts. Your Tuesday night program was the very peak of good, tough, and intelligent journalism. While it might have come far sooner, long before the press decided to start the ball rolling, the fact that it did come, with all stops pulled, is a cheering fact.

While I may be a bit too rash in my young age to fully appreciate expediency and practical pressures in such a controversy, I do feel that no reason at all was sufficient to justify a "hands-off" policy on the McCarthy issue for as long a time as it did. You proved it yourself Tuesday night in your masterful presentation of just how dangerous the junior senator is.

At least, the lid is now off ... the anti-McCarthy bandwagon is finally rolling ... the Senator is beginning to cook in his messy pot ... and Ed Murrow was there to light the match. I trust that in future programs, you'll never forget one of the cardinal ABC's of athletics ... after a hefty swing, never forget the follow-through. Otherwise, you lose much power and more distance.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Unfortunately, I was not able to see the telecast last night. Of course I read about it in the papers. And, of course, it was the usual combination of misrepresentation, meaningless truth and long distance conclusion jumping. But you must have expected that.

The purpose of this letter is only to add my voice to those who are offering their support in this fight. You are up against a tough antagonist as you knew when you took him on. You will face dark days ahead. He cannot afford to let you alone.

I hope and believe that CBS will back you. And I hope and believe that you will not lose your courage or your faith in the principles for which you stand.

My dear Mr. Murrow:

In our business,it is the habit to call people by their first names,or less,but after tonight's "See It Now" show,you will always be Mr. Murrow to me. Before my typewriter took me to California,I,too, roamed the Colbee-Louis & Armand-Swiss Inn range. It was my misfortune that we never met,a misfortune I am desolate about this evening.

Your broadcast on Senator McCarthy was superb. That was to be expected. After all,it was a Murrow show. What made it a giant stride in TV's coming of age, though,was that this was a sponsored show. Having labored these many years for sponsors who trembled at a line about a man slipping on a banana peel because it might alienate members of the Allied Friends of Fruit,I must also ask you to share these frenzied congratulations with Alcoa. If I ever make as much money as Mr. Hunt (R.,Texas),I will,out of sheer gratitude to them,build a bridge to Japan. All aluminum,of course.

I know that you probably will not get to see this letter,because your mail after tonight's show will be of tremendous volume,especially from the Hate Paraders. I write it gladly,anyway,for at least it will enable whichever secretary is keeping score to mark this up as a loud "aye".

Ifyby some chance,you have an autographed photograph,I should appreciate the honor of framing it and placing it on my wall. I don't want it so that visitors will mistakenly place me in your circle of friends. I want it because every once in a while,when you're agruing with your conscience,it's a great aid to look at a symbol of courage and decency,to look at the picture of a man of talent who in this moment of crisis stood up so he could be counted.

With repeated thanks for tonight's show, and for so many others in the past,I am,

Sincerely,
Jerry D. Lewis

As you see we are back in New York but no longer in broadcasting ; I have joined the Technical Assistance Administration at the UN , as interesting a job as one could wish.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Congratulations on your excellent job on "See It Now," Tuesday evening, March 9. The program is not aired in Utica and our TV set brought me only a blurred picture from Syracuse, but the sound was clear. I regard it as a major contribution to a battle in which we are all engaged.

I am sure the following is no new idea though the wording may be different. The tendency of the Liberals is to play down the reality of the Communist menace within our walls. It is certainly not as great as many fear-mongers would have us believe. However, the fact that it is played down by the Liberals provides a weapon for people like McCarthy. Isn't it time that somebody tried to do a factual story not only on the number of Communists but, so far as our knowledge permits, on the extent to which the Communist movement in America is in a position to cripple our defense effort, throw actual monkey wrenches into our industrial machine, function effectively in the event of a national emergency.

I believe that there is some such threat. I think it is a small one. But insofar as it is real, all of us as a people ought to be bending our efforts to get at it. And as we do, we undercut the opportunity for McCarthy and his ilk to lump together as Communists, fellow travelers, people who are soft on Communism, everyone who has had an idea to the left of Herbert Hoover in the last twenty years.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

May I add my compliments to your already overflowing load for the outstanding job your doing on both radio and television. I not only speak of your expose of McCarthy but the revealing news you bring a hungry American public who wants and needs the true facts.

I am very sorry that we did not meet each other while you were in Portland. Your good friend Tom Stoddard is also a friend of mine and we think alot of Tom here in Portland. He probably is the most busy man in Portland today with another duty just blessed on him as chairman of the city boxing commission.

It was my good fortunate to meet Tom Stoddard while he served as March of Dimes Chairman for Multnomah County in 1953, doing a great job. My position is that of State Representative for the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis and thus the obvious reason for my working closely with Tom.

I wonder if I could ask a favor of you personally? I would greatly appreciate an autographed photograph of yourself to hang in my office. Trust you know how why I feel compelled to have your photograph hanging in my office and will always appreciate your kind consideration in honoring my request.

Thank you kindly and may good health be with you always.

Dear Ed:

I am sorry to admit that I am one of the many thousands, perhaps millions of people, who missed your original Tuesday night television broadcast where you unpacked a bag of facts about Senator McCarthy.

The tremendously enthusiastic discussion of this broadcast on our lot makes me feel completely left out of it because I hadn't witnessed it.

May I and five other directors of this lot join our voices with the others in asking you and CBS to make a rebroadcast possible. I do not know whether your broadcast was taped or kinescoped, or whether it was on film, but we will be most appreciative if it were rebroadcast.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your telecast of last night about Senator McCarthy was a masterful job. It was discerning, well balanced and informative as well as extremely effective in helping people to think their way through the problem presented by the Junior Senator from Wisconsin. Congratulations on a great service to the American public.

I suppose that in university faculties one might expect to find more than ordinary support for a broadcast such as yours. Nevertheless, I have talked to many people this morning and all who saw you on Channel 2 last night are enthusiastic over your presentation.

The materials you have been presenting, including last night's spots from the McCarthy hearing and the situation arising over the Civil Liberties Union in Indianapolis are of course exceptionally effective teaching material. Is there any possibility that at least some of these pieces might be released as educational materials for use in school and college classrooms?

With much appreciation, I am

Dear Mr. Murrow,

My sincerest hope is that this mash note will be redundant--that it will say nothing that hasn't already been said to you in thousands of other letters you've received today.

Your "See It Now" treatment of Senator McCarthy last night was a superlative job of reporting, editing and editorializing. Bravo!

It almost pains me to say that it took courage to showcase the truth, as you did (it really should take no courage at all) but the fact is that yours was the most outspoken statement either radio, TV or the White House has ever made on the McCarthy issue.

Congratulations to you and the entire staff. It's nice to breathe again.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

This is the news!

As we say in Brooklyn - the bum we heard last night was lousy.

The only McCarthy whose Hooper rating may exceed yours, is not a Democrat, nor a Republican, but the original charter member of the 'splinter' party, named Charlie - I think his leader is a fellow called Edgar Bergen.

My friends and I heard the broadcast. They were a mixed group - political, non-political, etc. Their reactions, chronologically, were as follows:

(a) Resentment at his crude name-calling.
(b) Amazement at his talking down upon the people as though they were of kindergarten mentality.
(c) Boredom.
(d) Complete disregard of what he was saying.

The most pertinent remark was - "How did that bum ever get into the United States Senate".

Alot of people are beginning to say: "Hooray for the red, white and blue" again, instead of the - shhh white and blue.

It is my considered opinion that you should be taken seriously on the national ticket in 1956.

God spare you, bless you and may he give you renewed strength and courage to keep up the good fight for common decency and for the preservation of our great American heritage.

Very respectfully yours,

Dear Charlie:

As a rule I always see Ed Murrow's program, "See It Now," which I enjoy very much, but last night's program I enjoyed more than usual in that he covered a subject that is of so much interest to the public in general at this time, and he did it so well. He certainly showed McCarthy up in a true light and I think it should do a great deal of good with the public, at least with those people who saw it.

McCarthy is a publicity hound. He cares nothing for anybody or any party, but only for gaining publicity and notoriety for himself.

I talked with a number of people today, and those who saw it were very high in their praise of the program. Incidentally, the Gastonia Chamber of Commerce and the Rambling Rebs are sending the CBS a congratulatory telegram.

With every good wish, I am

It was journalism at its finest, vividly reported and dispassionately presented.

In an era of "more heat than light" -- your report on Senator McCarthy was a beacon that probed far, and proved what many have heretofore been reluctant to acknowledge. Dear Mr. Davis:

A rose to you, Sir, for Murrow.

It's one thing to put on a program like Tuesday night's (and there have been many others) yourself. It's quite another thing to have the courage, within the context of the present atmosphere of timidity, to risk the retaliation at the marketplace of an emotionally aroused minority in order to support something that someone else has to say.

I have long felt that the American people will reward courage rather than punish it, provided it is honest. But the majority of industrial sponsors on radio and television have not seen it that way.

Perhaps the response to Murrow's program will stiffen their backbones. This would be a significant contribution to our country's future. Without in any way detracting from Murrow, who needs no encomia, this particular contribution would have been made by you.

And I warmly echo the sentiments, except mine would be considerably more profane and infinitely less devout.

When you sailed into McCarthy, we in this business who are arbitrarily confined to straight reporting must as a man have raised our voices to shout, "at last." And certainly after walking for long with bowed head and shuffling gait -- because of you and your restrained but decisive attack -- we can again square our shoulders and hold up our heads.

Your little report last Friday very neatly turning the tables on Joe was superb.

McCarthy went in by the smallest margin of any senator with the Eisenhauer landslide; a smaller one than he carried for the previous primary. Had we had a little more time it would have been still smaller!

Dear Howard:

I can't speak for the newspaper, but as for myself and the rest of us on the staff, we thought Murrow's story of McCarthy was not only terrific but long needed.

I always catch his programs because Murrow is in a class by himself when it comes to presentation and interpretation, but his coverage of Joe was the most pungent on the subject I have heard.

It seems like Ed really took the role of a somewhat timid President should have taken to do a job millions of Americans have been crying for somebody to do.

Let's have more of it and a repeat of this one if possible.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I viewed your television program of March 9 where you successfully and ethically brought to the attention of the American people certain pertinent facts relative to Senator Joseph McCarthy's inconsistencies.

I also viewed Joseph McCarthy's program of April 6 and detected again his unethical, untruthful and un-American attack on you. I personally resent this attack because I have followed your work for many years and I know that you are an outstanding, patriotic American.

I love America; I consider that I am a good American and I shall not take a back seat to anyone relative to my patriotism. My life's record speaks for itself. I have never been afraid to speak the truth and to take a position on any issue where I had principle and facts on my side, having no fear of the ultimate consequences.

To my way of thinking, McCarthy is a menace to our country and the time is overdue for red-blooded, patriotic Americans to make it possible for all Americans to know this man for what he is before his uninformed followers increase to a number sufficient to do untold damage.

If there should be any move to raise a fund to properly expose McCarthy's un-American, unethical and demogogic actions, then I shall be pleased to make a One Thousand Dollar contribution to the fund with the understanding that I shall make an additional contribution if needed.

I wish to express my sincere appreciation for your courage in pointing out to the American people actual facts with respect to Senator McCarthy's inconsistencies.

With kindest regards and best wishes, I remain

Sincerely yours,

Dear Ed Murrow:

I would like to add my thanks and compliments to you for the now famous McCarthy show.

Aside from the usefulness of it, it was intelligently and impressively done. I think it is a commentary on the situation today that it is necessary to commend a man on his courage for speaking up for decency and truth, but unfortunately it does take courage. I hope the program is repeated.

Very truly yours,

Dear Ed:

Milo asked me to send you the enclosed copies of letters he has written for your information.

I have been conducting my own little private "Gallup poll" these last few days on the Murrow-McCarthy controversy. I have been delighted and amazed at the reaction of the maids in the hotel, the man who washes my hair, the man at the newsstand. Until you entered this mess it was a question of McCarthy against someone they didn't know -- they have not been sure that the wild charges weren't true. But they feel that they have known you for fifteen years - you have talked to them night after night. And they know out of their knowledge of you, as a friend and a fair person, that you are no Commie. Therefore, they question other assertions that they had never questioned before.

As I told Janet yesterday, you really took on an assignment when you started this and all of us are grateful to you for your courage.

Milo joins me in sending our best.

Gentlemen:

Since the Ed Murrow broadcast on McCarthy, I have heard a dozen folks praise your firm for the moral courage you showed in being a sponsor for this program.

The discussion which it has aroused throughout the country is our democratic way of developing understanding in an area where we have found it difficult as a people to be objective. Growth of this discernment is far more important to the country than what happens to Senator McCarthy. Unless we deepen our understanding another McCarthy could easily arise. If we deepen it, we shall realize a little more profoundly as a people that good ends are not reached by bad means.

May I take this chance to express my personal thanks to you.

Sincerely,

Dear Ed:

You and Alcoa and CBS are to be congratulated on the magnificent shows of the past two Tuesday nights. I hope that you will continue this documentary-type exposition of the smear technique employed by the junior Senator from Wisconsin. You are performing a service for our country by getting behind the headline copy of the newspapers which is often so misleading as to context.

Ed, I recently had occasion to read the entire text of a speech made by Dean Griswold of the Harvard Law School before (I believe) the West Massachusetts Bar Association. He made the speech in mid-February and it was reported in one of the publications of the Harvard Law School. (It was not the Harvard Law Review but rather some 4-page publication in a newspaper format.)

The subject of Dean Griswold's speech was the meaning of the Fifth Amendment. I am neither a lawyer nor a Harvard man--only an American citizen--but Dean Griswold's speech opened my eyes to the purpose of the amendment. In substance, without mentioning McCarthy by name, Dean Griswold pointed out that taking refuge in the Fifth Amendment does not, per se, condemn an individual nor should it, per se, stamp an individual as a criminal or subversive.

McCarthy has, through his charges of "Fifth Amendment Communist", in my opinion, held the Amendment up to ridicule.

I think it would make good TV copy, in your current mood(which I like) to read the Fifth Amendment to the American people...and to interpret its true meaning in the light of Dean Griswold's comments and your own broad knowledge of constitutional law. Lord save me from trying to suggest any "improvements" in SEE IT NOW; this is merely a suggestion that may have some widespread appeal to an incensed and more enlightened public which, by and large, shares my view that you should be commended for taking McCarthy to task.

May I wish you and Alcoa and CBS continued success.

Re: McCarthy

Dear Mr. Ober:

The Columbia Broadcasting System is to be congratulated on its refusal to succumb to the tirade of McCarthy in the matter of granting time to him.

Certainly, the willingness of your company to accord time to the Republican Party is evidence of a complete adherence on your part to the policies laid down by the Federal Communications Commission and a desire to be fair.

My only fear is that, under pressure from McCarthy and his influential supporters, you will reverse your position and give time not only to the Republican Party but to that vicious bully as well. For you to do this would be truly a tragedy - a further surrender of decency and democracy to demagoguery and and hate.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Now that some of the excitement and the volume of your fan mail has perhaps somewhat subsided, I should like to add my congratulations for the courageous way you have handled the "McCarthy affair." I think that he has at last bit off more than he can chew.

It was just about a year ago that you did me the honor of quoting an article of mine on your radio program. I am taking the liberty of enclosing something else I have recently written, which I am sure you will find apropos to your recent controversy with Senator McCarthy. Following his cherished principle of guilt by association, he has done his feeble best to paint you as a fellow traveler. You might find useful, therefore, the statement of Herbert Philbrick, who led "3 Lives" and has reported: "According to leaders of the Communist party, McCarthy has helped them a great deal. The kind of attacks he has made do three things that the comrades like: they add greatly to the confusion, putting up a smoke screen for the party and making it more difficult than ever for people to discern just who is a Communist and who is not; they make the party appear a lot stronger than it is; and they do considerable damage to some of the 'stupid Liberals' whom the Party hates."

The basis of my enclosure, you will note, follows this line of thought to its ultimate conclusion, indicating that Senator McCarthy may be far more a subversive than the so-called "subversives" he so vigorously attacks. I hope you find it of some use to you.

At any rate, let me once again pay my humble respects to your courageous fight; I look upon it as the beginning of the end for the junior senator from Wisconsin.

Very sincerely,

S. Grover Rich, Jr.

P. S.

The Philbrick quotation can be found in his book, though I picked it up in Anderson and May, McCarthy; The Man, The Senator, The Ism, page 244.

MC CARTHY--THE REAL SUBVERSIVE

In connection with the Army investigation recently, that much discussed Senator from Wisconsin, Joseph McCarthy, said, "If a stupid, arrogant or witless man in a position of power . . . is found aiding the Communist Party he will be exposed." Many of the Senator's opponents attribute at least some of these characteristics to McCarthy himself; if not stupid, arrogant, or witless, he is at least in a position of power, aiding the Communist party and should be exposed.

But how aiding the Communists, you ask; this is indeed an amazing accusation to make of Senator McCarthy, of all people. The answer is simple and straightforward: he is precisely what he accuses so many others of being--a subversive who is, if unwittingly, aiding our enemies. First of all, what is a subversive? As described in an elementary textbook on International Politics, "the subversive operator works to undermine the citizen's faith in his government and in his fellow citizens, to create in society an atmosphere of distrust and discouragement. . ."[1] This definition was not written with Senator McCarthy in mind, but certainly the shoe fits. Subversion is the undermining of the citizen's faith in his government and its leaders--in his church, schools, political parties, courts, the Armed Services, and the other institutions of his society. Senator McCarthy and his cohorts have attacked all of these. The Army is accused of "coddling Communists;" the chief justice of the Supreme Court has been attacked as "un-American" and holding subversive convictions; one of our two great political parties has been accused of "twenty years of treason," and the loyalty of distinguished leaders in both parties impugned; our schools and universities and educational foundations are pictured as hotbeds of subversion; the clergy has been attacked; the loyalty of the press has been questioned; respected commentators are labeled "left wing;" the United Nations is no more than a plot against the Constitution. Finally, the whole of the United States government is pictured as being riddled with spies, traitors, and "security risks." What is there left for the average citizen to believe in? There is hardly anything else to attack. No Moscow agent could have done a better job of subversion--of creating distrust in the fundamental institutions and leaders of American society than has Senator McCarthy.

The irony of all this is twofold: first, it is done in the name of Americanism, with the professed goal of exposing subversives; second, these wild accusations are classic examples of Communist propaganda techniques, for in most cases they have only the slightest relationship to the facts. It doesn't seem to matter that the American Civil Liberties Union has gone to the aid of the Ku Klux Klan (or even Senator McCarthy himself for that matter[1]); the A.C.L.U. is still attacked as a Communist front. It doesn't seem to matter that the Army found nothing relating to espionage at Fort Monmouth; that of the forty-odd Signal Corps employees called before the McCarthy committee, not one was accused of treason or espionage and not one pleaded immunity under the Fifth Amendment. The public impression is nevertheless that the Signal Corps laboratories were infested with spies and "5th amendment Communists."

During the period of the war, when most of the espionage is said to have taken place, both the government agencies accused of harboring spies, and those responsible to prevent espionage, were largely headed by distinguished Republicans. If espionage did take place, no one is more to blame than J. Edgar Hoover. The O.S.S., where accusations of espionage have been made, was headed by William Donovan. The Army was under the control of Henry L. Stimpson and the Secretary of Navy was Frank Knox. The First Secretary of Defense was James Forestal. The State Department, it is true, was under the leadership of a Democrat, but Cordell Hull was hardly less conservative than his Republican colleagues.

Yet all this is swept aside, the Democratic party is labeled as the party of treason, and the war-time climate of opinion is completely overlooked. Yet would things have been any different had the Republicans been in office? Wendell Willkie, their candidate in 1944, defended Communists before the Supreme Court. Governor Dewey won the 1948 nomination from his major contender largely because of their public debate in Oregon during the primaries, when Dewey argued that the Communist party should not be outlawed.

We may take humorous delight in painting Senator McCarthy as a subversive, and it seems no more than just retribution. Yet to those who see the real significance of McCarthyism, the issue has a deeper meaning. Can any honest critic, granted his patriotism, be called "subversive" in a truly democratic society? We must renew our recognition that society is kept stable and healthy by reform, not by thought police. This, in turn, calls for the vigorous free play of so-called "subversive" ideas, for every idea subverts the old to make way for the new. To prevent "subversion" is to prevent peaceful progress. The key to the success of the American way--so vociferously championed by the Senator and his supporters--is to be found in the constant and vigorous "subversion" permissible only in a democracy.

Here lies the real danger of McCarthyism. It is regrettable but in the long run not too important that the Senator has attacked the Army or the State Department. But in stifling the free flow of ideas and the vigorous conflict of opinion--the real American way--Senator Mc Carthy is destroying the very essence of democracy. This is the real subversion.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I believe Pat Malin has been in touch with you to express the ACLU's official thanks for your splendid program last Tuesday evening, but I wanted to add my personal appreciation for your magnificent service. It was a truly stimulating evening, one that made me feel proud of the way in which the television medium could be used to educate public opinion on crucially important issues. But, the medium would be nothing without the courage of people like you and Fred Friendly who, believing strongly in their convictions, have the courage to express them. When this whole episode of demagoguery is passed, the American public will properly remember your contribution to restoring reason and sanity to our national life.

Dear Sir:

I am quite sure that your evaluation of Macarthy was not due to any desire on your part to suddenly become the father image of a hopeful America....but there you are pop....in the wonderful and painful tradition of the man who dared speak first, for the millions who were either inarticulate or plan scared.

Last night, we saw the result of your gallant gesture to allow the junior Senator a chance to rebutt. He rebutted in the shape of the swastika and a black wind is now ripping across our country. I read your statement in answer to Macarthy's filmed address. As a member of your family, I take it upon myself to make a number of suggestions which perhaps you have already thought about and even resolved. If resolution is the case, then know that we who believe in your esential truth, versus his essential lie are standing by to march with you and to assert with you our faith in an America that he would stifle.

You speak with the gentle rule and the concept of the Scout who above all cherishes honor. To cherish honor to the point where one avoids the direct blow to blow contact with the enemy is to almost chance the defeat of the honor itself. Our world too often does not listen to wisdom, but to sounds that are calculated to arouse emotional mayhem.

While it is true that the intellectual liberal will nod sagely and agree profoundly with your words and thoughts...the average man, taken in by the big lie and the Orwell extravaganza, hears only that which either touches his imagination, or corroborates what he falsely believes to be the facts.

In your response to Macarthy's...Laski attack you stated that Laski was a friend who was dead, and a Socialist. You ignored the vicious statement of Macarthy that Laski is a noted Communist leader. Too many Americans will only remember that Macarthy was right, and that you only attempted to qualify Mr. Laski's negative political premise by swinging from Socialist defense rather than by the direct statement that Macarthy is a liar...and that Laski was a profound anti-Communist!

Macarthy must be blasted in the manner that he attacks. Not with the lie, but with the same energy and belief. Not with the distortion, but certainly in a manner that shows the detirmined fist behind the not too polite word. We can continue to genuflect and observe in the new egg head tradition, and find our egg heads beaten in by the man who uses only the club.

I have written, and telegrammed CBS and Alcoa and am encouraging hosts of others to do so. I believe sadly that Macarthy will have rallied his followers to an attack against you and CBS and probably Alcoa. We must rally back in return. So...pop....pull the ships out of their moth balls....please push decorum slightly to the rear and demonstrate that it is worth getting mad for the sake of America....for I do believe that unless this menace is halted now.... we are moving into an age that spells wave man for our country.

Sincerely,

Mutter Robertson

Dear Ed,

Congratulations on your superb broadcast this evening during which I had the great pleasure of hearing you take apart and expose that not-so-shining luminary of the Senate, Joe McCarthy.

It was a splendid job.

Very sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Under separate cover I am mailing you a copy of our 150th anniversary issue of The Churchman, which perhaps you would like to see. If you want a quiet laugh in an unlaughable world of the moment, I suspect you would get it from the piece, "Happy Birthday," by Halford E. Luccock of Yale Divinity School.

I have been intending to add my word of very genuine congratulation on the thrilling job you have been doing. Would that there were more to "go and do likewise!" I have no doubt that you have inspired many who would wish to do so.

My pleasant evening with you and Mrs. Murrow in London in the autumn of 1943 I still remember joyfully--including the salted nuts from home!

With gratitude for your prophetic job in an unprophetic day, and with warm good wishes,

Cordially yours,

Dear Ed,

I have just finished watching this evening's "See It Now." Congratulations! You and the whole program were excellent — most effective. The combination of Al Rosenthal, the Bishop and your reply was, it seemed to me, perfect. And as I write this, the 11 o'clock news on the local station here includes your new award for "See It Now", immediately followed by a personal appearance by Hall of Alcoa to say how proud the sponsor is of the program, "presented as a public service." Such timing!

Dear Ed:

I am not accustomed to writing letters to senators, representatives, presidents, public figures - either to pat them on the back or to aim a little lower.

However, I felt that I had an obligation to write you in connection with your McCarthy broadcast and the senator's answer. This is simply by way of a vote of confidence in you and what you stand for and a vote against the senator's tactics of answering an argument by attacking the character of his opponent.

I realize that this letter comes a little late, but this is one case where I thought better late than silent.

Dear Ed,

This is a just a note to tell you I've been keeping up with your radio broadcasts (we don't have T-V) and that I am happy for the recognition that continues to come your way. I'm increasingly disturbed over the ponderousness of the current hearings in the Army-McCarthy affair, and I've been wondering what has happened to Senator Dirksen's "oilcan" that he referred to some months ago.

I'm still at Bennington College and still enjoying it very much. I'm on sabbatical leave this semestre and have had time to do some leisurely thinking, which is an important aspect of the teaching life. I'll probably not be any brighter when I return in September, but my general perspective may be in better shape.

Please give my best to Janet and Casey. Your young man must be quite big by now. Ours has been in the Navy for three years and has about one more to go. He droppped out of college (Colby) to enlist and, while he now feels it was a good idea, this last one is apparently the toughest from the standpoint of his impatience to start living a "normal life".

All the best to you, personally and professionally. I've been ever so reluctant to intrude upon your busy life and the leisure which must be very precious to you whenever you have it. Nevertheless, I can't help dropping this note to remind you I'm still very much "in your corner".

Just a brief note to add to the many thousands of messages that you have had in support of and admiration for your position on the Senator from Wisconsin.

As you have said so often, it is a tragedy that time and resources of so many Government and private groups have had to be concerned with McCarthy. Unfortunately, however, all that we are trying to do in the main effort can be destroyed unless leaders like yourself speak out as you have done.

All the words that could be drawn on in admiration and support of your two McCarthy broadcasts have been pretty well used up by now. All I can say is that still another individual subscribes to them.

I would only like to add, as a company employee, that every once in a while something happens at CBS that makes me a little chesty about saying I work here, if anybody asks me. This is such an occasion.

You are right that we are not descended from fearful men, a fact which makes more regretable the undercurrent of apprehensiveness which seems to have crept into private as well as public utterance, thinking, action. There is an all too common feeling today that blessed are the non-controversial, for they shall inherit tranquility, no matter who inherits the earth. It is not presumptuous for me, as a listener, to say that you have made an inspiring contribution, by example as well as by word, toward reversing this trend. I think there is rejoicing in whatever heaven Heywood Broun and the other great journalists of the past have gone to. Best wishes.

This copy of a letter sent to President Eisenhower on February 10 has in it the proof that we are on the same side. This you know without such evidence, but perhaps not the basic fact that in my twenty years with the Rockefeller Foundation no one was more highly regarded than you by everyone in that organization.

If the letter can be useful in any way, you are free to use it. I am sending it as a sign that a lot of people are counting on you to speak for them.

Since leaving New York for Wisconsin, I have worked each winter in libraries on this coast or in New York City. This Harper circular shows what I have been doing. I wish there were more effective action possible toward the repair of losses in political affairs rather than in higher education.

Dear Mr. President:

Two news items of this week call for durable criticism. I believe that nothing can overrule the truth in them, and that the American people are asking how these two facts appear in the same source - this administration, ours as well as yours.

Your talk on religion in national life is the first item. The second is the press conference last night faced by Senator McCarthy.

The clipping bureau will supply the evidence on these points: that he is contemptuous of due process of law, as shown in his answers to Paul Price; that he uses tactics that are without honor toward the individual and toward the welfare of this country; and that the Republican organization using him as a weapon cannot faintly know the harm being done by their tactics, provided they look into the future of this nation at all.

People do not despair of the future of this administration, but as these methods continue they will come to despise it.

Most sincerely,

What is the function of the humanities in contemporary education, and how can they be taught and utilized to best serve the needs of our changing world?

Here, at last, is a forthright and convincing plea for greater emphasis on the study of the humanities in our colleges today. In this timely new volume, a life-long scholar and spokesman for the humanities presents a powerful analysis of their important role in contemporary society...

THE CHANGING HUMANITIES
An Appraisal of Old Values and New Uses

By David H. Stevens
Former Director for the Humanities, The Rockefeller Foundation

This inspiring book describes the value of increased study and research in the humanities - language, literature, history and philosophy. The author discusses this point of view not only as a means to maintain the liberal tradition in our country, but as a way to establish greater understanding among the nations of the world.

Dr. Stevens suggests methods for teachers and administrators to strengthen college curricula -- to reestablish a more equitable relationship between liberal arts courses and the scientific disciplines, so heavily emphasized in recent years. In clear and concise terms, he provides insight and information on how to teach humanistic studies - how to maintain a proper balance of studies among the several humanities - and how to create a working interplay of research, teaching, and interpretation dealing with the personal values in life.

All college teachers will find THE CHANGING HUMANITIES of great help in their grasp of the teacher's role. It analyzes such important questions as:

- How have methods of teaching the humanities changed over the past fifty years?
- What are the possibilities for creating a greater and more integrated role for humanistic studies in the college curriculum?
- What is the best way to teach survey courses to fulfill their purpose of orienting students to the various humanist subjects?
- What are the special problems involved in teaching such subjects as art history, literary criticism, music theory and composition?
- Which areas of humanist studies are most important to our future as a nation with increasing international obligations?
- How can the professional humanist cooperate most profitably with the social scientist and the physical scientist?

(over, please)

In praise of this outstanding book...

"This is an encouraging book...there is much here of interest for teachers...for librarians, for young people hesitating before the call to make scholarship the business of their lives, and for the general reader who cares about freedom of thought and the supreme worth of individual experience."

--Nathan M. Pusey
President of Harvard University

"'The Changing Humanities' is as significant for noble evaluations and wise observations as for a vast and ordered outlay of fact--kept always in perspective."

--J. Frank Dobie, Author and Teacher

"Every foundation officer ought to sleep with a copy of 'The Changing Humanities' at his bed's head and contemplate it prayerfully before making his next grant."

--Louis B. Wright, Director
The Folger Shakespeare Library

"'The Changing Humanities' is an impressive demonstration of the continuing vitality of the humanistic idea in American education during the past half century...There is a philosophy of education in this book. And a lot of practical wisdom which suggests agenda for the humanities during the next half century."

--Professor Charles W. Hendel
Dept. of Philosophy, Yale Univ.

An appraisal of the past and a guide to the future role of the humanities...

THE CHANGING HUMANITIES gives you a brilliant survey of changing attitudes toward humanistic studies in American universities during the past fifty years, and goes on to point up their new importance in furthering the liberal tradition. Here is a most valuable book for all educators who believe in the importance and value of inspired study of languages, history, philosophy and literature. Take advantage of our offer...

You have made us proud of American telecasting. It has been an old device of Der Wisconsin Fuhrer to hold up documents, none of which were impounded and examined as to their accuracy. In last night's telecast this phoney business was made possible by Low Blow Joe's having his job filmed off-station. Certainly you are going to demand that he produce his "exhibits".

This son of a bitch may have to be shot yet. America is bigger than this agent of evil who, alas, plays up his Catholicism. As Steve Mitchell so well says, "he can't transfer his character to my church".

Dear Ed;

I was so moved on Tuesday night by your last statement on "See It Now" that I wanted to rush from the room and let my tears flow as they would, but my neighbors let me say what I felt and agreed that you were superb and without a doubt our biggest hope of deflating the influence of that rattlesnake McCarthy.

I have been writing far afield on the campaign to congratulate Alcoa in Pittsburg- yes, from Mass. to Ky. and Vt. to Oregon and I am sure we will get results. One southerner wrote me that I was not to worry as soon everybody would agree that McCarthy was and - quote-"Nothing but low-down pig-sty shanty Irish. I loved thatone.

Now I am planning ways and means to help our one Woman Sen. stay in Washington as it seems she is to be his next target and that is just a pity. I shall of course do this sub-rosa as Yankees resent outside influence as much as do southerners-- but we will get that guy yet-- all those of us who lived in Europe and watched the rise to power of those insidious dictators- who have wrecked the world. I cannot begin to tell you how proud I am of you and your enormous courage.

I hope you have time to see my good friend and neighbor Gus Simons. His wife is a beautiful Canadian and my close friend- her grandfather was chancelor of McGill Univ. All the best to you and Janet and Casey--

Foreword

TO COMMEMORATE Ohio's 150th Anniversary, the Trustees of The Martha Kinney Cooper Ohioana Library Association directed the preparation of an Ohioana Sesquicentennial Medal and designated that it be awarded to James Thurber, native Ohioan, in recognition of his distinctive contributions in the field of art and literature and in appreciation of the prestige he has brought to Ohio.

Ohioana's distinctive ceramic Medal (designed by Paul Bogatay) was superimposed on an illuminated field (executed by Mark Russell)—to form the Sesquicentennial Medal.

To his own, and the Association's, great disappointment, Mr. Thurber was unable to attend the presentation ceremony at the Annual Meeting in Columbus on October 24, 1953, owing to the illness of his beloved wife. Mr. George A. Smallsreed, Sr., Editor of The Columbus Dispatch, life-long friend and associate of Mr. Thurber, received the award and read the noted humorist's message of acceptance.

The Association is indebted to The World Publishing Company and its president, Mr. Ben D. Zevin, who designed and printed this booklet, for the welcome opportunity to give timely circulation to a master's appraisal of humor in the world of today.

Introduction

ABOUT THIRTY-FIVE years ago it was my good fortune to begin working for The Dispatch with Jim Thurber. We came there about the same time.

I can still see him hunched over his typewriter pounding out stories for what was then the feature section of the Sunday Dispatch.

Thurber wrote pieces that were strange to the city editor, the late Norman Kuehner, whom Thurber recently celebrated in one of his matchless pieces in The New Yorker.

Quite often the city editor tore these pieces up and threw them in the waste basket, much to the chagrin of young author Thurber.

But time moved on and so did this young and unassuming genius. But he kept on writing the same kind of pieces that eventually made him famous.

So it is perhaps providential, if not co-incidental, that I, his early associate, should have the privilege of representing Jim Thurber here today in his moment of great honor. Appropriately, it comes from the people and the place that he loves so deeply.

And now to speak for Jim:

THURBER RESPONSE

TO HIS AWARD OF THE OHIOANA

SESQUICENTENNIAL MEDAL

IT IS A great moment for an Ohio writer living far from home when he realizes he has not been forgotten by the state he can't forget. He is especially happy to be so signally honored by a distinguished organization devoted to putting books on shelves instead of taking them off. The writer of humorous pieces has so much fun producing his output, as Bob Ryder called it, that he doesn't always regard it as work, and he is likely to be surprised if it is singled out for an award. He is used to being laughed at, he hopes to be laughed with, but he doesn't expect to be taken seriously, although he likes to believe Booth Tarkington was exaggerating when he said, "Sobersides looks at humor the way a duchess looks at bugs." At the same time he is proud of his trade, in spite of his moments of depression when he is convinced that he is read only by duchesses. I have heard from duchesses who suggest that I quit harping on the imaginary flaws of the American Woman and start writing a novel about her true power and glory. I reply that I may try to write such a novel—when my spirit has been broken by the American Woman's power, or transfigured by her glory.

Meanwhile, as my publishers know, I couldn't do without her. Somebody has said that Woman's place is in the wrong. That's fine. What the wrong needs is a woman's presence and a woman's touch. She is far better equipped than men to set it right. The condescending male, in his pride of strength, likes to think of the female as being "soft, soft as snow," but just wait till he gets hit by the snowball. Almost any century now Woman may lose her patience with black politics and red war and let fly. I wish I could be on earth then to witness the saving of our self-destructive species by its greatest creative force. If I have sometimes seemed to make fun of Woman, I assure you it has only been for the purpose of egging her on.

A woman practitioner of humor announced a few years ago, in an hour of despair, that humor is a shield and not a weapon. Well, the world has plenty of weapons and it can use a few shields. There used to be men among us who could brandish the shield of humor with telling effect in the now sensitive area of politics and government, giving certain Senators and Congressmen of their time a pretty good banging around. I mean such men, to name only a few, as the H. L. Mencken of an earlier and bolder day, and the late Will Rogers, and William Allen White, and old Ed Howe, and our own unforgettable Bob Ryder. The gentle heart, thank God, is often armored in toughness, courage, and strength. The tradition of rugged and unafraid humor perpetuated by these men must not be allowed to pass into legend and limbo, out of fear and trembling. They did not invent the tradition, of course. It came over in the Mayflower, it flourished in the free American soil, it was carried westward in covered wagons, it was borne upon our battlefields as bright and inspiring as regimental colors. It has been seasick, wagon-weary, and shot full of holes, but it has always managed to keep on going.

As a matter of fact, comedy, in all its forms, including the rusty art of political satire, is used to surviving eras of stress and strain, even of fear and trembling, but it sickens in the weather of intimidation and suppression, and such a sickness could infect a whole nation. The only rules comedy can tolerate are those of taste, and the only limitations those of libel. It should be as free and respected as Lincoln's humor or Churchill's wit. It must not be mistaken for, or identified with, a man's political views, or punished for his political past. It will not bear up long under mindless picketing. We must not have guilt by talent, or guilt by profession. There has been so much banning and burning and branding that timorous writers have begun to think of writing as somehow akin to counterfeiting or forgery. One distinguished writer of comedy is reported to have promised a sub-committee of Congress that, to make up for past associations, he was going to write an anti-Communist musical comedy. Humor should never take the form of penance or of penitence. Since the nature of humor is anti-communistic, just as the nature of Communism is anti-humor, such a project would amount, in effect, to an anti-humorous musical comedy. This would be too dull and awful to contemplate, let alone to attend. I would have to be dragged to it. Our comedy should deal, in its own immemorial manner, with the American scene and the American people, without fear or favor, without guilt or groveling. There is no other form up with which, to paraphrase Sir Winston, we will ever put. Most professional writers, by the way, are happy that the Nobel prize has gone to a professional writer who says things any damned way he wants to. The thunder of his prose and the lightning of his wit have done much to clear the air for us and to illumine the way.

Let us not forget the uses of laughter or store them away in the attic. If a thing cannot endure laughter, Professor Joe Taylor used to say, it is not a good thing. He made us understand that laughter is never out of date or out of place. Dangerous men, he once said, are nourished as much by attack as they are by praise. It magnifies their importance, builds them a stately mansion on the front page, and dignifies their meanest motives and their merest shenanigans. Laughter, on the other hand, is often their undoing. It shows them up in a clear and honest light, and drives away the big distorted shadows in which they love to lurk. Many of the perils they flaunt in the shadows are real perils, but they can be dealt with better in the light. Laughter could bring many things out into the open including, I should like to put in here, the true shape and purpose of our Bill of Rights. It was designed as a fortress and a sanctuary, not as a hideout.

I have no doubt that there are a few conspiratorial writers around, but all the writers I know personally would make very incompetent conspirators. They like to do things in public, not in secret. They want everybody to know what they are up to. The night that Alexander Woollcott was fatally stricken with a heart attack he was engaged in what E. B. White described as a "public brawl", by which he meant a radio discussion panel over a nation-wide network. An elderly writer I know, a man about ten years older than I am, recently entered a New York hospital for a check-up under an assumed name. The day after he came in he asked his nurse why nobody had telephoned or sent wires and she reminded him that he had quietly entered the hospital under a pseudonym. "I know that," he said irritably, "but I thought everybody would find it out."

Some frightened sponsors and radio stations and other well-known pussycats have shown, from time to time, a phobia against anyone who has become what is known as a "controversial figure." This stupidity has struck at writers who, in this controversial country, have always been controversial persons. A controversial figure is apparently a controversial person who is not afraid to let his views be known outside his own living room. Discussion in America means dissent. We love to disagree with persons whose opinions we value, for how else are we going to make them value ours? One writer I know and admire was recently told by his doctors to give up coffee and controversy. He replied that he couldn't live without coffee and couldn't make a living without controversy. He might have said, with equal truth, that he couldn't live without coffee and wouldn't want to live without controversy. It is possible that this strange and unbecoming hush-hush which seems to have overtaken us is in some way responsible for the decline of humor in America. At any rate, humor flourished in the free and untrammeled Twenties when, as the late Harold Ross once put it, humorists were a dime a dozen. There are not many left, alas, and only a handful coming up. I hope that literary humor, by which

I mean humor written for newspaper, magazine and book publication, is not dying out in the United States. It has a long and honorable tradition, but it is hanging on by aging fingertips and it needs new recruits. E. B. White once wrote, ". . . humorous writing, like poetical writing, has an extra content. It plays, like an active child, close to the big hot fire which is Truth." The devoted writer of humor will continue to try to come as close to truth as he can, even if he gets burned in the process, but I don't think he will get too badly burned. His faith in the good will, the soundness, and the sense of humor of his countrymen will always serve as his asbestos curtain.

I cannot conclude without expressing my deep and lasting appreciation of the honor that has been bestowed upon me today, and my regret at not being able to be present in person. I know, however, that I could not have said these things as well as they have been said for me by one of my closest and most cherished friends. My only other regret is that my mother couldn't attend this meeting, for without her I never would have been able to write what I have managed to write. One of my friends who heard my mother tell stories one evening a few years ago when she visited me in Connecticut, said, "Your humor is only a pale reflection of your mother's, but if you keep at it you might be almost as good as she is some day." This fond and wistful hope, I need not say, is one of the things that keeps me going and will keep me going.

I have lived in the East for nearly thirty years now, but many of my books prove that I am never very far away from Ohio in my thoughts, and that the clocks that strike in my dreams are often the clocks of Columbus. They have never struck, and never will strike, a finer hour for me than this one.

Dear Ed :

I'm about to shove off on a sorely needed holiday in Nassau. But I must needs pause to cry bravo for your brilliantly shrewd and effective assault on McCarthy....

The timing was right and perhaps the low cunning of the man will profit him not this time. But it takes following up. Barry Gray is in there slugging. If more follows,he may be swept into the slime from which he sprung. McCarthy that is,not Barry ! I think you may have set off the chain reaction that is needed..... I propose to light many little candles to that thesis!...

If now McCarthy's outright venality and corruption in financial matters can be exposed on the floor of the Senate itself,that would really do the trick. Maybe Flanders is the boy for the job,or Jack Javits in the House.... I'll be with the latter next week and will try to put him up to it...

In the meantime,God bless you,Ed !

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I hope very much that you will, on the advice of appropriate legal counsel, bring a libel suit against Senator Joseph McCarthy who, I think, has proved beyond question that he is a liar, a man totally devoid of any sense of fairness or fair judgment, and a disgrace to the American Senate. Your own position in the esteem of all Americans who can think at all rises higher and higher.

Dear Ed:

I suppose one could say "Better late than never." But I have been intending to write to you for some time to tell you what a fine job you did in cutting McCarthy down to size in your recent programs. Congratulations! Keep up the good work!

You realize, of course, even better than I do how much intelligent people regret the antics of the small group of our citizens who, led by Senator McCarthy, are trying to destroy the very essentials on which our democracy was founded and substitute a "police state." Perhaps we are right in believing that McCarthy has finally gone too far and pulled the noose around his neck. His tilt with the Army may do the trick. I sincerely hope so. The verdict should soon be in.

It has been a long time since I have had the privilege of visiting with you. Are you to attend the Ohio Institute, April 7-10? If so, I do want to see you at that time.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am enthusiastic about a number of things in connection with your appraisals of the Junior Senator from Wisconsin. First, that your sponsor has had the courage to give you free rein in this matter. Second, that the Columbia Broadcasting System has been willing to stand up and be counted. And finally, that you made up your mind that something had to be done in the situation. Your action has served to put a little courage in some men in high places. Thank you for a most significant contribution to American democracy.

Dear Dr. Wells:

Attached to this letter you will find the March 19,1954 issue of COUNTER ATTACK volume 8 # 12 and a copy of a letter from the Aluminum Company of America dated March 19,1954. Counter Attack states: " No radio or TV commentator has received as much praise from the Communist Party (CP) press....." And I quote from the letter: " There is no commentator who has received so much recognition for his fair treatment of the news as has Mr. Murrow....." .

It is interesting to note the first sentence of the first paragraph of COUNTER ATTACK and the first sentence of the third paragraph of the Aluminum Company of America letter.

As a Director of Freedoms Foundation I have received a number of communications which apparently originated as a result of the third paragraph of the Aluminum Company of America letter. That these should be sent to me is entirely logical as both my husband and I have been engaged in fighting Communism and preserving the American way of life.

It is my impression that a Freedoms Foundation Award should only be made to an individual whose loyalty and patriotism is unquestioned. Otherwise those to whom these awards mean so much might think considerably less of the honor. For obvious reasons we cannot make awards to all who should be recognized. But it is my considered opinion that great care should be exercised in screening those whom we wish to honor if honor it should be.

It is incredible that a man who has so consistantly supported leftist views, defended proven traitors and falsely accused worthy Americans should be selected for a Freedoms Foundation Award.

As a Director of Freedoms Foundation I hereby wish to go on record that I am wholeheartedly opposed to the award made to the Aluminum Company of America and Edward R. Murrow for the program " SEE IT NOW ".

It is because I believe in the stated purposes of Freedoms Foundation that I feel proud and honored to serve with so many distinguished Americans on the Board of Directors. However, if we are to preserve the prestige and integrity of Freedoms Foundation and its Directors we must not only state our high ideals, we must apply them .

Let us therefore be careful in the Future lest we bring discredit to ourselves and to those whom we regard.

Sincerely,

Lucile E. Vogeler.(Mrs. Robert A.)

Dear Ed:

As I told you on the phone one day in Washington D.C., I have listened to you for years andshall never forget the first day from Vienna when Hitler was rolling over Austria and I heard your voice from there. Now, at five p.m. on week days I hear you as dinner hour is nearing here in the west. I am always interested in what you have to say, becausee Illike your analysis of the subject at hand and the manner presented. Many are the times that Lou and I have thought that we would drop you a note and say that we are listeners and watchers but it takes a furor to make old friends write, I do believe.

Lou and I were away and did not see your March 9th program and have regretted it muchly, but of course read of it and so we were here at home last nite to watch and see what Mc had to say in rebuttal. We both agreed that he said a lot of words and he did a lot of quoting from articles, but he did not say anything tangible really. When he was all through, one could not quote anything of great importance that he said. It was not a sound argument at all. Mc has probably done some good with his committee and has found some communists that we have gotten rid of but I am sure that he has served his usefullness and the day has come long ago when he is doing our country harm, because of what the rest of the world is led to believe, if for no other reason. And he certainly is a thorn in Mr. Eisenhower's side and has been ever since election. So, anyway, we are not followers of Mc's viewpoints and his ruggedness with people.

Am certain that in your business as a news man for these past twenty years, that you have had a lot of good fights, but perhaps have never gotten into one of such national magnitude before. We just will keep on listening and watching and are assured that you will show the man up in his worst light. Lou and I can remember about your going to Europe that first time and your qualifications that made you be one to be selected and we are sorry that with your success thru these years, that you have a man talking about you in this manner, inferring that you are not what you are. We know that you are a good Washingtonian and I have a hunch that you lean toward the Democratic party, but maybe I am putting words in your mouth from listening to you, and that is of no importance at all. Just hope that you and CBS keep after it and come out victorious, Ed.

Lou has made several trips east, but was always so busy with his work in one of the subsidiaries of Standard Oil Co. back there that he does not get to call people, and of course you are as busy. I was back with him for two months again a year ago this past winter. When your travels should lead you to San Francisco some time in the future, do call us and come out and see us, as we would enjoy visiting with you. Lyle Keith gets here fairly often and we have awfully good times together and are very fond of his wife, Peggy.

This is just a note to say that we are very interested and we are on your side in this issue and we know that you are a very good American. Best wishes to you, Ed, for the coming Easter season.

Always,

Lou and Denise

Dear Ed:

THIS -- is not the news; it is fan mail. Reports reach me that the quantity of fan mail which you receive is very great -- but that the quality is uniformly inadequate particularly as it is non-potable.

My intelligence source in Paris -- one Schonbrun of CBS, initials which now stand for the Communist Broadcasting System -- reports that there is one Murrow weakness which the kind and good Senator from Wisconsin has not yet exposed on TV. This weakness is for Hennessey. Accordingly, as my contribution to the fan mail I transported from Paris the liquid message sent herewith. While this cognac is obviously not needed to sustain the Murrow courage, I trust that it may prove useful for the Murrow relaxation -- if he ever relaxes. At least it is a symbol of admiration and friendship.

As it occurs to me that you may at the present time have one or two other things to do, please do not bother to acknowledge either this note or the liquid.

REVULSION AGAINST M

From ALISTAIR

NEW YORK, MARCH 12.

SENATOR JOSEPH MCCARTHY was all over the front pages again this morning, but the instinct that put him there was for once not his. It looked as if an impulse of moral revulsion had galvanised the country and braced the backbone of an incongruous variety of his victims. The Department of the Army, a middle-aged coloured woman, the spectators at a session of the Senate's permanent subcommittee on investigations, two Democratic senators, and a suddenly blithe host of columnists and radio critics were moved to furious protest at the senator's tactics and his stature.

The Army published a long report, which documented in shocking details the threats of the young Mr Roy Cohn, McCarthy's chief counsel, to "wreck the Army" and break Secretary Stevens if David Schine, a McCarthy investigator, was not given consistently preferential treatment after he had been drafted into the Army as a private.

The report told how Senator McCarthy had directly approached the Army's chief legal counsel to seek a commission for Private Schine, how the Army found him unqualified to receive one, how Senator McCarthy and Mr Cohn then demanded that Schine be assigned to New York, in order to study "evidence of pro-Communist leanings in West Point textbooks," and how this request was also refused; how, when the Army told Mr Cohn that after Private Schine had finished his basic training the chances were nine to one that he would be sent overseas, this provoked in Mr Cohn the threat to wreck the Army and make sure that Mr Stevens would be "through" as Secretary of the Army.

The Army insisted at one point that a policy of special treatment for any Army private was not in the national interest, whereupon Mr Cohn, who is all of 27, told the Army he would give it "a little national interest" by showing it up in public "in its worst light."

The report listed the many occasions on which Private Schine was given special passes to come to New York, supposedly on the subcommittee's business. Last December the commanding General of his camp complained to the Army's legal counsel that Private Schine was "becoming increasingly difficult because the soldier was leaving the post nearly every night," and usually returning "very late at night." The day after this warning Senator McCarthy told the Army that he was no longer interested in having special treatment for Private Schine. But apparently Mr Cohn was furious and told the Army's counsel that he would show him "what it meant to go over his head." Six weeks later the battle to have Private Schine assigned to New York was still going on and Senator McCarthy warned the Army's counsel of the consequences of thwarting young Mr Cohn.

Two weeks later Senator McCarthy told an assistant to telephone the Army's counsel that he was very angry about the honourable discharge granted to a New York dentist who had claimed his privilege not to answer questions about past associations. Ten days after that General Zwicker, the commanding officer of the dentist's former Army camp, was called to testify before the McCarthy subcommittee. And that, as all the world now knows, was the guerrilla episode that led to the famous "memorandum of understanding," or as some say the terms of surrender, between the Army of the United States and Senator McCarthy.

Inevitably there was standing room only in Washington yesterday when the subcommittee called Mrs Annie Lee Moss, a middle-aged coloured woman, who was suspended by the Army Signal Corps after Senator McCarthy had described her as a "code clerk" whose "Communist record" was known to the Army. Mrs Moss was a cafeteria worker who quietly told the subcommittee yesterday that she had never been in a code room in her life. Mr Cohn tried to establish her personal connection with a staff member of the "Daily Worker" but it turned out that the man she knew was a coloured man who happened to have the same name.

The audience was uncommonly ready with applause for Democratic committee members, and Mrs Moss's lawyer, whenever they protested at the tactics of Mr Cohn. At one point Senator Stuart Symington, Democrat of Missouri, asked if she knew who Karl Marx was. "Who's that?" she gravely asked and the crowd laughed itself silly.

When she finished her testimony and stepped down from the stand Senator Symington leaned into his microphone and angrily cried: "I may be sticking my neck out but I think you are telling the truth. And if you're not taken back in your Army job, you come around and see me. I am going to see that you get a job."

Senator McCarthy was mercifully absent from these rebellious proceedings because he was busy composing a broadcast reply to Adlai Stevenson's condemnation of him at Miami last Saturday, to the first outright attack made on him by a Republican Senator, Ralph Flanders of Vermont, and to a trenchant analysis of his methods televised to a national audience last Tuesday night by the celebrated American commentator, Edward R. Murrow, and sponsored by the Aluminum Corporation of America.

Senator Flanders on Tuesday vindicated the honour of the Republican party on the floor of the Senate by suddenly putting the rhetorical question: "What party does he belong to? One must conclude that his is a one-man party, and that its name is McCarthyism, a title which he has proudly accepted."

Senator Flanders then launched into the first open attack on McCarthy by a Republican in this session of Congress. He said that McCarthy was diverting the attention of the nation away from "dangerous problems" abroad and that he was "doing his best . . . by intention or through ignorance to shatter the Republican party."

McCARTHY'S METHODS

IR COOKE

Next day President Eisenhower sent a letter of commendation to Senator Flanders and told his news conference that the senator had done the country "a service" by calling attention to 'the danger of us engaging in internecine warfare and magnifying certain items of procedure and right and personal aggrandizement."

But it may be that the spark which has set off this fiery and so righteous explosion of popular indignation was laid, with deliberate courage, by Mr Murrow. He came to great fame in this country during the war through his broadcasts from London. He is a tireless news reporter and, in his weekly television dramatisation of the news, a consummate showman.

Last Tuesday night Mr Murrow gave over his whole half-hour to a pictorial analysis of "McCarthyism" by projecting visual excerpts from the senator's speeches and sessions in the chair of his subcommittee It was McCarthy exposed by McCarthy, and Mr Murrow added only the sparest narrative comment But at the end, after the huge audience for this programme had seen McCarthy merciless, McCarthy gay, McCarthy cunning, McCarthy sentimental, Mr Murrow looked his audience in the eye and ended with these words:

"This is no time for men who oppose Senator McCarthy's methods to keep silent. Or for those who approve. We can deny our heritage and our history but we cannot escape responsibility for the result. There is no way for a citizen of the Republic to abdicate his responsibilities.

"As a nation we have come into our full inheritance at an early age We proclaim ourselves—as indeed we are—the defenders of the free world or what's left of it We cannot defend freedom abroad by deserting it at home

"The actions of the junior Senator from Wisconsin have caused alarm and dismay among our allies abroad and given comfort to our enemies. And whose fault is that? Not really his He didn't create the situation of fear, merely exploited it, and skilfully Cassius was right: 'The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars but in ourselves.'"

These words were spoken with the blessing of the Aluminum Corporation of America, which has obviously a lot to lose by taking this stand. The response, however, of televiewers across the country has been a stunning endorsement of Murrow's courage. So far the comments, by telephone, telegram, and letter, are running about fifteen to one in Murrow's favour.

Hence the surprising rally of candour in public men who have stayed astutely silent for five years Hence President Eisenhower's relieved approval of Senator Flanders. Hence a morning chorus of suddenly uninhibited newspaper columnists praising Murrow for 'laying it on the line." Hence the confident laughter of the big audience at yesterday's subcommittee hearing. Hence the delayed righteousness of Senator Symington, of Missouri.

Mr Murrow may yet make bravery fashionable

Dear Ed Murrow:

Senator McCarthy's attitude and delivery last night put him square in the category of the minister whose sermon Coolidge reported to Mrs. Coolidge. She had been suffering with a cold and could not go to church that Sunday but she asked her husband for the subject of the morning sermon.

"Talked about sin," replied the President.
"What about it?" asked Mrs. Coolidge.
" He was agin it". said Mr. Coolidge.

So Senator McCarthy was agin Communists. Has anybody ever told him that Hitler was agin them, too?

Well, I'm agin them for one, but I am also agin the latter-day Hitlers.

Zitt, H. L.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I would not be at all surprised if the name on this letter meant nothing at all to you, but I had the pleasure of broadcasting home from London with you on V-E day in 1945. As a member of the Stars and Stripes, I also was in your company from time to time.

Tonight's vilification of you by the junior Senator from Wisconsin is a perfect example of "double-think" and makes one shudder to know that it can be practiced so freely. Nothing on your program of March 9th was answered in the attack this evening. All of the arguments were completely unrelated either to the matter at hand or to any answer which the Senator might have made. To drag in a history of Marxism, to quote from publications, to read dedications of books; none of these are honest argumentation. The argumentum ad hominem proves only that the Senator either has no facts or is afraid to present such facts as he has.

If we are not to live in a world where conformity equals patriotism and individual dissent is equated with subversion, you and men like you must continue to present the facts without fear or favor - and without persecution by cold, calculating, power-hungry men with Congressional immunity.

May it be God's will that you grow from strength to strength.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your "See It Now" TV broadcast last night was timely and, considering the scope of subject material available, most succinct.

My congratulations to you, Mr. Friendly, your sponsors and CBS for a courageous stand against a demagogue who believes himself above the laws of our country.

Sincerely,

Ralph W. Zwicker

LAST NIGHT YOU ACCUSED SENATOR MCCARTHY OF LIFTING MATERIAL OUT OF CONTEXT WHICH WAS EXACTLY WHAT YOU DID DURING YOUR ENTIRE BROADCAST. CERTAINLY J EDGAR HOOVER HAS THE RESPECT AND COMPLETE CONFIDENCE OF MORE PEOPLE THAN ANY OTHER PUBLIC OFFICIAL IN MODERN HISTORY. BECAUSE OF HIS FREQUENT CONTACTS WITH SENATOR MCCARTHY MR HOOVER IS IN MUCH BETTER POSITION TO PASS INTELLIGENT PERSONAL AND OFFICIAL JUDGEMENT ON THE SENATOR THAN YOU ARE, I AM, OR ANYBODY ELSE. IN A PRESS INTERVIEW LAST AUGUST 24TH REPORTERS ASKED HIM TO COMMENT ON MCCARTHY. THE FBI CHIEF ENDORSED AND HIGHLY PRAISED SENATOR MCCARTHY BOTH PERSONALLY AND OFFICIALLY. CARDINAL SPELLMAN ANOTHER DISTINGUISHED AND HIGHLY RESPECTED AMERICAN HAS REPEATEDLY ENDORSED SENATOR MCCARTHY WITH HIGH PRAISE. AT LAST YEARS CONVENTION THE AMERICAN LEGION ALSO PRAISED AND STRONGLY ENDORSED HIM. IF YOU INTENDED YOUR TELECAST TO HONESTLY HONORABLY AND ACCURATELY PRESENT BOTH SIDES FAIRLY WHY DID YOU OMIT QUOTATIONS FROM SUCH=

OUTSTANDING PEOPLE WHO REPRESENT THE VIEWPOINT OF SO MANY OF US? ALSO WHY DID YOU OMIT MENTION OF THE FACT THE COMMUNIST DAILY WORKER DEVOTES THE MAJOR PART OF EVERY ISSUE TO VICIOUS ATTACHS UPON MCCARTHY. THAT CLEARLY SHOWS THEY FEAR HIM FAR MORE THAN ANY OTHER AMERICAN OFFICIAL SO HE MUST BE HURTING THEM SERIOUSLY. IT SEEMS TO ME THAT IF YOU WERE NOT ATTEMPTING TO DELIBERATELY DECEIVE YOUR LISTENERS YOU WILL QUOTE ENDORSEMENTS OF MCCARTHY BY THE FBI CHIEF AND OTHER GREAT AMERICANS ON TELEVISION AND RADIO AS QUICKLY AS POSSIBLE. DISTORTED AND ONE SIDED ATTACKISM LIKE YOURS IS CERTAIN TO ENCOURAGE COMMUNISTS TO REDOUBLEDTHEIR EFFORTS TO INFILTRATE IN HIGH PLACES BECAUSE THEY WILL BELIEVE SIMILAR ATTACKS WILL BE MADE ON THOSE WHO EXPOSE THEM AND LAXITY IN DEALING WITH THEM WILL BE CONDONED AND DEFENDED=

ON BEHALF OF MY FELLOW OFFICERS AND MEMBERS OF THE UNITED RAILROAD WORKERS OF AMERICA, CIO, I OFFER THEIR AND MY OWN EXPRESSION OF ADMIRATION FOR YOUR CRUSADING JOURNALISM OF HIGH RESPONSIBILITY AND GENUINE COURAGE IN PRESENTATING YOUR TELEVISION PROGRAM "SEE IT NOW" ON TUESDAY MARCH 9TH EXPOSING THE THREAT TO OUR DEMOCRACY AND THE DIGNITY OF OUR NATION BECAUSE OF THE IRRESPONSIBLE ANTICS OF A POWER-DRUNKEN LEGISLATOR. YOUR PROGRAM WAS A CLEAR INDICTMENT OF SENATOR MCCARTHY, HIS TACTICS AND HIS COMMUNIST PATTERNED INQUISITION NOW POPULARLY DEFINED AS MCCARTHYISM.

IT IS DIFFICULT TO PUT INTO WORDS THE HIGH REGARD AND PRAISE EXPRESSED BY OUR MEMBERSHIP FOR THE COURAGE AND FORTITUDE OF YOURSELF, THE COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM AND YOUR SPONSOR IN EXPOSING THIS CREATURE TO THE AMERICAN PUBLIC.

YOUR FEARLESS REPORTING WILL SET THE PATTERN FOR OTHER COURAGEOUS NEWSMEN TO FOLLOW IN A CONTINUING AMPLIFICATION OF YOUR INDICTMENT OF MCCARTHY AND=

Dear Ed,

As one of your old BBC friends I felt I must write a personal note to tell you how profoundly heartened I was to read (in the M.G.) of your stand against McCarthyism.

To people like me who don't resent the passing of world leadership from Britain to America the spectacle of McCarthy's progress has been horrifying – not the least because our sympathy went out to all those Americans who, hating his methods no less than we do, had no avenue of effective protest.

Until your voice was raised it seemed that there was no alternative but for us to face an 'agonizing reappraisal' of America's capacity to lead the free world.

I guess you have had this step in mind for some time. From the bottom of my heart I pray you have chosen your moment rightly. Anyway thank God you have had the courage to speak out.

(Incidentally, it's salutary for those of us who prefer public service to commercial TV, to see an occasion when only under a non-public service system was it possible for the right step to be taken!)

You will have many thousands of letters, I know, so of course don't bother to acknowledge this. (You may well have forgotten me anyway – I am Head of BBC Audience Research)

Yours very sincerely

Robert Silvey

Dear Sir:

I want to thank you for answering my letter that I wrote you in the past.

Thank you.

Dear Sirs:

Thank you for your letter explaining your powers or controls over the Edward R. Murrow program.

I quite agree that speech has rights but with every right there follows a duty. We are free to say what we please providing it doesn't scandalize or hurt anyone. Error has no rights in any nation at any time. No one is free to give false ideas to people, who perhaps are uninformed and thus will be taken in.

Dear Sir:

Thank you for the answer I received to my letter some time ago.

You said anyone has a right to freedom of speech and can say what they want. I thoroughly agree with you but I also believe that every right has a duty. A person can't go around smearing another man's name in any way he wants to. You must think of the common good and it certainly isn't good if Americans can't even stick together. The Communists want Americans to fight each other and they are getting their wish. Thank you very much.

Dear Sirs:

I received your letter answering my comments regarding Edward R. Murrow.

As you said, we certainly do not wish to take away anyone's freedom, but every freedom or right has a corresponding duty - in this case it would be to tell the truth. I am not implying that Mr. Murrow does not tell the truth, by that statement.

You are doing a wonderful public service by sponsoring a news broadcast. Probably hundreds of people listen to him daily; that is why he has such a great responsibility of not slanting the news.

Thank you once again for answering my last letter.

Dear Sir:

You will say that your reporter has the right to freedom of speech but with that right he has a corresponding duty. The duty to bring the truth to his listeners. The people of America today don't want half-truths or facts which are supposedly to have come from reliable sources.

The people appreciate what good your programs do and hope your company will continue to improve them.

Dear Sir:

Thank you for your response to the past letters. I do believe that we have press, speech and religion freedom. But, however, we also have a duty to refrain from infringing on the rights of others.

Whilest we know you can not dominate the program for your interest, as their sponsors, you could use influence on the type of broadcasts presented.

The public is confused enough without certain public figures using pointed methods of slanting the news. Give the public the plain, unmarred facts -- then let them use their commonsense and good judgement in reacting from there on in!

Grateful for your kind attention, I remain

Dear Sirs:

Thank you for your letter in answer to my remarks on Edward R. Murrow's news program. It is true that Mr. Murrow and everyone in our country has freedom of speech. But -- it must be remembered that with every right or freedom there is a corresponding duty. That duty is to be objective and truthful in all statements.

I only say these things because they are necessary for the freedom of our country. And as you and I both know we do want freedom and peace in our country. The kind of freedom that has its corresponding duties.

Dear Sir:

The meaning of your letter would seem to be that any and everything should be put before the public, in print, and television, and radio, and then - "Caveat Emptor." Oh, no!

In this wonderful country of ours, it is unlawful to leave poison, without lables, around, for the unwary to swallow. That is for protection of the body.

What of protection of the mind?

These programs in question are allowed to say, in effect "This is good - no danger here - take this in and make it a part of your thinking.

The subtlety is in the manner of presenting many good (very good) innocuous programs, and then the one slipped in which causes an alertness, an awareness that something evil and destructive is being sent out, over the air. I had even thought it might be my imagination, until hearing from sources from other parts of the country, bearing out my feeling in this matter.

My reply from the Alcoa Aluminum was a form letter - so they evidently have been receiving more protests than you.

Your temerity in fostering such programs is notable, and whether wise, only time will tell. These programs should be edited, by someone very aware of the facts of life.

Sincerely,

/s/ Thomas Hall

Gentlemen:

Thank you for your letter concerning Edward R. Murrow.

I know that every man has freedom of speech but he also has a correspondent duty to always present the truth.

In the world today there are many uninformed people who can easily be taken in by untruth. That is a very prevelant danger of presenting untrue statements.

J. Edgar Hoover said a so-called liberal can perhaps do more than a real Communist because more people will listen and be influenced by liberals rather than real Communists. They realize what Communism is but liberalism is more subtle.

Thank you for your interest in the radio audience.

I want to thank you for the answer I have received not too long ago.

But I just want to bring to mind that all rights are limited. No one has unlimited freedom of speech. Secondly, there is a duty connected with every right. No one ever mentions that. Freedom also includes the right to reject as well as to accept.

This letter is a request in which I would like to ask that the news in the program you sponsor be given a little more objectively.

I would like to ask this opportunity to thank your company for giving us this service and also to ask if the news commentator would give his reports more objectively and give less of his personal criticism of senate investigaton.

Maybe the company could give some anti-Communist program like "The Last Man Out."

Once again I would like to ask for some good moral news and the truth be reported.

Gentlemen:

For a long time Ed Murrow's television show has been one of our favorites. At least it was until he got into his ridiculous fight with McCarthy.

I personally and quite a number of my friends would like to know why the Hamm's Brewing Company, whose money he and CBS is using, would allow a former very interesting entertainment to be used for evidently a personal fight in which he will in all probability be shown up somewhere from pink to red.

Maybe we are wrong,but a lot of us think that McCarthy is far more necessary to the safety of the U.S. than Murrow is. Our curiosity, if nothing else, has been aroused to the point where we thought we would write to you and ask why an otherwise first class entertainment has been spoiled to the point where many of us no longer listen to it.

May I say in closing that we think your commercials are without doubt the best on television. If we could tune in on them and out on Ed, we would certainly do it.

Yours very truly,

Dear Sir:

I would like to thank you for the public service which you are sponsoring. It is very much appreciated. But would you please ask the commentator to be more objective? We are very much interested in the opinions of our commentators but we are very much interested in the facts also.

I also wish that the Senators and people in the government would not be criticized. They are doing the best they can.

Many good anti-Communists programs have had to go off the air because of a lack of sponsors. Many good programs such as "The Last Man Out." If only we could have more sponsors for these fine anti-Communist programs, the people of our United States would know the evils of communism, and they would prevent many people from even thinking about joining the Communist Party.

Thank you.

Gentlemen:

Inasmuch as you are defending your Mr. Murrow one hundred percent, there isn't much we can do or say to alter your stand, -- however, we do feel, -- and you must too, to a small degree, that Senator McCarthy can't be entirely wrong or his job is in vain, which does not seem to be the case at all.

We also feel that you were wrong in allowing Mr. Murrow to choose such a controversial program attacking Senator McCarthy. Why should the listening public have to agree with Mr. Murrow's views because he chose among his friends communists, even tho he did not agree with their views, -- so he said.

Why should we also have to feel as Mr. Murrow does, especially when so many of our boys died fighting communism or doesn't Mr. Murrow have any feelings about this? In fact he should feel ashamed and humiliated to make such a statement to the American public, saying the communists were his "friends". But then he chose them knowing what they were didn't he?

Does Mr. Murrow feel we did the right thing by the Rosenbergs? Sorry we missed his commentary on this issue but probably would have quit listening to him long ago if we had.

We didn't need to wait for Senator McCarthy's reply to Mr. Murrow this week as we decided after hearing his attack on the "JUNIOR SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN" that the first time was the last time for us to listen to Mr. Murrow. How can he possibly reply to the "JUNIOR SENATOR", explaining the communists extreme love for him? But then Mr. Murrow is very clever and quite sarcastic and will think of something good to tell over the air, but not to this family of six (6) who refuse to watch or listen to him any longer and are sending copies of this letter to Alcoa and Hamm's Brewing Companies who sponsor the Murrow shows, telling them we have discontinued purchasing any of their products.

Why a large concern like Alcoa pays fabulous money to a man like Mr. Murrow to report on current news and topics that would be of interest to all, and not only on subjects that he wants to get off his chest is beyong our comprehension.

Yours truly,

Gentlemen:

The purpose of this letter is to congratulate you on sponsoring the Edward R. Murrow news program. This is a very fine program, but it could stand a few points of improvement. One point would be to have Mr. Murrow give more objective news, another to have him go a little easier on the Senate Investigating Committees. These Committees are very fine. Of course all their methods may not be good but we don't want Communism to take over in our country. Speaking of Communism, it would also be very fine if you would sponsor some anti-Communist programs on both radio and T.V.

Thank you for reading this letter and I hope you will act on this advice.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I didn't wish to make this a formal letter because, after listening to your programs so often and watching your very enjoyable "Person to Person," I feel almost as if I know you. Oh yes, Mr. Murrow, I want to congratulate you on your heartwarming Christmas show from Korea (even if it is a little late). There should be more people willing to sacrifice for the morale of the men fighting to defend us!!

There are a few questions I'd like to ask you, though. First of all, what do you have against McCarthy? His party? His religion? His ideals? His personality? Or don't you like investigations? I'm not as informed as you are on these things but he seems OK to me.

Another thing bothering me is Red China? Would it be better just to let her in the U.N. and have Russia quiet again? Or would this concession only start another demand from the Reds? Again, you know much more about this than I do. It seems to me, though, that a lot more good would come from keeping Red China out of everything!!

There is one request, Mr. Murrow, before I close. Could you use your power to get better news casts? This isn't meant to be a slur against you but, don't you think it would be better if the people were given both sides of a controversy and allowed to judge for themselves? After all, freedom of thought is one of our American rights, and if we're only given one side of an argument, how can we exercise this right?

Thank you so much for your time and consideration.

I would like to compliment you on the services which you have rendered in accordance with sponsoring the news program, heard each evening.

It is a good news program as far as it goes but, if you could donate any suggestions to the commentator please ask him to give more truth than his own opinion. On the other hand, if he attempts giving the truth, why not give the whole truth and not just half?

One more thing I would like to say is: I don't quite agree with the way he is critizing the senate investigating committee so much. He may not agree with them but does he want to become a slave in about a few years from now and lose his freedom?

Thank you for the news broadcast which you sponsor. It has proven to be very interesting and entertaining because it gives everything in the way of latest news.

However I do earnestly think that the news should be given more objectively. The news commentator should not give his views or personal criticisms but only the facts. After all these are news broadcasts not broadcasts of a certain person's views and ideas. Above all other things I think the reports of personal investigations should be given objectively. After all these are complicated enough.

Sponsoring a news broadcast is wonderful but I think you would also be doing a job of untold value if you sponsored some anti-Communist program such as "Last Man Out" which now has no sponsor.

Dear Sirs:

I would like to thank you for your public service by sponsoring good and worthy programs.

Would you please ask your news commentator to give us the truth and less of his personal opinion. I would also appreciate it if you would ask him to please not criticize the Senators and other people in our government. Except for these small incidents we appreciate his services greatly.

Everyone would appreciate it if you could sponsor more good anti-Communist programs such as "The Last Man Out."

Thank you.

Sincerely yours,

Gentlemen:

This letter is written with regard to the news broadcasts sponsored by your company.

First of all, I want to thank you for the news broadcasts which prove to be most instructing and entertaining. But, as a listener, I feel that the commentator could express the daily events in a more objective manner, that is, leaving out his own personal feelings and comments.

As I have said before, your sponsoring the news broadcasts is well worthwhile but couldn't you manage to sponsor other programs, such as anti-Communists shows, the program "Last Man Out," an anti-Communist program, is forced to leave the air because of no sponsor.

Your aid in sponsoring a show as the one mentioned above, would certainly do a lot of good in our country.

Thank you once again and keep up the fine work.

Sincerely,

/s/ Miss Arlene Murphy

Dear Sirs:

I would like very much to take this opportunity to thank you for your news broadcast.

I think that the news commentator should present the daily events more objectively -- that is, less of his own personal criticisms should be incorporated in the news -- especially his criticism of personal investigations.

Your sponsoring this news broadcast is wonderful, but I also think you should sponsor some anti-communist program such as "Last Man Out" which has to leave the air because of no sponsor. Sponsoring this program would improve the world greatly and would be wonderful.

Yours truly,

Dear Sir:

I would just like to congratulate the fine work you have done in sponsoring many sports shows. I especially liked the Hamm's Scoreboard on WHBF-TV in Rock Island.

I would like to comment on the news commentator, Edward R. Murrow, whom you sponsor Monday thru Friday at 6:45.

He should be more objective in his reporting and less personal. The Senate Investigations should not be criticized quite so much. These things would help to improve your program.

It is my hope that you will, in the future, sponsor good anti-Communist programs such as "Last Man Out," which at the present time is sponsorless.

I hope you will take my views into consideration. Thank you.

Thank you very much for sponsoring the news each evening, but would it be possible to give us a little more objective part of the news. I do not think he should express his personal opinion so strong in some cases.

There could be so many anti-Communist programs but no one will sponsor them. I think any sponsor who will put on these anti-Communist programs will help his country as well as his business.

May I commend you on your sponsorship of Edward R. Murrow and the news as a public service. As you are America-minded, I am sure you would like to know I look forward to seeing anti-communistic programs on your time.

Perhaps your commentator could tone down of few personal opinions or justify them with solid facts, but on the whole, his narration is full of vigor and a pleasure to listen to. I congratulate him on his gesture to the Wisconsin senator to use program time for the presentation of views.

Thank you very much.

Gentlemen:

Shouldn't every good American solemnly pledge not to buy or drink their favorite beer (Hamm's) so long as you sponsor Edward R. Murrow, whose fervor over McCarthyism is simply a form of concealing his anti-Americanism?

Not long ago Mr. Murrow had the audicity to put an admitted ex-Communist on "Person-to-Person." His questionable background disqualifies him as representative of any good American Company such as I believe yours to be.

Thank you for the news broadcast you sponsor daily. I listen to it whenever possible, and it is a wonderful public service.

However, I wish you would please ask your commentator to present the news more objectively. If both sides of a story are given truthfully, with less of the commentator's personal ideas, the public will be able to reach their own conclusions.

As it is that you are the sponsor for a news broadcast on radio, I believe you are in the position to see that the news is given more objectively. The news commentator should give less of his personal criticism of Senate investigations.

Dear Sir:

I am writing to congratulate you on your sponsorship of such programs as Edward R. Merle and the many other programs. I do however differ on several points and I do think they could and should be changed for the better.

For instance I think the news commentators could be a little more objective in giving the news instead of so emphatically expressing their own ideas or opinions. A little foresight would be useful. They should also quit criticizing Senate investigations. They may personally disapprove of them but their personal feelings should be kept off-the-air.

Could you possibly give us more anti-Communist programs. I'm sure many such programs would be possible if they would have sponsors to back them. Such programs as "Last Man Out" were forced to go off the air because they had no sponsor. That was a wonderful program lost. Such programs keep people alert. Why not take it upon yourself to sponsor such a program in the near future. I'm sure it would have the appreciation of thousands of red-blooded Americans.

You manufacture a good beer. You have an especially good announcer on your T.V. program. You had a good T.V. show and I enjoyed it until Edward R. Murrow got into the Sen. McCarthy argument. Gentlemen:-

I am enclosing herewith a copy of a letter, I have this day caused to be directed to the Grand Council of the United Commercial Travelers, of America, Columbus Ohio, which is self explanatory.

You will readily understand from this letter, that it is my intention to request the members of our organization to collectively protest to the Hamms Brewing Company the unprecedented attack on the Honorable Joseph McCarthy, United Senator from Wisconsin, by one, Edward R. Morrow, of CBS radio and TV system. Your sponsorship of this micraphone coward is being called to the attention to all UCT councils, as well as American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars posts and fraternal organizations where-ever your product is for sale.

Sponsorship of such slanting newscasters as Murrow is an insult to the fathers and Mothers of the boys that have fought and died fighting communists all over the world. Joe McCarthy has dug out a lot of communists that came into being during the administration of the king of demagogs, Roosevelt, and this left-wing presspunk Murrow, undoubtedly has been hurt because of the exposure by Joe McCarthy's investigation.

This micraphone coward conducted a program sometime ago, on which he has another left wing character Senator Kerr of Oklahoma. At that time Kerr and Murrow were exercised up over the drop in livestock prices, and Kerr pulled the prize story for Murrow's program by telling the public that conditions were so bad under the Republicans, that one of Kerr's constitutents had to sell a calf for $1.75, and Kerr pulled a paper out of his pocket saying it was a "bill of sale" for the animal. But that got by with Murrow, when any fifth rate Greek resturant would have bought the calf for the going price on hoof for from $10 to $25 depending on age etc.

The truth hurts thats why the left wing press punks would like to stop Joe McCarthy's investigation of the bed-fellows. The public wont support a product that sponsors characters of this kind.

NIXON QUOTE
5-C-18

The New York Times - September 6, 1955 - By Russell Baker (9-5-55)

Denver: Then, the Vice President gave this interpretation of what he suggested had been Senator Joseph R. McCarthy's fatal error.

There was, he said, a politician adage to the effect that "you must not strike a king unless you kill him."

"Politically," he said, "you could say you must not strike a leader unless you destroy him. I think that our political history shows that when you have a great issue and an individual decides to take onthe top man, if he wins out on the issue he gains in popularity, but when you make a frontal assault on somebody bigger, you'd better be sure you win. If you lose, you're through."

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Enclosed you will find our editorial of April 15, in which we comment on your "See It Now" program of April 13.

We are also enclosing our editorial of March 4, which we have just learned was entered into the Congressional Record on March 22 by Rep. Peter Frelinghuysen, Jr., of New Jersey. The editorials were written by Mrs. Cahn.

We think you will find both editorials of interest.

The Massapequa Post is a weekly newspaper, published every Thursday. Because of our consistent editorial stand against the McCarthy approach to the problem of subversion, and because of our opposition to fascistic, as well as communistic, methods generally, we have also been subjected to "the treatment," albeit in a small way, from a local pro-McCarthy weekly, the Tomahawk, edited by George Bricker. We have successfully fought this intermittent attack by calling attention to our strong anti-communist record in Levittown, where we formerly published the Levittown Eagle. Of course, we opposed the McCarthy approach in Levittown as well as in Massapequa, whether manifested in local school board elections or in international politics.

Despite the uncomfortable position of being the target of both the extreme right and the extreme left, we feel that we have been true to our tradition of the free press, and that we have helped stem the tide of extremism in our small way. We are proud to be a junior colleague of Edward R. Murrow.

Sincerely yours,

LOCAL CONGRESSMAN HITS 'TYRANNY'

WAINWRIGHT ON MC CARTHY ROLE IN STEVENS CASE

BY CONGRESSMAN STUYVESANT WAINWRIGHT
Representative, First Congressional District of New York

The recent Stevens-McCarthy controversy has alarmed the nation. I have been asked to state my position on this unfortunate affair. It is this:

All good Americans are opposed to Communists in Government or in the Armed Services. Certainly, Secretary of the Army Stevens must be considered an outstanding proponent of this policy. He has told me on several occasions of his efforts to keep the Armed Services free of these evil people. Mr. Stevens, on the other hand, does not believe that distinguished American Army Officers should be called, in effect, traitors by U.S. Senators, simply because the officer in question was obeying orders of higher authority.

I agree with Secretary Stevens.

This must lead to a further examination of the conduct of Congressional investigations, not alone in the Communist field. I have been greatly alarmed by the abuses and threats to which innocent witnesses have been subjected. A good friend of mine from Nassau County was testifying as a Government witness in a contract case earlier this week. The Committee Counsel, apparently anxious to make a name for himself, felt that my friend had not given him enough information. He threatened the witness: "I'll go to your boss (a large New York corporation) and tell him you're not playing ball. He'll fire you quick!"

The question is, does this not smack of the Hitler Gestapo or the present Russian secret police? Our country's government is based on the philosophy which respects the dignity of man. We are innocent until proven guilty. My oath to defend the Constitution is sacred. Consequently, I will fight against tyranny and injustice whether it come from the menace of our evil breed of domestic Communists or from a fascist threat, veiled in a wicked purpose under the guise of "true Americanism".

Placed in Congressional Record

Wainwright's Statement Of Great Significance

We wish to call your attention to Congressman Stuyvesant Wainwright's article on the Stevens-McCarthy controversy elsewhere in the paper. His words deserve the most careful reading by everyone interested in preserving our American heritage and way of life.

It is heartening to see a young man, part of the regular Republican organization of Nassau and Suffolk Counties so completely aware of the implications regarding the recent conduct of our Congressional investigations. One could wish that his chief, President Eisenhower, who undoubtedly shares his views, had stated them so forthrightly and at the proper time.

Americans must be made aware of the fact that this nation faces two threats, one from the left and one from the right. Both would destroy our system of government, both are equally tyrannical. The communist threat is easy to see, because it owes its allegience to a foreign power. The fascist threat is not so easy, because its chief foreign exponents were defeated in the last war, and because its adherents in this country disguise it with a phony type of patriotism.

Communists and fascists alike want you to believe that if they accuse a man of something, the fact that they have so accused him must mean that he is guilty. No trial is necessary; no defense; no examination of the evidence. They wouldn't have accused him if there were any possibility of his innocence, they say. And to save our nation, they add, we must let them be in full charge, we must rely entirely on their judgement and we must be willing to give up our democratic freedoms. This is precisely the device that Hitler used. History has proven that once we agree to give up those freedoms, no one is going to hand them back to us without a fight.

These words of Congressman Wainwright bear repeating, and they are worthy to be part of the code of every American: "I will fight tyranny and injustice whether it come from the menace of our evil breed of domestic Communists or from a fascist threat, veiled in a wicked purpose under the guise of 'true Americanism'. We urge our readers to communicate their views on this matter to Congressman Wainwright in Washington, D.C.

Ask More Gas Stations -Don't We Have Enough?

In the POST this week, there are a number of legal notices which involve requests for zoning variances to permit the erection of gas stations. While we are anxious to see new industry and business enter this area, we believe that we already have enough gas stations in the community. In fact, we may already have too many.

The erection of still more gas stations will certainly hurt the business of the numerous stations already in existence, and this can help to depress the entire area. We urge those who intend to put up the stations (if allowed by the Town Board) to reconsider their action before they risk their capital. Above all, we urge the Town Board to carefully consider the effect on the local economy.

Anniversary Greetings To Our Own Girl Scouts

We could not let this week go by without saluting our wonderful Girl Scout troops and their leaders on the occasion of Girl Scout Week and the 42nd Anniversary of Girl Scouting. The important work of the Girl Scouts is too well known to bear repetition here. Character building, knowledge of specific skills and constructive use of leisure time are all the results of this work.

The Girl Scout troops are not sponsored by outside organizations. The Massapequa Town Committee is in charge of all the Massapequa troops; the Plainedge Town Committee of the Plainedge troops and so on. Funds are raised primarily through the annual cookie sale. The Girls Scouts stand on their own feet. We are proud of them.

Impressive Rites Mark Southedge Dedication

Impressive ceremonies marked the dedication of the new Southedge School in District 18 (Plainedge) Sunday, February 28. Arnold Jenny was honorary chairman and master of ceremonies. About 400 attended the dedication, during which a speaker's stand from the Class of 1953 was presented by Arlene Cornell; an organ was presented by Charles E. Schwarting, past president of the Board of Education; an American flag was presented by Commander John Atanat of the Massapequa American Legion Post; and a school flag was presented by Mrs. Robert L. Shillito of the PTA.

Invocation was given by Rev. Russell Helgeson of the Lutheran Church in Plainedge; the prayer was given by Rabbi Samuel Epstein of the Farmingdale Jewish Center; and the benediction was given by the Rev. Father Flynn of St. William the Abbot R.C. Church.

Robert W. Eaves, executive secretary of the Department of Elementary Principals of the NEA gave the dedicatory address. Musical selections were presented by the Choral Ensemble, directed by Miss Agnes Schoebe; and an instrumental quartette, directed by Paul Willeman. Alonzo Gibbs gave the history of the Plainedge School District.

The school key was presented by Mr. Heidelberger, architect of the firm of Jagow and Heidelberger, designer of the school. Receiving the key were Robert Picken, president of the Board of Education; John W. Chisholm, district superintendent; Dr. Charles S. Johnson, supervising principal; Fred J. Prior, Southedge School principal; and John Tomasso, president of the Student Council of the Class of 1954.

Hitler's Anti-Communism Paved Way For Soviets, Warns Founder Of CYO

As Bishop Shiel of Chicago said this week, "Anti-communism is sometimes the scoundrel's first refuge." He described Hitler as one of the strongest anti-communists in the world, and pointed out that Hitler was not wrong because he was an anti-communist, but because he was an IMMORAL anti-communist. As a result, the Bishop went on, half of Europe, including half of Germany, is now under the communist yoke. Bishop Shiel is of the opinion that the results would have been quite different had Hitler been a MORAL anti-communist.

The Roman Catholic Bishop, who is a learned man, and the founder of the CYO, reviewed briefly 700 years of history starting with the Magna Carta. After going through the various freedoms acquired, often with great difficulty, during those years, he said it was incredible that they could all be lightly disregarded and tossed aside in an instant, but that appeared to be what was now happening in some cases.

His main thesis, in the talk he gave on Edward R. Murrow's See It Now television program Tuesday, was that IMMORAL anti-communism conditions people to such a state of moral bankruptcy that they are incapable of withstanding the pressures of communism itself. As proof, he offers the spectacle of Eastern Europe described above.

There is very little difference between the attitudes of the communist and the immoral anti-communist toward decency, honesty, truth, our great constitutional guarantees and what are usually considered our sacred rights.

Not all of Bishop Shiel's colleagues will agree with him. The time is fast approaching, however, when we shall have to decide on the one hand whether to fight communism and its ideology the way Americans have fought all tyranny since there was an America, or whether to replace it with a home-grown tyranny just as terrifying.

Incidentally, Murrow, who was accused by Senator McCarthy the previous week of having been praised by the communist Daily Worker, read the quote to which McCarthy referred. It said that McCarthy had become so objectionable that even Murrow, President Eisenhower, Senator Flanders and others had felt obligated to give him a "slap on the wrist." That's praise?

Watch Your Driving On This Holiday Weekend

Practically all of us look forward to the average week end as a time for rest and pleasure. We can catch up on our golf game, work around the house and have some fun with the children. It's the time for going to church, watching television, listening to the ball game or visiting or being visited by friends.

The week ends are all of those things - except on the highways. In 1953, 15,800 persons were killed and 800,000 were injured in week end accidents, according to figures compiled and recently released by The Travelers Insurance Companies. Forty-one per cent of the deaths and 36 per cent of the injuries were recorded on Saturdays and Sundays in 1953.

Saturday continued to be the most dangerous day of the week. One reason is that more cars are in use Saturday than on any weekday. There is another distinguishing feature which sets this day apart from the others. For too many people, Saturday night is a time when drinking and driving combine. No one knows exactly how many traffic accidents are caused by drinking drivers but everyone knows it is a major problem. Everyone needs to know that even one drink before driving is too many.

Week ends indeed are a time of rest. For too many they are the beginnings of permanent rest.

This week end, particularly, may be extra hazardous because of the double Easter-Passover holiday. More families than usual will be on the road. A lot of children will be in the family auto as visits are made back and forth.

Be especially careful this week end. As we have said before, we like our subscribers too much to lose them - for any reason.

Easter, Passover Facts

for orthodox Jews. It is named for the pass-over of the angel of death in Egypt. The Passover is, in fact, a twofold observance, a spring festival and a commemoration of the flight from Egypt and deliverance from bondage. On direction of Moses, the night before the days of the exodus, the Jews remained indoors, packed and ready. They ate unleavened bread that night and on the journey: hence the matzoth of today.

The feast is observed generally in the home. For weeks ahead, the home is cleaned and special Passover dishes prepared.

The Seder is held in the home and symbolic foods are eaten in commemoration of the flight from Egypt, or the Exodus. Scripture readings, parables, religious chants and prayers mark this special ceremonial meal as the Haggadah is read. Orthodox Jews observe the Seder for two nights; reformed Jews for only one night.

In the synagogue, chapters from Exodus are read as well as the Numbers, and the Song of Songs, because of its beautiful description of Spring in Palestine. Prayers and ceremonies are held. The festival is probably the most important of all for Jews, and it should be remembered by Christians that the Last Supper was the opening feast of the Passover. Best wishes to all on this joyful feast. The Christian and Hebrew faiths are interwoven in many ways.

The Sponsor And Independence

Hartford Courant 4/6/54

A correspondent of the Manchester Guardian in England has made a significant point in the discussion of sponsored television there. An audible group has been protesting sponsored television. The BBC is a government-created independent agency and pays for itself by taxes. The Churchill government has proposed that the American sponsor system be applied to the more costly television schedules, to secure for the viewing public a wider choice. This has aroused those who believe in government control, those who oppose what they call nauseating commercials, and those who are against anything American.

But many of these same persons have been violently critical of Senator McCarthy, too. They recently cheered the forthright attack on McCarthyism by Edward R. Murrow, which had been duly reported to them. Now comes a correspondent to point out something that is a standing truth in the communications industry. Mr. Murrow may well have been a brave and courageous man to launch a controversial attack. But the real hero and the real champion of freedom is the Aluminum Corporation of America — the sponsor. It is that organization that stood to lose directly by reaction against the program. And, the correspondent notes, the BBC, obliged by government regulation to be as neutral and as non-controversial as possible, might well have felt itself unable even to talk about Senator McCarthy, were he a British problem, let alone criticize him.

This point should give considerable pause to those who have faith and confidence in the American system of free enterprise. It is the private support, the financial independence, guaranteed by advertising, that permits free and open discussion. When weakness arises, as in the case of threats and suggested reprisal used in recent years against outspoken commentators and news magazines, there is inevitably a desire to pull punches or to dodge issues. Then strong support means independence. But what of the desire for objectivity and the big government advocates' cry for impartiality? The end result of such non-controversial treatment is that even the devil may not be criticized; he must be allowed equal time.

FREEDOM ANSWERS COMMUNISM

No. 21 -- WHO ARE THE IMPERIALIST WAR-MONGERS?

Words to Remember

"I have in my hands a speech which the Soviet Minister of Foreign Affairs made in Moscow on Oct. 31, 1939. Already the war was on and in Mr. Molotov's own words, 'It needed only one swift blow to Poland, first by the German Army and then by the Red Army, and nothing remained of this ugly offspring of the Versailles Treaty.'"
-- Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, Feb. 2, 1954

"A series of frightful clashes between the Soviet Republic and the bourgeois States is inevitable."
-- Lenin

One of the oldest tricks used by Communist propaganda is to shout "stop thief!" The real thief tries to throw off his pursuers by shouting "stop thief" at the innocent man.

In 1947 Soviet Foreign Minister Vishinsky used the "stop thief" trick at the United Nations. He tried to pin the term "imperialist war-mongers" on the United States and "certain other powers," notably Britain and France.

But what are the facts? The nations of the free world have been rapidly freeing their former colonies. On the other hand, the Soviet Union has been enslaving formerly independent countries, and supporting wars against Greece, Indo-China and Korea.

The Communists have been following the advice of Lenin. Long ago Lenin said, "The road to London and Paris runs through Peiping and Calcutta." Communism is well along on that "imperialist war-mongering" road to world domination.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." Let us see who cultivates the fruits of liberation, and who grows the thistles of imperialism and war.

Last January, an 83-year-old lady Mrs. Leo J. Grove received a distinguished visitor in her Florida home. Almost fifty years before, as a young American school teacher in the Philippines, this white-haired lady ~~Mrs. Leo J. Grove~~ had taught the principles of freedom and democracy to a very bright Filipino boy.

Ambassador Carlos Romulo, her eager pupil half a century before, had come to pay his respects to a great teacher.

"My life and thoughts have been shaped by your early teaching," Romulo said. "I want to thank you and tell you what you have done for world freedom."

As she looked through misty eyes at the world-famous man, pictures of him flashed through her mind's eye. She saw him as the little boy who had such an intense way of speaking. She saw him lugging armfuls of books from her library to read about Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and the other philosophers of freedom.

She saw him wading ashore on the Philippines with General MacArthur in February, 1945, to liberate his homeland from the Japanese. In that picture he was the "little general." Then he was standing before the diplomats in 1946 at the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration Conference in Atlantic City. He was surrounded by charts and graphs, making an eloquent plea for immediate relief for the war-torn Philippines.

She saw him presiding as President of the U. N. General Assembly in 1949.

"And what are you doing now, Carlos?" she asked.

"Talking, as usual," he replied with a smile. "I am just finishing a lecture tour of America. I have been trying to alert your people to the Communist menace in Asia and win their support for the new government of the Philippines in its fight for freedom in Asia."

She nodded her head. "I always read about you, Carlos. I was so proud of you when you stepped aside as a candidate for the Presidency to unite your country for good government. Do you remember the American statesman who said, "Sir, I would rather be right than be President?"

"Henry Clay," answered her former pupil. "I was right, as well as for the right man for President. And we won -- not only in our country but for democracy in Asia."

"Do you think you can win in Asia?" she asked.

"Yes, we will win," Romulo assured her. "We can show the people of Asia from our own experience that American democracy liberates, while Soviet communism enslaves."

Then he recalled the early days of his youth. His father had been bitter against the Americans during the Spanish-American War, after Admiral Dewey had sunk the Spanish fleet. He believed American rule was just being substituted for Spanish rule. He fought against the Americans.

"But, father," young Carlos would argue, "President McKinley promises us freedom and independence when we are trained and ready for it."

"Don't believe it," warned his father. "Imperialists never let go without a fight."

William Howard Taft, who later became President of the United States, was the first Governor of the Philippines. He called for 1,000 American teachers to help prepare the Filipinos for self-government.

"Yes, I remember," the old lady said. "But I never thought I would have a future world leader in my class. I went with fear and trembling. People said I would get shot by rebels."

As rapidly as they were educated, Filipinos stepped into local government posts, the police, the courts, all the way up to judges in the Supreme Court.

"You see, father," Romulo would insist, "the Americans mean what they say. We are the judges now. We even sentence American law-breakers. Is that the way of an imperialist?"

Then, in 1934, the United States Congress set a definite date for full independence. General Romulo and the Filipinos fought the Japanese militarists in 1941.

They rejected Imperial Japan's false promise of "Asia for the Asians." They could see that "thought control" prevented the Japanese people from having control of even Japan itself. They believed the American promise, and fought to become masters in their own house as free men.

On July 4, 1946, the United States proved its promise right on schedule. The Philippines entered the family of nations as an independent country.

General Romulo became the new nation's leading spokesman in the world forum of the United Nations.

Carlos Romulo patted the hand of his former teacher and said, "You didn't realize that you and the rest of the thousand teachers were doing more than regiments of soldiers to fight for freedom. You didn't realize more than forty years ago that you were preparing a bastion of strength for your country in the Pacific, did you?"

"No, Carlos," she replied. "I guess we teachers just don't know our own strength."

Romulo smiled. "I thank you for myself, and I thank you for my country. For without devoted teachers freedom falters, democracy fails."

While Romulo was fighting the Japanese, the Soviets were preparing to enter the Pacific war. Six days before the Japanese surrendered, the Red Army marched into Manchuria.

The Communists talked "liberation." But how did they act? They acted like old-fashioned imperialists.

Under the direction of Japanese imperialists, the Chinese had built modern industries in Manchuria. The Communists took over the position of the defeated Japanese imperialists. They dismantled the factories and carted away to Russia a billion dollars worth of machinery,. For six days fighting, they claimed this as war reparations. They left hundreds of thousands of Chinese workers without work-shops.

After the war was over, the Soviets broke their word to the Chinese government. They supported the Chinese Communists and helped them to seize China with weapons the Reds had taken from the Japanese.

The Soviets broke the pledges they made at Yalta and Potsdam -- pledges signed by Stalin as one of "the Big Three." They refused to let the peoples of Poland, Hungary, Rumania, and Bulgaria choose their own leaders. Instead, Communist conspirators, with the help of the Red Army, took over these governments and made them puppets of Soviet Russia.

While the Soviets talked peace, they started and supported war. In 1950, their Communist forces in North Korea launched an armed attack on the Republic of Korea. The United Nations ordered the North Koreans to halt and return to the 38th Parallel. The Communists ignored the U. N. They smashed through the weak defenses of the Republic, and marched to the southern tip of the peninsula.

The U.N. called upon all members to honor their pledges in the Charter -- to refrain from giving aid to the Communist aggressors and to help the victim of aggression. Fifty-three countries supported the United Nations move for peace. Five Communist countries supported the war of aggression.

The Soviets admitted in the U.N. that they supplied the Communist forces with weapons and jet planes. But the battered Chinese Communists finally called for peace. They got a truce. It remains to be seen whether they will make a peace and withdraw Chinese invaders from Korea.

Who are the "imperialist war-mongers"? The answer is to be found in deeds not words.

MESSAGE TO AMERICAN YOUTH FROM CARLOS ROMULO

One of your radio comedians used to amuse me with a program called, "It Pays to be Ignorant". But seriously, today ignorance pays off in slavery and death.

Freedom and Communism are in mortal competition for the minds and hearts of youth all over the world.

Freedom has to win every day, every year, every generation in order to prevail. Communism has to win only once.

Then dictatorship puts out the light of reason. It drives its victims into a dark tunnel of thought-control where people soon go blind.

I am heartened to see Scholastic Magazines focussing attention of American youth on the meaning of the struggle between Freedom and Communism. For only those who understand both the tactics and propaganda tricks of the Communists and the great principles of Freedom can help overcome the evil in Communism with the good of Democracy.

Today the struggle centers in Asia and the Pacific. There a billion and a half people who hate old-fashioned imperialism and who live on the edge of starvation are the targets of Soviet propaganda. Few of these people understand that the self-appointed men in the Kremlin and not the elected servants in Washington are the "imperialist war-mongers".

There is one dramatic exception - the Filipino people. In the Philippines we know from first-hand experience that democratic America is a true apostle of Freedom. My people stand in the world as exhibit A for the liberating policies of the U.S.A. They stand in sharp contrast to the unfortunate people of Poland, Czechoslovakia, and 600 million others who have been enslaved by Soviet imperialism since Stalin made his war-unleashing pact with Hitler in 1939.

My people speak the language of Asia in waging the fight of Freedom through good and honest government.

Only as we of the free world work together, strengthen and support each other, and reason out our common policies in the United Nations can we patiently and gradually build a peaceful future on the foundations of real Freedom and Justice.

That future is in your hands. God grant that the work of your hands will be guided by enlightened heads and devoted hearts.

Carlos P. Romulo

This may not be of any use to you; then again, it may. I think you're doing a very good job of reminding us all of what sanity and restraint can accomplish. Best of luck.

Tom Fitzsimmons

The addition of Mers-el-Kebir and Bizerte to the chain of bases, equipped for the stocking of new (atomic) weapons, along the Radford Line will—if it takes place—be catastrophic news for the French enemies of the EDC—from the neutralists to the nationalist imperialists. It will on the other hand confirm Generalissimo Francisco Franco and General Garcia Valino in the wisdom of their calculated gamble against the French in North Africa. And if the French flag cedes to or even shares with the American flag over these nominally French empire harbor-bases while the Spanish flag alone flies over the nominally American bases in Spain, Madrid's stock in the Arab world will rise high and fast.

From the point of view of the US New Look, the new bases will go far toward completing the Southern chain which extends—or will extend—from Europe to Turkey, Iraq and Pakistan. The visit of the new Iraqi king to Karachi is a plain indication of what is going on behind the scenes. But men close to the NATO inner circle deny the French claim that the shift of the west-center of the Radford Line to strong points in North Africa means a turn by the US from territorial to peripheral defense of the European continent.

The US, they say, still founds its strategy both on the EDC and on territorial defense, that is, the presence of US troops in Western Europe. This is just as necessary as British presence militarily on the continent—or even better, British joining of the EDC—and French acceptance of German rearmament. But whether or not the French join the EDC, one of the purposes of the Adenauer trip is to sketch the geopolitics of a connection between the Western European pattern and the Balkan alliance.

For what is involved is the new "double Dulles doctrine"—both territorial and peripheral defense, both the foresight of little wars and of the one, big annihilatory war. Agonizing or not, the reappraisal already has taken place. Some time in May, perhaps after the Geneva Conference, perhaps after the French National Assembly's discussion of the EDC, or perhaps before—if the Russian New Look becomes more militarily menacing—the block in Bonn to the first step in German rearmament—already voted by both houses of the German parliament—will be removed. If the French High Commissioner continues on the orders of Paris to object, ways will be found by the US and British High Commissioners to give the green light anyway.

The Russians know this quite well. One indication is the rain of protests that has been pouring from Moscow on all the European capitals which are accepting their roles in the US New Look. Another is the fact that in all the Russian satellites, from the Baltic to the Balkans, Russian officers, or Russian-trained ones, are taking over control of the armies; and into the posts of ambassador are going trusted Russian Communist Party stalwarts.

As for the French, a leader of the resistants to the EDC, the Gaullist Sen. Edmond Michelet, threatens the organization of "new conscientious objectors" against "the dangerous Europe of the denationalized stateless and the technocrats"—meaning the Germans and the Americans. This "living resistance," he says, "will rest on popular bases founded on ideas as simple and as old as the world itself: the defense of altars and homes." It doesn't seem a kind of power that can compete with the new bomb at Bikini—500 or 600 times as great as that of the bomb at Hiroshima.

As Seen from Eastern Europe

Soviet propaganda is saved from fantasy by a flesh and blood man

by Thomas Goldstein

SENATOR McCARTHY is at great pains these days to identify the Communist Party as the source of all resistance to his drive for power. Flinging copies of The Daily Worker on to the press tables below his public platform, he cites its editorials as proof that the Communists must, as a matter of life and death, destroy him, and adds in sorrow that they seem to be dragging misguided liberals, Democrats, and even a few Eisenhower Republicans along in tow. An analysis of recent editorials and radio broadcasts behind the Iron Curtain, however, suggests that McCarthy's claim is far from the truth.

The Communist hate-America campaign was languishing when McCarthy launched his attack on the Army. Then, in March, new orders went out to Communist radio commentators and editorial writers from Leningrad to Bucharest. In place of the overworked fabrications about American fascism the propagandists were ordered to work more closely to actual events, and to conclude from them that a recognizable fascist movement was in the making on Capitol Hill. Not a figment of Soviet propaganda, but a flesh and blood man was held up to the subject peoples of Russia and the satellites to justify the oppression and excesses of Communist rule.

Thus, on March 17, Warsaw's radio commentator Gustav Kaden compared McCarthy to the Poles' well-remembered enemy, Adolph Hitler. Building his case, Kaden added that McCarthy was being financed by Texas oil millionaires, "the most reactionary and war-minded section of American monopoly capitalism," just as their counterparts, the Ruhr industrialists had paved Hitler's road to power. Moscow Radio on March 6 reported the "whipping up of hysteria on a nationwide scale" in America and took pains to corroborate McCarthy's thesis that he speaks for the Republican Party. Moscow Radio said of the Senator on March 6: "He is actually doing the work which the ruling quarters find necessary." Again, Kaden, elaborating on this new thesis, spoke of the climate of mutual spying and distrust, the compulsion to turn in "false accusations against one's friends, acquaintances and family," the terror "particularly among white-collar workers of being summoned for the fatal hearing" (before the McCarthy Senate Subcommittee), the attack on constitutional rights and civil liberties and the impending triumph of fascism in America. To the South, the Czechoslovak newspaper Pràca of Bratislava informed its readers that the American fuehrer's "scandalous popularity" was increasing "by the hour rather than by the day." Pràca, on March 7, warned Czech workers to have no confidence in America, speaking of "the reactionary hysteria, the muddy waters of which are flooding the entire public life of the USA."

The initial surrender of Army Secretary Stevens on the matter of General Zwicker was fully exploited as additional proof of the Communist case. Pràca even reported in an editorial "a rebellion inside the Army" in support of McCarthy—inciting its readers to draw the parallel in the rise of the Nazi party.

Communist propaganda exploits McCarthy rather than opposing him for the Kremlin. McCarthy is too valuable to be destroyed. Yet there remains a knot in the Soviet line. If McCarthy's advances permit an approach toward reality in Soviet propaganda, with undoubted gains in acceptance among its audiences, reality presents also the curious phenomenon of open opposition to McCarthy, with the possibility that it may gain in strength. The initial Soviet directives seem to have mastered this dilemma in customary fashion. Every Iron Curtain editorial and radio comment on the Stevens incident accorded with the analysis presented by Valentin Zorin on a Moscow home broadcast. There was, Zorin conceded, a "wave of discontent" sweeping the United States, which found fault with McCarthy; nonetheless (as Zorin explained) the US "ruling circles" were on the whole highly pleased with McCarthy's achievements.

The motives of the ruling-circles were outlined in characteristic Marxist terms. As Valentin Zorin explained to Soviet audiences on March 4: "The acute aggravation of the economic situation in the United States, the steady rise in unemployment, and the constant decline in the living standards of the workers arouse discontent among the American people. . . . Under these circumstances, the top crust of the Republican Party has decided to push Senator McCarthy on the political stage, hoping that his unbridled propaganda campaign will divert the attention of the American workers from their pressing problems."

Once this has been explained, the wholesale "fascistization" of America seems to follow. As the Hungarian paper Magyar Nemzet of March 10 adds: "The Eisenhower-McCarthy duel is nothing but a show. The Morgans and the du Ponts are simply telling the two sides to use a somewhat different tone."

For the first time in years, the Soviet propaganda script is not just a series of hollow clichés. Many an Eastern European Socialist, cut off from all unbiased information, may have been struck by the unaccustomed ring of truth and the sudden flow of factual reports from the US.

The Communists have achieved this gain in credibility at a calculated risk. In relinquishing the realm of fabrication to report McCarthy's successes, they have become dependent on the ups and downs of American ethics. As long as McCarthy rides the crest of the wave, the Communists can tell their story convincingly. But as soon as it appears that McCarthy may be checked, his value is undermined for the Communist psychological warfare team. That ominous parallel with Hitler Germany, which the Communist propaganda machine has been publicizing with all its power, would break down at the decisive point. Iron Curtain propaganda would once more be forced to take flight into its world of fantasy. It would have the additional burden of explaining how it is that a people can halt a totalitarian movement in its tracks.

Roughly since mid-March, Iron Curtain media have again fallen silent on McCarthy and the "fascistization" of America. Moscow's chief propagandists seem to suspect that they have gone out on a limb. They are undoubtedly keeping a close watch to see whether events will help or hinder their propaganda line.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I would like to add my little bit to your flood of mail on Senator Joseph McCarthy's televised attack on you. The enclosed editorial expresses my feelings about this.

I'm sorry to say that I don't see your T-V commentary regularly. But what I have seen, I have liked. Your radio commentary I hear a little more frequently and enjoy hugely. I like best the fact that you do not hesitate to handle controversial issues. In a time when many are afraid to speak out, your's is one of the few courageous news programs devoted to getting at the facts.

I agree with you that McCarthy is giving comfort to the enemy. I agree with him that he ought to be removed from the Senate.

Very Sincerely Yours,

Request For Minutes

The East Haven News has asked for access to the executive minutes of the Board of Education. In a letter to the board, this paper has made it plain that we seek to view these records for the purpose of using as material for news stories any matters about which it is felt the public ought to be advised.

We have made clear in our original request that we have no desire, and did not intend, to use information which dealt with personnel problems or matters the disclosures of which might result in injury to innocent persons.

From the very start, the editor of the East Haven News has recognized the importance of the board's handling such matters in closed session. That is the accepted purpose of executive sessions.

However, in view of the lengthy closed sessions being held by our present school board plus the fact that at least one important matter was kept from public sight until it "leaked" out, there is serious question whether the board is not handling many other matters in these sessions, simply to keep the public from knowing what is going on.

When the present board took office last October, its chairman, Francis Walsh, said that executive sessions would be kept at a minimum and that decisions taken in these sessions would be made available after the closed meetings.

There is now a question whether this promise has been fully kept. In comparison with its predecessor, it would seem to reporters that the present Board of Education is holding a "mighty" lot of executive sessions.

The question has been raised regarding this newspaper's right to make this request for the minutes on behalf of the public. In the absence of a "public demand" in the real sense, how can the News press its request?

The request is made in behalf of what we believe is the public's "right to know what is going on" if we may use the words of First Selectman Frank S. Clancy. The public has not "demanded" these minutes any more than it has "demanded" that reporters cover the meetings of the Board of Education.

The East Haven News made plain its editorial views on this score during the political campaign last year. Our job is to report all of these doings that are not properly confidential.

The board has now voted to have a committee which may study the executive minutes to see what is releasable. We have misgivings about such a plan. It would make it appear that the Board of Education was still intent on "censoring" its own reports on its activities. We urge that the special committee concentrate its study on our request for access to all of the executive minutes.

Typical Performance

Sentaor Joseph McCarthy's "performance" Tuesday night instead of furnishing proof of his reckless charges against CBS Commentator Edward R. Murrow served in Murrow's own words - as "Just one more example of his typical tactic of attempting to tie up to communism anyone who disagrees with him."

The Wisconsin senator's diatribe, televised on the invitation of Murrow, who has the very un-communistic reputation of presenting both sides in any dispute, was nothing more than warmed-over hash. His "documentation" would have been thrown out of any court in the land.

Incidentally, the Daily Worker and the American Communist party always express a great love for, and endorsement of the Constitution of the United States. Following McCarthy's logic, this would be reason enough for throwing out this bulwark of our liberties.

In no instance did McCarthy prove a single point of his contentions about Murrow. At the same time, he failed to disprove the serious charges which the commentator has already leveled at him. Instead, he took up most of his alloted time with a weary deliverance of a very generalized history of the growth of Marxist communism.

Then, in typical fashion, the senator made a statement which has every appearance of being a bald attempt to capitalize on the present concern over the hydrogen bomb by distorting the facts. By implication, he blamed "Communist" influences for delaying the development of the H-bomb for 18 months and claimed great damage.

McCarthy failed to reveal what the damage was, and his claim of a delay by subversive influences was not sustained by President Eisenhower, who said he knows of no such delay, and by Republican Rep. W. Sterling Cole, chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

The senator is slipping. He used to be able to put on a better show than this. His popularity is also slipping. It would appear that many who formerly endorsed him are now recognizing that the senator is interested less in weeding out communists than in securing headlines and in eliminating all those who stand in his way toward gaining greater political power.

The Columbia Broadcasting System should be commended for its stand on, and support of Murrow. Of course, one of these days the senator from Wisconsin, who himself had accepted support of the Communist party in his first campaign for the Senate, will confide to a radio audience, over a rival network, that CBS really stands for "Communist Broadcasting System." He may even give us a quote or two to "prove" it.

McCARTHY'S NEW "DISCLOSURES"

H-Bomb Delayed by Communists

From Alistair Cooke

NEW YORK, APRIL 7.

While the Senate McCarthy Committee was looking for an objective counsel to help it in its inquiry into the senator's dispute with the Army (see page 9), the senator himself was taking a rest from the headlines as complete as he did on his honeymoon.

But last night the Senator went on the offensive again before millions of televiewers when he accepted the invitation of Edward Murrow, the television commentator, to reply to his attack broadcast in his now celebrated programme of March 9. Senator McCarthy recorded a half-hour film in New York last week-end and Mr Murrow played it on his programme without comment last night. The senator sat comfortably all the while behind a desk which was littered with a familiar array of notes and "documentary evidence."

This consisted of photographs of three Communist publications, including the "Daily Worker," which dammed McCarthy and McCarthyism and praised Mr Murrow.

Without elaboration the Senator allowed the television audiences to infer the first and foolproof proposition of McCarthy's Principles of Logic; namely, that if A, a Communist, denounces B, and C also denounces B, then C is a Communist. The Senator described Mr Murrow as "the leader and the cleverest of the jackal pack which is always found at the throat of anyone who dares to expose Communists and traitors."

McCarthy's Mistakes

He wrongly called Mr Murrow the "educational director" of the Columbia Broadcasting System, a post Mr Murrow has not held for nineteen years. He said Mr Murrow was "by his own admission" once a member of the Industrial Workers of the World, the radical terrorist labour group in America during the first two decades of this century. Mr Murrow, in fact, has never admitted being a member, since he has never been one.

The Senator made much of Mr Murrow's youthful association with the Institute of International Education, which was founded in 1919 to arrange student and teacher exchanges with most of the countries of Europe. It was about as conservative and high-minded a project as such things can ever be and had the blessing and support of the ineffable Dr Nicholas Murray Butler, who as president of Columbia University was accused of many things but never of the slightest tinge of pink. Senator McCarthy described this institute as one chosen in the early 1930s "by the Soviet Government to select teachers and students to attend a Communist school in Moscow in 1934 — a selection job that would normally be done by the Russian Secret Police." In fact, the Russians denounced the institute as a centre "of international propaganda" and after 1934 would have nothing to do with it.

The Senator assisted another odious inference by turning the title page of a book dedicated "to my friend E. R. Murrow." It was written by Harold Laski, whom McCarthy described as "an admitted Communist propagandist."

Standard Ammunition

Senator McCarthy spoke in his best latter-day style, with persuasive calm, an earnest resonance, and in the manner of a man who has quietly reconciled himself to martyrdom. It is always a moot point after one of these documentary revelations to decide whether the Senator believes his own "facts" or whether he is not rather a master of the propaganda techniques immortalised by the late George Orwell. One element of the Senator's magnetism is his almost hypnotised abandonment of the process of trial and error. He quietly pronounces something to be a fact, whether it is a fact or a false inference or a half truth or an easily provable falsehood. But once it has been used it becomes standard ammunition and if only by the din of repetition sinks into his hearers' consciousness as an emotional fact. Mr Murrow last night issued a statement refuting the Senator's charges against him and his political associations. If the Senator follows his usual practice he will not deign to take up again the accuracy of the original charges. He will simply pile up an arsenal of other "facts" or move on to the next victim.

At his news conference this morning President Eisenhower was asked if he had any knowledge of Mr Murrow as a subversive character. He replied that he had known Ed Murrow throughout the war and always regarded him as a friend.

Another reporter took up the astonishing charge, which the Senator made for the first time last night, that Communist agents in the United States had managed to "delay our research on the hydrogen bomb, even though our intelligence agencies were reporting day after day that the Russians were feverishly pushing their development of the hydrogen bomb."

The President said he had never heard of it, that he was in close touch with Mr Lewis Strauss, the chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, and that there had been any suggestion [illegible]

March 23, 1954

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Apropos your courageous and most effective fight against McCarthyism, may I call your attention to my own case.

I am the only person who stands cited and indicted for refusing to answer Joe's idiotic line of questioning. The ACLU, the CIO, the United Auto Workers and my own union, the Oil Workers, have all taken a position backing me. I have conducted an offensive of my own across the country, with the backing of my union and branches of the ACLU, along with liberal church people. I estimate I have reached half a million people by radio, TV, etc. in the past few months--a pitiful figure compared with your audience, but about as far as one of McCarthy's victims can hope to reach.

In Dallas, the Republican committee in charge of McCarthy's $100 a plate Lincoln Day dinner agreed to a joint TV interview between Joe and me. Of course Joe ran out when he heard about it, and we appeared tandem on the Texas Newsreel of Feb. 11. NBC says it used the interview nationally as well, but how widely I don't know.

Joe was floored when asked: "Senator, what do you think of Governor Shivers' proposal that all Communists be shot?" He hemmed and hawed and then said he couldn't comment until he had seen "the full speech." Natch! What would Joe do for a racket if all the Communists were shot? For my part, I stuck closely to the thesis that Joe is ~~the~~ Malenkov's best friend in America. The interview was at the Press Club and was handled by the TV station of the Dallas Morning News. That paper, incidentally, carried not a word about it although the Times-Herald gave it quite a story.

I enclose some descriptive material on my case.

Sincerely,

Harvey O'Connor

United States of America

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 83d CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

FACTS ON THE CASE

This is the first and only case pending in the courts challenging the right of Senator McCarthy and his committee to pry into the minds of citizens.

Harvey O'Connor testified under subpoena before the McCarthy Committee on July 14, 1953. He was cited for contempt of the U. S. Senate on July 23. He was indicted by a federal grand jury on Oct. 16.

His attorneys are Leonard B. Boudin of New York; Gerhard Van Arkel of Washington, D. C., counsel for the International Typographical Union-AFL; and Lindsay P. Walden of Denver, Colo., counsel for the Oil Workers International Union.

O'Connor had been grilled in a private hearing before the public hearing was held. No transcript of the private hearing is made available.

O'Connor's crime!

A typical McCarthy fabrication; O'Connor received no royalties on books acquired for State Department overseas libraries and therefore there could have been nothing for "the communist coffers" or for any other coffers.

O'Connor was ordered to answer nine times.

Now it's "the old Dulles State Department!"

The second invitation to plead the Fifth Amendment.

Following text of O'Connor's testimony before the McCarthy committee is reprinted from the Congressional Record:

THE CHAIRMAN. Who is your first witness, Mr. Counsel?

MR. COHN. Harvey O'Connor, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN. Mr. O'Connor, will you take the witness chair?

You are reminded, Mr. O'Connor, that you were administered the oath this morning. You are still under oath.

THE CHAIRMAN. Mr. O'Connor, you have been subpoenaed here today to answer questions in regard to the writings which were purchased by the old Acheson State Department. Before we ask you any questions, may I ask:

Mr. Cohn, has it been established and confirmed by the State Department that Mr. O'Connor's writings have been purchased and have been distributed in various information centers throughout the world?

MR. COHN. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN. Then, Mr. O'Connor, we will ask you this question: At the time you wrote the books which were purchased by the old State Department, were you then a member of the Communist Party?

* * *

MR. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, may I make a brief statement?

THE CHAIRMAN (Senator McCarthy): No. You will answer the question.

MR. O'CONNOR. About my objection to the jurisdiction of this committee?

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, you may make a statement on that.

MR. O'CONNOR. Thank you.

Under the First Amendment to the Constitution, my writings, my books, and my political opinions are of no legitimate concern to this committee. If I have violated any laws in the writings that I have written, that is a proper concern for the law enforcement agencies and not the proper concern of this committee.

THE CHAIRMAN. Will you get nearer to the microphone, Mr. O'Connor, so that we can hear you?

MR. O'CONNOR. My second point would be that this committee has no right to inquire into my writings, under the point of the constitutional limitations on the powers of Congress and its committees. I might say in that regard that I have not known until this moment that my books were in overseas libraries, and most certainly I had nothing whatever to do with their selection there.

In the third place, I would object to the authority of the committee, under the statute by which it was created by Congress, to inquire into my writings or my political views.

THE CHAIRMAN. Just for your information, Mr. O'Connor, we are not concerned with any political views of yours. We would not be concerned about your writings. You are entitled to write whatever you care to write. Any American or anyone else is entitled to purchase your book, your writings. You are here this morning because your writings were purchased by the old Acheson State Department, distributed throughout the world, ostensibly for the purpose of fighting communism. Now, when the taxpayers pay for your books, when the royalties of your books paid by the taxpayers, go into the communist coffers, then this committee is concerned with that. For that reason, I again ask you the question: At the time you wrote the books which were purchased with taxpayers' money and put in our information libraries throughout the world, at that time were you a member of the communist conspiracy?

MR. O'CONNOR. I object to the question on the three grounds I have already stated.

THE CHAIRMAN. You can object. Now you will answer, unless you feel that the answer will tend to incriminate you.

MR. O'CONNOR. I do not feel that the answer will tend to incriminate me.

THE CHAIRMAN. Then you are ordered to answer.

MR. O'CONNOR. I have already answered.

THE CHAIRMAN. I apparently did not hear your answer, then. You are ordered to answer whether or not you were a member of the communist party.

MR. O'CONNOR. On the three grounds I have stated, I have declined to answer.

THE CHAIRMAN. Let us have the record clear, so that we will know what you have declined to answer. I will repeat the question. At the time you wrote the books which were purchased by the old Acheson State Department and distributed in our information centers, were you a member of the communist conspiracy?

MR. O'CONNOR. My political affiliations or lack of political affiliations are no legitimate concern of this committee.

THE CHAIRMAN. Do you refuse to answer?

MR. O'CONNOR. Apparently.

THE CHAIRMAN. Not "apparently." Do you refuse to answer?

MR. O'CONNOR. I refuse to answer.

THE CHAIRMAN. You are refusing on the ground that the answer might tend to incriminate you?

MR. O'CONNOR. I am not asserting the privilege against self-incrimination.

THE CHAIRMAN. You are not asserting the privilege against self-incrimination. All right. You may step down.

Incidentally, I think Senator Mundt wishes that a meeting of the subcommittee be called to have this man immediately cited for contempt. I will call a meeting of this subcommittee at the earliest convenience for that purpose.

Is There Still a Place for the Honest Dissenter?

The federal indictment of Harvey O'Connor of Little Compton, writer, for contempt of Congress heads towards the Supreme Court an important issue involving a citizen's civil rights before a congressional investigation committee.

O'Connor's indictment is the consequence of his asserted right, as a witness before Senator McCarthy's committee, that as a private citizen not holding public office he could not be interrogated on his political beliefs, writings and private affairs.

The same position was maintained by Leo Huberman, who called himself a "Marxist and a Socialist" but not a Communist, and by Corliss Lamont, leftist son of the late partner in the House of Morgan, a philosophy teacher at Columbia, who denied membership in the Communist Party, in their appearances before Senator McCarthy.

The significance of the issue as presented by these three recalcitrant witnesses is that it challenges the scope of the power of investigating committees by invoking the First Amendment, the freedom of speech, religion, press and assembly clause of the Constitution.

Hitherto witnesses who did not want to testify pleaded self-incrimination under the Fifth Amendment. But in the public mind the shelter of the Fifth Amendment became, as the Association of American Universities pointed out, "an indication of probable guilt." The witness who invoked the Fifth Amendment set up in the popular opinion the fixed judgment that he had something to hide.

In the meantime, an important principle was left undefined, one that needed clarification in view of the tremendous expansion of the committee's investigative power into the realm of opinion, thought and belief and the abuses of that power. The issue is: to what extent can a congressional committee enter into the opinions and personal affairs of a private citizen? Are there boundaries beyond which the power of investigation of private citizens by Congress cannot invade?

What about the honest and stubborn dissenter against committee power on the ground of principle, the man who has no ideological axe to grind but believes his private beliefs are no business of Congress? If he invokes the Fifth Amendment, he runs the risk of being branded disloyal by association and unjustly hurting his name.

We hold no brief for the individuals who have challenged the committee investigation on the ground of the First Amendment. Certainly we do not endorse their political beliefs. It is the issue that is of importance. The Supreme Court has never passed directly upon this matter of civil rights. It is a healthy thing, with the right of dissent being challenged as it is, that the issue be threshed out.

How to Stop the Demagogues

The struggle to determine the limits of the Congressional power of inquiry is being edged along, slowly and painfully but with remarkable persistence and courage. In the last few years the relevance of the Fifth Amendment has been established in the courts. But those who invoke its protection are by this fact precluded from testing such limits, nor does the amendment protect the individual against the savage reprisals of private groups. Now, for the first time since 1947, the struggle is centering on the meaning of the guaranties embodied in the First Amendment. Harvey O'Connor and Leo Huberman tendered the first clear-cut challenge on this score. More recently Corliss Lamont has carried the fight a step farther by maintaining, first that the committees cannot inquire into the personal affairs of private citizens and, second, that the committees are usurping the judicial power. This is essentially the position outlined by Philip Wittenberg, who appeared as counsel for Mr. Lamont, in an article in The Nation of May 9 (How to Stop the Demagogues). By not invoking the Fifth Amendment these men have challenged the power of the committees in a manner that makes court tests possible. This is the way to proceed. The power of inquiry must continue to be challenged from as many different standpoints as possible until our courts are finally forced to reassert the supremacy of the Constitution over the whims and biases of committee chairmen.

THE DENVER POST

First Amendment Tester

HARVEY O'CONNOR, who is in Denver this week on his tour of a number of western cities, is making a courageous one-man stand for American civil liberties. He has been indicted for contempt of congress because he refused, on First Amendment grounds (NOT Fifth Amendment), to answer Senator McCarthy's question as to whether or not he was a Communist when he wrote certain books McCarthy's sleuths turned up in an overseas library of the state department. The first amendment, of course, is the one that guarantees free speech and freedom of the press.

O'Connor makes no bones about denying he is or ever was a Communist. But, in effect, he told the investigating senator that it was none of congress's business whether he was or not. He is not a government employe, received no return from the sale of his books to the government, and is not interested in any attempt of McCarthy's to get something on the state department under the Acheson secretaryship. Nor are the contents of his books or their effect at issue.

O'Connor is neither trying to win support for his case nor otherwise to benefit from his speaking tour before it goes to trial. He merely is steamed up over the issue and wants to discuss it with people and let them think about it for themselves. The courts must decide whether he was right or wrong in refusing to answer McCarthy, or whether the senator himself was out of line. And O'Connor hopes his test of the first amendment in such circumstances will go to the supreme court for the first time.

It is an important case that could affect any American citizen. O'Connor may lose, and he knows it. But he is ready to serve a jail sentence if he loses, and he figures even so it is worth the fight for a matter of principle.

You've got to admire a man with such strength of conviction. Not many of us either would or could make such a stand for the sake of what we believe in.

Harvey O'Connor Defies Book-Burner McCarthy

Harvey O'Connor, former publicity director of Oil Workers Intl. Union, was hauled up before Senator Joe McCarthy's infamous mudslinging committee on July 14 and asked if he were a communist.

O'Connor told McCarthy, in effect, to mind his own business. He refused to answer McCarthy's questions on the grounds that his political views were none of the senator's business. x x x

O'Connor was called before the committee as a part of McCarthy's current book-burning campaign because some books written by O'Connor have been placed in overseas information libraries by the U. S. State Department.

O'Connor invoked the First Amendment to the U. S. Constitution in refusing to answer McCarthy's questions. The First Amendment provides that "Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech or of the press."

O'Connor told the committee that authors are not accountable to members of Congress for their political views.

Texas CIO Council Report

Former Texas CIO Man Builds Book-Burning Fire Under McCarthy

Harvey O'Connor, the first Texas CIO man to be called before McCarthy and his mud-slingers, gave the committee something new to think about. He refused to answer the guilt-before-proof question, "Are you a communst?" but did not use the fifth amendment as protection. Instead he invoked the first amendment, which prohibits Congress from making laws which abridge the freedom of speech or of the press. He was called before the committee because some of the several books he has written displeased McCarthy. He told McCarthy, in effect, to mind his own business and let the American people mind theirs for themselves.

It is apparently O'Connor's intention to initiate a test case in which the Supreme Court would have to rule on the constitutionality of McCarthy's self-decreed investigating activities. In a statement to the press O'Connor said, "I believe someone has to take a stand in these matters, and I for one am willing to do so." McCarthy secured a contempt citation from the Senate on July 23. Long and expensive litigation will follow. x x x

Harvey O'Connor Gets Oil Worker Backing

Support for Harvey O'Connor, author and former CIO Oil Workers publicity director, in his refusal to testify on his political beliefs before Sen. McCarthy's investigating subcommittee was voiced editorially in the latest issue of the Intl. Oil Worker, the union's official publication. x x x

Although he refused to answer McCarthy, O'Connor freely answered questions about his political views by Providence, R. I., reporters who met the train when he was en route home from the hearing.

He told the local newspapermen:

"I am not a Communist.

"I have never been a Communist.

"I am perfectly willing to tell anyone how I stand except on demand from such a legislative group. They have no right to inquire into my politics."

DEFIANCE MAKES NEWS!

Washington Daily News

The McCarthy Investigating Committee today was heading for a court test on whether it has the power to subpena private citizens to inquire about their political beliefs, and affiliations.

First witness at today's session of the Senate Investigating Committee refused to answer questions, not on the usual ground of self-incrimination, but on the grounds that under the first amendment to the Constitution his writings and political ideas "are of no concern to this committee."

Harvey O'Connor, author of "Mellon's Millions," also told Sen. Joseph McCarthy his committee was exceeding its authority under the statute that created it by inquiring into his political beliefs. x x x

"My political affiliations or my lack of political affiliations are of no legitimate concern of this committee," Mr. O'Connor replied, emphasizing that he was not asserting a privilege against self-incrimination.

New York Herald-Tribune

Washington, July 14. — Pointedly declining to take refuge in the Fifth Amendment, two authors used other grounds today to refuse to tell the Senate Investigations subcommittee headed by Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy, R., Wis., about books they had written.

A court test of their approach appeared likely when Sen. McCarthy said after the brief testimony of Harvey O'Connor, one of the witnesses, that he felt the subcommittee should be asked immediately to cite the witness for contempt. x x x

Both witnesses justified their refusal to reply on grounds of freedom of speech and of the press, combined with a charge that the subcommittee is exceeding its statutory authority in questioning authors about books used in the library program.

A 57-year-old author said Wednesday night in Denver he will go to jail if necessary to test in court Senator McCarthy's right to question citizens about their spoken or written beliefs or their political affiliations.

Harvey O'Connor, at a press conference preceding a series of speaking engagements in Denver and Boulder, said he was the first person actually to face trial for his refusal to answer the Wisconsin Republican senator's questions on the grounds of the first—not the fifth—amendment to the U. S. constitution. He has been indicted for contempt of congress and will be tried in federal district court in Washington.

Harvey O'Connor, Little Compton Author indicted by a Federal Grand Jury yesterday afternoon on charges of contempt of Congress for his refusal to answer questions before the McCarthy Senate Investigations Subcommittee, said today the action didn't surprise him.

O'Connor said that in a way he welcomes the indictment. "It is the only way to determine whether Senator Joseph R. McCarthy has a right to pry into the political convictions of a citizen," the Little Compton man declared. x x x

O'Connor said today at his Warren's Point home that McCarthy's question was "phony."

"If the Senator wanted to know whether I was or am a Communist he could check the Federal Bureau of Investigation files. They're supposed to have a list of all the Communists," he said.

The author said he declined to answer the question put to him at the Washington hearing because it was so "obviously fake."

O'CONNOR FIGHTS BACK

Harvey O'Connor has been taking the fight for the First Amendment to audiences from Coast to Coast.

He has addressed college groups at Brown, Bard, Amherst and Williams; the University of Chicago and Denver University; churches in Sunday morning pulpit appearances in Philadelphia, Denver, Long Island and Westchester County, New York, and church groups in Denver and Boulder, Colo.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Seattle, Washington; Los Angeles, Calif.; Kansas City, Mo., and elsewhere; civic groups such as the Denver Kiwanis and Chicago City Club; civil liberties organizations in New York, Philadelphia, Denver, Chicago, Boston, Pittsfield, Mass.; Denver, Boulder, Colo.; Austin, Tex.; San Francisco, Calif.; Los Angeles, Calif.; labor organizations in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Fort Worth, Tex., Dallas, Tex., and elsewhere.

O'Connor has also appeared on TV (in addition to the public hearing provided by Senator McCarthy in Washington) and on radio, in many cities from Coast to Coast.

While Senator McCarthy has access, free of charge, to nationwide audiences through TV reaching tens of millions of Americans, O'Connor is reaching a more limited audience — the more limited audience available to the individual citizen who insists that freedom of thought requires also freedom of access to the press, radio and other avenues of communication in a democracy. But although his audiences have measured only in hundreds, compared to McCarthy's thousands, he has been extremely well received.

Challenge to Witch Hunt

An old line of defense is being revived in an attempt to stem the McCarthy-Jenner-Velde intrusions into the private affairs of private citizens. The revival can be traced back to June 11, when Professor Einstein urged American intellectuals to defy Congressional witch hunters and refuse to answer inquisitorial inquiries into their personal beliefs and activities. Then on July 14 Harvey O'Connor, the author of Mellon's Millions, declined to answer McCarthy's questions as to whether he had been a Communist when he wrote books used in government libraries overseas. He made it clear that his refusal was not based upon his right under the Fifth Amendment not to be forced to incriminate himself; rather he based his refusal upon the First Amendment, challenging the right of the McCarthy Committee as an agent of the government to inquire into his writings and personal affairs. The Senate thereupon voted to cite O'Connor for contempt.

Corliss Lamont, the son of Thomas W. Lamont and the author of various writings dealing with Russia, has now taken the same position. x x x But he differed from O'Connor in that he specifically denied that he is now or ever was a member of the Communist Party, a point which was disputed by the indefatigable Louis Budenz.

This First Amendment defense is an honest and thorough challenge to the operations of Congressional committees that are disposed to invade areas where Congress itself dare not tread. Whether the challenge will be successful, however, is another matter. The same basic defense was made by the Hollywood Ten in their defiance of the House Un-American Activities Committee in 1947 and by the directors of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee. Their use of the defense proved futile and they were jailed for contempt. But the Supreme Court declined to review the cases, and there has thus been no definitive judicial adjudication of the validity of this First Amendment defense. Some hope has been expressed that the Supreme Court might now be disposed to rule on the issue. Last March the Court held that the House Select Committee on Lobbying exceeded its authority under a House resolution in seeking to require Edward A. Rumely to disclose the names of those who made bulk purchases of books sold by the Committee for Constitutional Government. In concurring in the result, Justices Douglas and Black reached the constitutional issue now posed by O'Connor and Lamont and stated that the investigative power of Congressional committees is limited by the First Amendment, precluding them from inquiring into personal and private affairs.

The time may very well be at hand when the individual's right of privacy will receive a long overdue recognition from the courts. The O'Connor and Lamont cases provide the opportunity for that recognition.

O'Connor Makes His Point . . .

By EDWARD J. MILNE
Bulletin Washington Correspondent

Washington — A private citizen boldly told Joe McCarthy yesterday to mind his own business, but the Eisenhower administration continued to be less forthright in its dealings with the chairman of the Senate investigating committee. x x x

The private citizen was Harvey O'Connor, author of "Mellon's Millions" and other books, some of which have found their way to the shelves of U. S. overseas libraries being investigated by McCarthy's permanent Senate investigating committee.

Like many an earlier witness before the McCarthy committee, O'Connor refused to say whether he had been a Communist. But he brought a fresh approach to the refusal.

Instead of pleading that his answer might incriminate him — when witnesses do that they have the protection of the Constitution and there's nothing frustrated senators can do about it — O'Connor refused to answer on the ground that authors are not accountable to members of Congress for their political views.

"Not Such An Authority"

"If the books violate any law," O'Connor said, "the author is subject to appropriate action by the law enforcement authorities, and Congress is not such an authority."

What's more, he went on, the McCarthy committee was not discharging a legislative function in asking his political views, for it wasn't he who put his books into the overseas libraries.

He also declared the inquiry about his political beliefs to be beyond the powers of the investigating committee under the statute creating it.

O'Connor in effect was deliberately inviting McCarthy to try to get the Senate to vote a contempt of Senate citation against him. Lest anyone think he was indulging in quixotic tilting at powerful political windmills, his testimony should be considered in the light of the Senate speech a day earlier by Senator Monroney (D-Okla) attacking McCarthy's aims and methods in the bluntest fashion of the present session.

"I fail to find that even by the most generous stretching of its jurisdiction has the (McCarthy) committee the carte blanche authority to act in the name of the United States Senate in many of the fields it has preempted," Monroney said.

O'Connor Bucking McCarthy to 'Stiffen Backbones'

By JAMES BAAR

LITTLE COMPTON, R. I., Oct. 30 (UP)—Author Harvey O'Connor, charged with contempt of the Senate, said today he deliberately defied Senator Joseph R. McCarthy's Investigating Subcommittee to force a "test of McCarthyism in the courts."

"McCarthy is right on the Hitler line," O'Connor said in an interview at his seaside home in this old Yankee village. "First cowing and terrorizing, then trying to take over."

O'Connor said that someone "has to take a stand. If we can establish the rights of citizens not to have to be subjected to McCarthy's smears and terrorism, we'll have made a beginning. We'll stiffen some backbones."

A former labor newsman and caustic biographer of millionaires, O'Connor refused to tell the McCarthy Committee whether he was "a member of the Communist conspiracy" when he wrote books later included in American overseas libraries.

"Of course, I'm fortunate," said O'Connor as he sat in his dining room sipping coffee. "I can afford all this and I don't give a damn about going to jail. If, like so many others who come up against McCarthy, I had to worry about feeding the wife and kiddies, I would have said, 'No, I never was a Communist,' and gone home.

Boston Evening Globe — SPORTS FINAL NEWS

"But here's a chance to do something. And there's no way to get this thing adjudicated in the courts unless you challenge him."

O'Connor said the government "has no right to ask a citizen what his politics are."

"McCarthy's question was phony anyway," he said. "I've never been a Communist. I've known plenty of them. Anyone connected with labor as long as I've been has known them. It never had any appeal for me. But if McCarthy really wanted to know about my past he wouldn't ask me. He'd ask the FBI."

Of course, O'Connor said, "that's not McCarthy's purpose."

"His purpose is to smear and use me and others as a club—as pawns. First against the New Deal. He's beaten them pretty well now; if you were a New Dealer, ipso facto you're a Red. The next target is the liberal Republicans . . . Eisenhower himself. Then he'd have just about the whole bloody thing: No one left but Joe McCarthy and his admirers."

By FREDERICK C. OTHMAN

WASHINGTON, July 18—I do wish the lovers and the haters of Joe McCarthy would keep their hobnailed boots off my neck. x x x

Maybe it's the heat. All I know for sure now is that the situation grows more outlandish by the minute. Take the latest proceedings in the Senate caucus room:

Everybody was there, including the TV men with their hot lamps, but the senator, himself. He was downstairs in the coffee shoppe trying to grab some refreshment and explain simultaneously to two dozen eager correspondents what was cooking. x x x

He strode into the chamber 15 minutes late, followed by the reporters and two Republican members of his committee. The Democrats weren't there. They'd resigned from the enterprise because of what they called the high-handed way Senator McCarthy was running it. He said they were nice fellows. He liked them and he wished they'd come back. x x x

So he banged his gavel and called up

Sen. Joe's $64 Query is Evaded

Harvey O'Connor, an author, whose books had been placed in State Dept. libraries around the world. The question was whether O'Connor was a Communist and, if so, was the purchase of his books a proper way to spend the taxpayers' money.

O'Connor was a striking-looking citizen in a greenish suit. His hair was dark brown, his eyebrows slate gray, his mustache snow-white and his defiance of Senator Joe complete.

He said his political beliefs were no concern of the senator's. As for his books, all he did was write 'em. Not until this minute, he said, did he know the government had bought them. Yes, insisted Senator Joe, but was he a Red?

O'Connor said he objected. Senator Joe said all right, now answer. O'Connor said he would not, either, and he was not claiming that his answer might incriminate him. He said he still insisted his politics were his own business.

So the senator told him to step down and announced that he'd seek to have him cited for contempt.

Who is O'Connor?

HARVEY O'CONNOR was born on March 29, 1897, in Minneapolis, Minn., and attended schools in St. Paul, Minn., and Tacoma, Wash.

After working in the logging camps of the Pacific Northwest and serving in the U. S. Merchant Marine during World War I, he became labor editor of the Seattle Union Record, the nation's first trade union daily, 1919-1924. He was assistant editor of the Journal of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in Cleveland, O., 1924-1927; eastern bureau manager of Federated Press, the labor news service, 1927-1930; and editor and publicity director of the Oil Workers International Union-CIO, 1945-1948, of which he is still a member.

His books include: Mellon's Millions, John Day, 1933; Steel-Dictator, John Day, 1935; The Guggenheims, Covici-Friede, 1937; The Astors, Knopf, 1941; History of the Oil Workers International Union, 1950.

He lives in Little Compton, R. I., where he is finishing a book on current trends in the oil industry.

In 1930 O'Connor married Jessie Lloyd; they have two children, Stephen, 13, and Kathleen, 11.

While a resident of Chicago, 1937-1945, O'Connor was chairman of the education committee of the City Club and a member of its board of governors; member of the board of the Chicago Civil Liberties Committee (American Civil Liberties Union branch); chairman of the residents' committee, Hull-House; member of the Unitarian Church (Evanston and the Third Church); co-editor of the book, Civil Liberties in Illinois.

In Fort Worth, Texas, where he served as publicity director for the Oil Workers International Union, he was president of the Tarrant County Industrial Union Council-CIO, chairman of the Tarrant County labor legislative council, and a founder of the Fort Worth Unitarian Church.

In Little Compton, R. I., a Yankee village on the shores of the Atlantic, he reports membership in the Parent-Teachers Association, the Men's Club of the Congregational Church, and in the Sakonnet Yacht Club.

An Editorial

As reported in this and the July 27 issue of the Oil Worker, Harvey O'Connor has stood on legal and constitutional grounds and refused to answer an impudent and impertinent question asked by Sen. Joe McCarthy. As a result, the Senate has now cited O'Connor for contempt and we expect that he will have to stand trial in a federal court.

Harvey O'Connor was publicity director of OWIU from 1945 to 1948 and still maintains his membership in Local 208. He is known, both personally and for his work with the union, by literally thousands of OWIU members. These members admire and respect O'Connor. They believe him to be a good man and a good citizen.

We believe Harvey O'Connor did a good thing in refusing to answer Joe McCarthy. We believe that McCarthy served no good purpose by asking the question. We believe that he had no legal right to do it. We believe more citizens should boldly oppose, as O'Connor has, the McCarthy witchhunt and smear campaign.

We hope that when O'Connor stands trial the jury sees fit to endorse his stand. We are on Harvey O'Connor's side of this argument every inch of the way.

SEEKING TEST CASE:

Harvey O'Connor Defies Book-Burner McCarthy

Harvey O'Connor, former publicity director of Oil Workers Intl. Union, was hauled up before Senator Joe McCarthy's infamous mudslinging committee on July 14 and asked if he were a communist.

O'Connor told McCarthy, in effect, to mind his own business. He refused to answer McCarthy's questions on the grounds that his political views were none of the senator's business.

Senator McCarthy immediately indicated that he would seek to have O'Connor indicted for contempt of Congress.

O'Connor's refusal to answer McCarthy's questions was based on his strong feelings against the gestapo tactics of McCarthy and does not reflect any hesitation on his part to discuss his politics with friends.

En route home from Washington, where he appeared before the McCarthy committee, O'Connor was met at the Providence, Rhode Island, railroad station by local newspaper reporters and asked his political views.

He told the reporters:

"I am not a communist.

"I have never been a communist.

"I'm perfectly willing to tell anyone how I stand except on demand from such a legislative group. They have no right to inquire into my politics.

"I'm interested in their politics, as a voter. It's they who are running for office. I'm not."

O'Connor was called before the committee as a part of McCarthy's current book-burning campaign because some books written by O'Connor have been placed in overseas information libraries by the U. S. State Department.

O'Connor invoked the First Amendment to the U. S. Constitution in refusing to answer McCarthy's questions. The First Amendment provides that "Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech or of the press."

O'Connor told the committee that authors are not accountable to members of Congress for their political views.

"If the books violate any law," O'Connor said, "the author is subject to appropriate action by the law enforcement authorities, and Congress is not such an authority."

He said the McCarthy committee was not discharging a legislative function in asking his political views, for it wasn't he who put his books into overseas libraries.

As a matter of fact, the books were written by O'Connor several years ago and he was not even aware that the State Department had put them in overseas libraries.

From newspaper dispatches, it is not clear which of O'Connor's books were involved in McCarthy's latest book-burning effort.

Apparently one of them was the official "History of Oil Workers Intl. Union," written by O'Connor under a commission granted by the executive council of the union in 1948 and published by the union in 1950.

The union has been asked by various government agencies at various times for copies of the book for overseas distribution and has on all occasions supplied copies of the book, without charge, as a service to the government. This was the last book written by O'Connor. Since writing it, he has been writing a book about the oil industry, but it has not been completed.

Many years earlier O'Connor wrote several other books, including "Mellon's Millions," a biography of Andrew W. Mellon, the Pittsburg financier, published in 1933 by John Day; "Steel Dictator," a study of the steel industry, published in 1935 by John Day; "The Guggenheims," a biography, published by Covici Friede in 1937; and "The Astors," a biography, published by Knopf in 1941.

O'CONNOR

The entire matter of O'Connor's summons before the McCarthy committee was carried out in the usual high-handed methods employed by that committee.

June 30, the phone in O'Connor's home in Little Compton, Rhode Island rang and the speaker on the phone identified himself as Roy M. Cohn, representing the McCarthy committee. (Cohn is the gumshoe boy, who, along with G. David Schine, made a flying tour of Europe a few months ago and terrorized the European employes of Mr. Dulles' State Department.)

Cohn — or the voice representing itself as Cohn — told O'Connor that inasmuch as copies of his books had been found in overseas libraries, the committee wanted to question him on Friday, July 3 (three days later) in New York. The voice said the telephone message would be confirmed by a telegram.

Late the night of July 1, two days before the appointed time, Western Union telephoned a telegram signed by McCarthy bidding O'Connor to come to New York.

On the eve of the date for the questioning, however, O'Connor still had not received written confirmation of his summons.

He ignored the telephoned summonses, believing them not valid, and taking the position that he would not testify unless a formal subpoena was issued.

Several days later, McCarthy did issue a formal subpoena calling O'Connor to Washington and O'Connor did appear in response to it on July 14.

In refusing to answer McCarthy's questions and in basing his refusal on the First Amendment, O'Connor was making a test case of the validity of Joe McCarthy's investigating activities.

Shortly before appearing before the committee, O'Connor wrote Sen. Green of Rhode Island that he would not recognize the validity or the constitutionality of the McCarthy committee's procedure.

"I realize that the Supreme Court will not let that stand in the way of me going to jail for 'contempt'," he told Sen. Green, "but I believe someone has to take a stand in these matters, and I for one am willing to do so."

As of the time this paper went to press, McCarthy had not secured a contempt indictment against O'Connor, although it was still considered likely that he would do so. Such an indictment undoubtedly would lead to a long and expensive period of litigation. If convicted, O'Connor would be subject to a federal prison sentence.

O'Connor is a veteran trade unionist, labor journalist and author. He has worked on various labor newspapers during his career in that field, beginning in 1918. When OWIU established the International Oil Worker, O'Connor was appointed as its first editor and assumed his duties Jan. 1, 1945. He continued as editor and publicity director until he resigned effective June 1, 1948.

Shortly before he left the staff, the International Executive Council entered into an agreement with O'Connor providing that he would write an official history of the union. During the next two years he did extensive research work and traveled throughout the oil country in preparing the book, which was completed and published in 1950 by the union. Writing the book was a money-losing proposition for O'Connor. The payment he received from the union was insufficient to cover even the expenses of the travel necessary to gather information.

Since leaving the OWIU staff, O'Connor has been living in Little Compton, Rhode Island and devoting his time to research and writing. However, he was asked by Pres. O. A. Knight to accept an emergency assignment doing public relations work for the union in California during the 1948 strike. Within a matter of hours after getting the call, he flew to California and did strike publicity work for several weeks.

Since leaving the staff, O'Connor has contributed occasional articles to the International Oil Worker, including a series of stories about oil workers in the Caribbean area and another series about the Mexican oil industry. He maintains his membership in OWIU's Fort Worth, Tex., Local 208.

Federal Grand Jury Indicts Harvey O'Connor for Contempt

Harvey O'Connor, OWIU member, former publicity director of the International union, and author of OWIU's official history, was indicted for contempt of Congress Oct. 16 by a federal grand jury in Washington, D. C.

The indictment was requested by Sen. Joseph McCarthy (Rep.-Wisc.) last summer after O'Connor refused to answer a question asked of him by McCarthy.

The question asked was whether O'Connor was a "member of the Communist conspiracy" at the time he wrote certain books which were placed on overseas library shelves by the State Department. O'Connor refused to answer the question because he said it interfered with his freedom of speech and press as guaranteed in the First Amendment to the Constitution and because he did not believe McCarthy's committee had a legal right to conduct such investigations.

A few hours after refusing to answer McCarthy's question, O'Connor told newspaper reporters that he was not and never had been a communist, but that he did not think McCarthy had the right to call any citizen before his committee and inquire into his politics.

The indictment for contempt made by the Washington grand jury means that O'Connor will be tried in Federal District Court in Washington, presumably sometime within the next few months. If convicted, he will be subject to a sentence in federal prison.

After the indictment, O'Connor told newspaper reporters at his home in Little Compton, Rhode Island, that in a way he welcomed the indictment.

"It is the only way to determine whether Senator Joseph R. McCarthy has a right to pry into the political convictions of a citizen," he said.

O'Connor said the question was phony. "If the Senator wanted to know whether I was or am a Communist he could check the Federal Bureau of Investigation files. They're supposed to have a list of all the Communists," he said.

In this newspaper interview, coming right after the indictment, O'Connor again emphasized that he has never been a Communist and said he was "getting tired of telling people about it." He said he was an innocent bystander in a feud between McCarthy and the Dean Acheson crowd.

"I resent being used as a tool in this fight between McCarthy and the former State Department leaders," he asserted.

O'Connor has repeatedly pointed out that he had nothing to do with the distribution of his books to overseas libraries and that they were distributed without his knowledge by the State Department. Books involved include "The Guggenheims," "The Astors," and "The History of Oil Workers Intl. Union."

Oil Workers Intl. Union has voiced its support of O'Connor in the position he has taken before McCarthy. A number of OWIU locals also have written O'Connor complimenting him on his stand and assuring him of their support.

O'Connor was publicity director for the International from Jan. 1, 1945 to June 1, 1948. Between 1948 and 1950 he wrote the OWIU History, on commission of the International Executive Council.

Senate Indicts O'Connor For Defying McCarthy

A resolution citing Harvey O'Connor, OWIU member and former OWIU publicity director, for contempt of the Senate has been rammed through the U. S. Senate.

The resolution was passed by motion of Sen. Knowland, Republican of California. The Congressional Record account of the passage shows that there was no debate on the question and no vote. Presumably the resolution was of the type which is considered automatically adopted unless objection is raised from the Senate floor. As a matter of so-called "Senatorial courtesy," such resolutions rarely are objected to. They run through in cut-and-dried fashion.

Following adoption of the resolution, Sen. McCarthy, Wisconsin Republican, received permission of the Senate to read into the record a report of O'Connor's appearance before his investigating subcommittee. It was because of O'Connor's refusals to answer a question by McCarthy that the contempt citation was issued.

O'Connor's case is now in the hands of the Department of Justice, which presumably will seek an indictment from a Washington grand jury. If the grand jury indicts, O'Connor will be tried for contempt in a federal district court in Washington.

The specific question asked O'Connor by McCarthy was this:

"At the time you wrote the books which were x x x put in information libraries throughout the world, at that time were you a member of the Communist conspiracy?"

As reported in detail in the last issue of the Oil Worker, O'Connor refused to answer on the grounds that McCarthy had no legal or constitutional right to an answer. In speaking with newspaper reporters later, O'Connor freely and readily stated that he was not a communist, that he had never been a communist, and that he was ready to say so to anyone except on demand from such groups as McCarthy's, which have no right to ask the question.

Following is the full text of O'Connor's testimony before the McCarthy committee:

Mr. O'CONNOR: Mr. Chairman, may I make a brief statement?

The CHAIRMAN (Senator McCarthy): No. You will answer the question.

Mr. O'CONNOR: About my objection to the jurisdiction of this committee?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, you may make a statement on that.

Mr. O'CONNOR: Thank you.

Under the First Amendment to the Constitution, my writings, my books, and my political opinions are of no legitimate concern to this committee. If I have violated any laws in the writings that I have written, that is a proper concern for the law enforcement agencies and not the proper concern of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN Will you get nearer to the microphone, Mr. O'Connor, so that we can hear you?

Mr. O'CONNOR: My second point would be that this committee has no right to inquire into my writings, under the point of the constitutional limitations on the powers of Congress and its committees. I might say in that regard that I have not known until this moment that my books were in overseas libraries, and most certainly I had nothing whatever to do with their selection there.

In the third place, I would object to the authority of the committee, under the statute by which it was created by Congress, to inquire into my writings or my political views.

The CHAIRMAN: Just for your information, Mr. O'Connor, we are not concerned with any political views of yours. We would not be concerned about your writings. You are entitled to write whatever you care to write. Any American or anyone else is entitled to purchase your book, your writings. You are here this morning because your writings were purchased by the old Acheson State Department, distributed throughout the world, ostensibly for the purpose of fighting communism. Now, when the taxpayers pay for your books, when the royalties of your books, paid by the taxpayers, go into the communist coffers, then this committee is concerned with that. For that reason, I again ask you the question: At the time you wrote the books which were purchased with taxpayers' money and put in our information libraries throughout the world, at that time were you a member of the communist conspiracy?

Mr. O'CONNOR: I object to the question on the three grounds I have already stated.

The CHAIRMAN: You can object. Now you will answer, unless you feel that the answer will tend to incriminate you.

Mr. O'CONNOR: I do not feel that the answer will tend to incriminate me.

The CHAIRMAN: Then you are ordered to answer.

Mr. O'CONNOR: I have already answered.

The CHAIRMAN: I apparently did not hear your answer, then. You are ordered to answer whether or not you were a member of the communist party.

Mr. O'CONNOR: On the three grounds I have stated, I have declined to answer.

The CHAIRMAN: Let us have the record clear, so that we will know what you have declined to answer. I will repeat the question. At the time you wrote the books which were purchased by the old Acheson State Department and distributed in our information centers, were you a member of the communist conspiracy?

Mr. O'CONNOR: My political affiliations or lack of political affiliations are no legitimate concern of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN: Do you refuse to answer?

Mr. O'CONNOR: Apparently.

The CHAIRMAN: Not "apparently." Do you refuse to answer?

Mr. O'CONNOR: I refuse to answer.

The CHAIRMAN: You are refusing on the ground that the answer might tend to incriminate you?

Mr. O'CONNOR: I am not asserting the privilege against self-incrimination.

The CHAIRMAN: You are not asserting the privilege against self-incrimination. All right. You may step down.

Incidentally, I think Senator Mundt wishes that a meeting of the subcommittee be called to have this man immediately cited for contempt. I will call a meeting of this subcommittee at the earliest convenience for that purpose.

Your other witness, Mr. Cohn?

Fighter for Freedom

Harvey O'Connor, who visited and spoke in Denver last week, is a shining symbol of the struggle to cleanse this nation of the disease known as mccarthyism, just as the recent disgraceful episode in Norwalk, Conn., is a symptom—and one of the most shocking symptoms so far—of the disease itself. Thus two events, two thousand miles apart in geographical distance, converge to frame and focus the dilemma which this country faces.

In Norwalk, leaders of a Veterans of Foreign Wars post have set themselves up as spies, thought police and judges over their fellow citizens. They have taken it upon themselves to report to the FBI all those whose expressions or activities—which they will keep under close surveillance—cast suspicion upon their beliefs or motives.

Seldom has there been a more flagrant violation of the rights of men, a more agonizing distillation of the poison of mccarthyism.

While all this was going on, Harvey O'Connor, of Little Compton, Rhode Island, almost a neighbor of the Norwalk inquisitors, was speaking in Colorado.

Seldom has the assault on our cherished freedoms been exposed in all its stark, utter nakedness as it was to the citizens of this state by Mr. O'Connor—and it was heartening how many of them did avail themselves of the opportunity to hear him—in his many personal, radio and TV appearances. He seemed to possess the faculty of piercing to the heart of the issue in simple, down-to-earth language. Thus, in relating his ordeal before the McCarthy inquisition, he observed:

"When a public servant presumes to demand to know a citizen's political opinions he is no longer a servant, but a master." Has the totalitarian reach toward thought control ever been better and yet more simply expressed?

Or, when he asserted that, since the first amendment to the Constitution states that Congress "shall make no law. . . abridging the freedom of speech or of the press . . ." then Congress has no right to terrorize the minds of men by conducting inquisitions whose only aim must be such legislation.

But what made O'Connor's remarks all the more pregnant with meaning for his listeners was the fact that he himself faces a one to twelve month prison sentence if convicted of the contempt for which he was cited by McCarthy for refusing to answer the question of whether he was "a member of the Communist conspiracy."

He faces his forthcoming trial with full awareness of its implications for the future of democracy and freedom in this country. He knows, as all who hear him know, that he is not a Communist or a conspirator. Yet his country—the country whose welfare he cherishes—is trying to jail him for doing his best to uphold its own shining tradition of freedom of conscience. A lesser man in his position might easily turn bitter, lose faith in this country's institutions and adopt a cynical attitude akin to the Communists'—and Fascists'—own scorn of man's innate and sacred dignity.

But not O'Connor. As he puts it, he is taking this risk in order to prove that freedom is not dead in this country—that the Constitution and the founding fathers were right, and the little Hitlers and VFW fuehrers of today are wrong.

Our money is on the fighting Irishman from Little Compton—and on the millions of fighting Americans who have not been brain-washed by the wave of inquisition.

MIND OF YOUR OWN

Harvey O'Connor's Stand

A man knows he has a right to his home, to his bank account and his car. Anyone who tampers with such possessions is called a robber. Is the mind of man less precious?

Harvey O'Connor thinks not. Put to the test, challenged to make a crucial decision, he decided to practice what he preached and to stand up for his rights as a free citizen in a free country.

He was quietly at work at his home in Little Compton, Rhode Island on June 30 when he got a telephone call. Writing books is O'Connor's business and the new book he was working on was all about Oil. He is an authority on the subject. The phone call was from a person who said he was Roy Cohn of the Senate Investigating Committee. The voice stated that O'Connor's books had been found on the shelves of the Overseas Libraries and the Committee wanted to question him.

The time was when the information that an author's books were in any library, anywhere, would be a matter of pride. This time it was different. Almost overnight a book was the same as a stick of dynamite.

O'Connor found it hard to believe in the voice. Taken with the facts, it seemed more likely to be a hoax.

He was minding his own business. He had broken no laws. He was at his work, peaceably, as any other man who goes to work and does what he has to do. He had a family and at the end of the day they all sat around on the front porch admiring the sailboats passing by at sea. O'Connor knew his books, inside out. He wrote them. Libraries had known them for years. His publishers were in high repute. When he wrote Mellon's Millions, a biography of Andrew W. Mellon; Steel Dictator, a study of the steel industry; The Guggenheims, a biography; The Astors, a biography, no objections had been raised anywhere. On the contrary.

This was the first time he had ever heard about any books of his on any Overseas Library shelves. He hadn't made a point of peddling his work to the State Department. He had never had any royalties from the sale of such books to the State Department that he knew of. It was all news to him. But now a mysterious voice over the phone tried to make him feel guilty about something.

That's one way to rob a man. To try to make him feel guilty. But O'Connor didn't intend to be robbed. He sat tight and decided to disregard this mystery voice. Even when a telegram followed the voice, signed "Joe McCarthy" and "confirming telephonic directions" he remained incredulous. This high handed method wasn't the legal way to summon witnesses. O'Connor would abide by the law. When another message came announcing that the hearing had been postponed to "Tuesday, July 5," O'Connor was more suspicious than ever. For no such date appeared on the calendar. Tuesday was July 7. O'Connor sat back and waited.

McCarthy had finally to submit to legal procedure to get his man. He issued a subpoena in valid form. This was for July 14 and O'Connor responded at once and went to Washington.

The meeting of the Committee took place at 10:45 a.m. that day with Senator Joseph McCarthy, chairman, presiding.

Books may have started the inquiry but once McCarthy had established the fact that books by O'Connor had been purchased and distributed in various information centers about the world, books were the last thing in McCarthy's mind. Had McCarthy ever read a book by O'Connor? From the evidence, it is fair to say, this is doubtful. Only one question was important to McCarthy. Was O'Connor a member of the Communist Party at the time he wrote the books?

O'Connor was prepared for the question. He had decided that there was only one answer he could make. Whatever he said had to be in line with his life and all he had written. This late in the day he couldn't cut himself into pieces, not for anyone. Certainly not for Joe McCarthy. He could hardly go back on the First Amendment, now. It had been FIRST with the founding fathers and it was the ground on which free men had to stand or fall. He might have used the Fifth Amendment and so escaped the risk of a possible jail sentence. It was a lawful and honorable course to take but to use it left a loophole for McCarthy to escape for further questioning of other private citizens. By sticking to the First Amendment, O'Connor saw a chance to bring the entire issue out into the open for men to see.

So he answered McCarthy with a challenge of his own.

O'Connor said: "Under the first amendment to the Constitution, my writings, my books and my political opinions are of no legitimate concern to this committee. If I have violated any laws in the writings I have written, that is the proper concern for the law enforcement agencies and not the proper concern of this committee."

He made a second point: "This committee has no right to inquire into my writing, under the point of constitutional limitations on the powers of Congress and its committees. I might say in this regard that I have not known until this moment that my books were in Overseas Libraries and most certainly had nothing whatever to do with their selection."

His third point stated: "In the third place I would object to the authority of the committee, under the statute by which it was created by Congress, to inquire into my writings or my political views."

McCarthy answered: "You can object. Now will you answer, unless you feel that the answer will tend to incriminate you."

O'Connor: "I do not feel that the answer will tend to incriminate me."

McCarthy: "Then you are ordered to answer."

O'Connor: "I have already answered."

McCarthy once more offered O'Connor the privilege of refusing to answer on the grounds of self-incrimination and once more O'Connor refused. He was then ordered to step down.

Who overstepped his right? Did O'Connor, a private citizen, take advantage by rejecting McCarthy's right to question him? Or did McCarthy, as head of a standing Committee of the Senate in Washington, whose powers are clearly defined under Rule XXV section (g) go beyond his allotted authority? What, exactly, is McCarthy authorized to investigate?

McCarthy is chairman of the Senate Committee on Government Operations, known until last year as the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department. This is a kind of super-auditing body whose changed name did not alter the original purpose or authority of this committee. According to the Rules, McCarthy is NOT given any authority to inquire into the political beliefs and associations even of persons employed by the government, much less of persons not on the public payroll.

But he subpoenaed O'Connor to Washington for exactly that purpose.

O'Connor's answer to such a question was none of the Committee's business. The government also buys cars for use overseas. Has Ford ever been summoned to Washington to be asked probing questions about his personal views? A book is as easy to decipher as a car. A car has many parts; a book words, paragraphs and chapters. Anyone who can read can see what it is.

O'Connor's books say what he learned about life. Born in Minnesota, O'Connor has been working at the problem of how men live most of his life. When he got out of high school in Tacoma, Washington, he went to work in the logging camps of the Northwest. What he learned there led to the desk of the Seattle Union Record, the first daily union paper every published. As a cub reporter, labor editor, city editor and news editor, O'Connor sharpened the tools of his trade. But the material to work with was men and society and he never stopped inquiring into the why and wherefore. You can read the output of his thirty years of exploration and discovery in his books—and many people have. Here and abroad, he has made an honored name for himself as a man who has taken pains to know his field.

If it is a crime to specialize in the fate of people who work, day in and day out, and to wish for a quickened, brightened life for every citizen, then O'Connor has committed many a grave offense. But he is in good company. No attempt to erase the blackboard of our history can wipe out all those names.

It is McCarthy's error to imagine that people can totally forget past history. To forget the meaning of history is to sell one's birthright to freedom. But McCarthy can and has brought confusion. The cure for the crisis of our times may be complicated but it is only hopeless when the door to inquiry and criticism is slammed tight.

WE should get it straight. McCarthy is not letting in light upon darkness when he says in effect: Think as I do—or else.

Was O'Connor unwilling to say if he had ever been a Communist or only unwilling to answer McCarthy's unlawful questioning? He answered the reporter who met the train on which he returned from Washington to Providence. The reporter asked, "Have you ever been a Communist?"

O'Connor answered, "I am not a Communist. I have never been a Communist. I am perfectly willing to tell anyone how I stand except on demand from such a legislative group."

McCarthy is not helping his country to solve its problems by attacking language, the most human of all man's tools. You can't separate the fate of the spoken and written word from the common fate of man's condition on earth.

To hand over language to top-sergeants, to bark orders at it, is to bring man himself to the goosestep. Even a child knows this and resents it. To think and to speak freely is the law of our free land. Variety is an organism. Uniformity is a mechanism. We say, variety is life. Uniformity is death. But mere declamation gets nowhere. The deed has to back up the word.

When Harvey O'Connor said NO to McCarthy, that was a deed.

For such a deed he was cited for contempt on July 23. The citation went to the U. S. Attorney for the District of Columbia who had no choice in the matter of presenting the case to the Grand Jury. A Senate citation is mandatory and the U. S. Attorney must act. He might have told the Grand Jury that in his judgment there was no case. But in the present climate of Washington is this to be expected? The answer came on October 16 when the Federal Grand Jury of the District of Columbia indicted Harvey O'Connor for contempt of the Senate.

O'Connor will face trial. If he is convicted he could go to jail for up to a year. If he is acquitted, the Bill of Rights will be back once more in the Constitution where it belongs for the use of every citizen. Not in McCarthy's pocket.

ESCRITOR OBRERO DESAFIA EL INQUISICIONISMO DE McCARTHY

LA creciente controversia suscitada entre los elementos liberales y progresistas de los Estados Unidos y el Senador McCarthy por las prácticas inquisitoriales y totalitarias utilizadas por éste en el curso de las investigaciones realizadas por el Comité Senatorial que preside, está llegando a su climax. Recientemente, el escritor obrero Harvey O'Connor, miembro de la Unión Internacional de Trabajadores Petroleros (OWIU) y antiguo director de publicidad de dicha organización sindical, ha sido procesado por "desacato" por negarse a contestar preguntas de dicho comité que O'Connor consideró como cuestiones personales y sobre las cuales la Constitución de los Estados Unidos no ha dado jurisdicción al Poder Legislativo.

El punto focal de esta controversia estriba en que O'Connor basó su negativa en los derechos garantizados por la Enmienda I de la Constitución que dice:

"El Congreso no aprobará ninguna ley con respecto al establecimiento de religión, o "prohibiendo el libre ejercicio de la misma; o limitando la libertad de palabra o "de la prensa o el derecho del pueblo a reunirse pacíficamente y elevar peticiones al "gobierno para la corrección de injusticias".

Hasta el presente el Comité de McCarthy ha aceptado como base para negarse a contestar, los derechos garantizados por la Enmienda V de la Constitución que otorga a los individuos el derecho a "no declarar en contra de sí mismos". Esta enmienda lleva implícita la aceptación de culpabilidad.

La Unión de Trabajadores del Petróleo ha declarado su apoyo decisivo a O'Connor en el proceso que se avecina y que será de suma trascendencia en el futuro, pués él determinará hasta que punto son efectivos en la práctica el derecho a la libre expresión del pensamiento, la libertad de credo político, e implícitamente el secreto de las urnas.

El Sr. O'Connor, que no tuvo inconveniente en contestar libremente a los periodistas que lo interrogaron, afirmó que no era, ni nunca había sido comunista, pero consideró que el Comité de McCarthy estaba infringiendo sus derechos constitucionales al interrogarle. La pregunta específica hecha por McCarthy a O'Connor fué la siguiente: "Cuando Ud. escribió los libros que fueron puestos en las bibliotecas de información a través del mundo, en esa época, ¿era Ud. miembro de la conspiración comunista?

El Senado aprobó una resolución por moción presentada por el Senador Knowland, republicano de California, por la cual se cita al Sr. Harvey O'Connor por "desacato" al Congreso. La moción fué aprobada sin debate y sin votación. El caso de O'Connor se encuentra ahora en manos del Departamento de Justicia.

A continuación transcribimos el texto completo del testimonio de O'Connor ante el Comité de McCarthy:

(A reprint)

O'Connor.— Sr. Presidente, me permite hacer una breve declaración?

El Presidente (Senador McCarthy).— No; Ud. contestará las preguntas.

O'Connor.— Sobre mis objecciones en cuanto a la jurisdicción de este comité?

El Presidente.— Sí, puede hacer una declaración sobre eso.

O'Connor.— Gracias.

De acuerdo con la Enmienda I de la Constitución, mis escritos, mis libros y mis opiniones políticas no constituyen una preocupación legítima de este comité. Si he violado alguna ley en mis escritos, ello es preocupación correspondiente a los organismos encargados de ejecutar las leyes y no preocupación que corresponda a este comité.

El Presidente.— Quiere Ud. aproximarse algo más a los micrófonos, Sr. O'Connor, de modo que podamos oirle

O'Connor.— Mi segundo punto es que este comité no tiene derecho a inquirir sobre mis escritos de acuerdo con las limitaciones constitucionales de los derechos del Congreso y sus comités. Debo decir con relación a esto, que hasta este momento no sabía que mis libros estuvieran en las bibliotecas de ultramar y muy ciertamente, no tuve absolutamente nada que ver con su selección.

En tercer lugar, he de objetar la autoridad de este comité, de acuerdo con el estatuto por el cual fué creado por el Congreso, para inquirir sobre mis escritos o mis puntos de vista políticos.

El Presidente.— Para su conocimiento Sr. O'Connor; no estamos interesados en sus opiniones políticas. No nos preocupamos de sus escritos. Tiene Ud. el derecho de escribir lo que mejor le plazca. Cualquier americano u otra persona cualquiera tiene el derecho de comprar sus libros y sus escritos. Ud. está aquí hoy porque sus escritos fueron adquiridos por el viejo Departamento de Estado de Acheson y distribuídos a través del mundo ostensiblemente con el propósito de combatir el comunismo. Ahora, cuando el contribuyente paga por sus libros, cuando las utilidades de sus libros, pagados por los contribuyentes, van a parar a los cofres comunistas, entonces este comité se preocupa por ello. Por esta razón, de nuevo le hago la pregunta: En la época en que Ud. escribió los libros que fueron comprados con dinero de los contribuyentes y colocados en nuestras bibliotecas de información a través del mundo, en esa época, ¿era Ud. miembro de la conspiración comunista?

O'Connor.— Objeto la pregunta en las tres bases que ya he manifestado.

El Presidente.— Ud. puede objetar. Ahora, contestará a menos que Ud. considere que la respuesta pueda incriminarle.

O'Connor.— Yo no considero que la respuesta pudiera incriminarme.

El Presidente.— Entonces le ordeno que conteste.

O'Connor.— Ya he contestado.

El Presidente.— Aparentemente yo no oí su contestación. Le ordeno que conteste si Ud. era o no miembro del partido comunista.

O'Connor.— Por las tres razones que he mencionado, he declinado contestar.

El Presidente.— Establezcamos los hechos claramente de modo que sepamos qué es lo que Ud. ha declinado contestar. Repetiré la pregunta. En la época en que Ud. escribió los libros que fueron comprados por el viejo Departamento de Estado de Acheson y distribuídos en nuestros centros de información, ¿era Ud. miembro de la conspiración comunista?

O'Connor.— Mi filiación política o falta de filiación política no son preocupación legítima de este comité.

El Presidente.— ¿Rehusa Ud. contestar?

O'Connor.— Aparentemente.

El Presidente.— No aparentemente. ¿Rehusa Ud. contestar?

O'Connor.— Rehuso contestar.

El Presidente.— ¿Rehusa contestar basado en que la respuesta pudiera incriminarle?

O'Connor.— No me estoy valiendo del privilegio contra la auto-incriminación.

El Presidente.— Ud. no se está escudando en el privilegio contra la auto-incriminación. Muy bien. Puede marcharse.

Incidentalmente, creo que el Senador Mundt desea que se convoque immediatamente una reunión del subcomité para que este hombre sea citado por desacato. Convocaré una reunión de este comité lo más pronto posible para esta finalidad.

EL CIO Y LA LUCHA CONTRA LA SEGREGACION

EL CIO continúa su lucha infatigable contra todas las prácticas discriminativas en forma concreta y práctica.

Actualmente se está librando una batalla legal en el Tribunal Supremo de los EE.UU. para ilegalizar la práctica común en muchos Estados de separar los alumnos de las escuelas públicas según el color de la piel.

Los opositores de la discriminación alegan que esta práctica estatal viola los derechos garantizados por la Constitución y han llevado el caso hasta el Tribunal Supremo para obtener una decisión definitiva.

El CIO, fiel a sus principios ha donado $2,500 para ayudar en los costos del litigio. El Sr. Carey, Secretario Financiero del CIO y a la vez presidente del Comité de Derechos Civiles del CIO hizo entrega de un cheque por la cantidad mencionada al Sr. Thurgood Marshall de la Asociación Nacional para el Mejoramiento del Pueblo de Color, quien se ha destacado activamente en el largo proceso contra la segregación en las escuelas.

En el momento de la entrega el Sr. Carey ofreció la más decidida cooperación y ayuda del Departamento Legal del CIO bajo la dirección de Arthur J. Goldberg.

WHY I SAID NO TO JOE

The "Age of Cringe" . . . by Harvey O'Connor

IT IS annoying, at the best, to be hauled up before the McCarthy committee, even if you have the satisfaction of telling Joe to go peddle his papers. It is somewhat sobering, later, to receive letters from fine people commending you for doing what, after all, is only a simple and rudimentary act of citizenship. Their appreciation shows how far, in recent years, we have slipped down freedom's hill.

In olden times—at least as far back as 1910, say—it was a cardinal point of Americanism that a man's politics were his own business. Now they seem to be the business of any McCarthy, Jenner, or Velde who cares to stick his nose in. If a man's home is his castle, a man's mind is his own. Many Americans seem to have forgotten this. All the more honor to a new American, Albert Einstein, for reminding us that we have a duty not to cooperate with the book-burners.

One fine summer day a person who said he was Roy Cohn of the Senate Investigating (McCarthy) Committee, telephoned me to announce that I was summoned to appear. My crime: I had written books which, this voice said, had appeared in overseas libraries of the State Department. Later I received telegrams from a person teletyped as "Joe McCarthy" which "confirmed telephonic directions." (I hope I will be pardoned for referring to the gentleman as plain, simple "Joe." That is the way he signs himself.)

I was summoned to appear in Washington on "Tuesday, July 9." As this was an improbable date for 1953, I decided to pass it up. After Tuesday had come and gone, Joe was reported to have said that I was already "in contempt." Later he apparently revised his offhand opinion and issued the kind of subpoena which all other Congressional committees regard as the normal means for summoning witnesses.

As I was determined not to enter into a political discussion with Joe, my appearance before his committee was short and to the point. I said, in effect, "None of your business." My political affiliations, or lack of them, could be of no legitimate concern to him or his committee; that is, if our elected officials are in reality our servants and not our masters.

It is appalling that such an answer seems to be novel nowadays. Back in the 1600's in England, Catholic kings, and queens, hacked off Protestant heads, and Protestant kings, and queens, hacked off Catholic heads, because some stiff-necked people regarded their religion as their own business. Finally the English got around to agreeing that a man's religion is no business of the state. In the 1700's the agreement was extended to apply to a man's politics. This was accepted as good doctrine in the United States until a few years ago. Now it appears that we must fight to get back liberties conceded more than two centuries ago.

Of course the witch-hunters have been lurking around the corner from the earliest days. Usually the citizens had more guts than the witch-hunters. At times, however, the balance shifted, and the Joes got the upper hand. After World War I the Industrial Workers of the World put it this way: "Free speech—say anything you want to, but keep your mouth shut." Fortunately, for the wobblies this was mere irony; their free-speech fights are part of the great American tradition.

One has only to glance at labor history to see how far we have slipped. Workingmen back in the 1880's and 1890's expressed themselves with a freedom and vehemence that today, under the Smith act, would land them behind the stockades for twenty years. Gene Debs's frank speech is now astounding to a generation brought up on the desiccated pap of denatured opinion. The principles of the Declaration of Independence and of the Bill of Rights, which seemed fresh only a scant thirty years ago, today are suspect as being if not outright subversive at least soft-headed. Jefferson is accused of being a sentimentalist.

IF THIS IS the Age of Cringe and Scatter, let us so pronounce it. Let us time-life-fortune the Bill of Rights into the sickly wisdom of 1953; let "free enterprise" be boldly proclaimed as the ultimate in Americanism; let the Nevinses rewrite our history so that John D. Rockefeller may be exalted.

HARVEY O'CONNOR, noted labor editor and journalist, is the author of "Mellon's Millions," "The Astors," and other books.

Reprinted by permission from The NATION

I for one refuse to believe that freedom must vanish. To paraphrase Lincoln, it is possible to scare some of the people all the time and all the people some of the time; but the current hysteria will pass, and people will marvel that so many hapless witches could have been burned for so little reason.

Take, for example, a current case. The State Department obtains the books of an author for its overseas libraries. The assumption is that royalties on these volumes are paid to the author. The further assumption, by McCarthy, is that a portion of these royalties is paid by the author to the "Communist conspiracy." Ergo.

It can be, as in my case, that no royalties whatsoever were received as a result of the State Department's acquisition of the author's books. It can be, as in my case, that none of the non-existent royalties were paid to the "Communist conspiracy." Nevertheless, one can be haled before the McCarthy committee to answer an idiotic line of questioning based on these assumptions and winding up with the clincher: When you wrote these books bought by "the old Acheson State Department" were you a member of the "Communist conspiracy"?—whatever that may be, as defined by McCarthy.

IN OTHER TIMES it might have been a matter of pride to a writer that his books were selected by his country for overseas libraries, as an exhibit of the American way of life. But today, if Joe sees fit, this choice may be the author's open sesame to the federal penitentiary.

The excuse for this outrage is that Joe's committee is empowered to inspect the economy and efficiency with which the government's money is expended. With the budget running around eighty billion dollars a year, there may well be quite a bit of legitimate business awaiting a committee on government expenditures. Instead, Joe concerns himself with non-existent royalties on books and the non-existent percentage of these non-existent royalties paid to the "Communist conspiracy."

The medieval schoolmen are said to have indulged in similar feats of logic-chopping; one such debate on a pinhead involved the standing room of angels. Joe's involves human beings, and happy is Joe if the writer on his pinhead loses his contracts, loses his publisher, starves a while, and also spends some time in the hoosegow. That will teach him to write books and to assert his simple rights as a citizen.

McCarthy, of course, is not too much concerned about writers, preachers, and other purveyors of opinion. He is busy fighting the future. If he can keep us occupied fighting for freedoms imbedded in the Constitution 160 years ago, he can keep us from examining the cause and cure of the crisis of our own times. Thus he can keep us from inspecting the rotting foundations of a system which acts as if it sees its perpetuation only through war—and the destruction of the human species.

McCarthy is busy at the moment befouling one of the finest periods of our history—the Roosevelt thirties, when people awoke with hope that they could do something to better their lot. The people's faith in their own capacity and in their own leaders must be rooted out. Then only the McCarthys will be left as leaders.

That is the real meaning of this calculated campaign of confounded and confounding idiocy. The people must stand bemused and paralyzed.

McCarthy will fail, as other demagogues have failed, if enough of us refuse to be bemused and paralyzed. If a wretched governmental bureaucrat of the McCarthy type presumes to ask us our politics, it is fitting and proper to tell him to mind his own business. If the penalty for contempt of such demagogues and loyalty to the Bill of Rights is one to twelve months in the penitentiary, then when was the chance to fight for freedom ever offered so cheaply?

YOU don't have to wait 'til you are subpoened to say "No" to Senator McCarthy. By rising to the support of Harvey O'Connor you can help to stop the inquisition. NOW is the time for unified resistance to tyranny !

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ONE OF THE LESSONS to learn here is to avoid labeling congressmen in rigid categories. The latest example involves Sen. Walter F. George (D., Ga.), who tossed a time bomb into Republican ranks by proposing higher personal exemptions for low-paid people burdened with income taxes.

The Eisenhower corporation presidents and Wall St. lawyers didn't think Sen. George would do this to them. They were planning tax "relief" solely for corporations and stockholders of corporations.

Franklin D. Roosevelt tried to "purge" George from the Senate in the Democratic primary of 1938.

He isn't a liberal in any contemporary American sense of the word. He doesn't do anything to control Gov. Talmadge of his state, who is planning to secede from the public school system if the Supreme Court rules against race segregation. His votes on various issues could not possibly have displeased Coca-Cola and the Georgia Power Co., two important business influences in his state.

Yet suddenly he proposes that personal tax exemptions be raised from $600 to $800 this year and to $1000 in 1955. He would give tax "relief" to the vast majority of wage earners and small-salaried people rather than just to corporations and stockholders.

A sudden attack of unexpected liberalism? A feeling, developed in a lifetime in public office, that the people have rights that deserve respect? A belated discovery that the American system requires widespread purchasing power, and that it isn't good even for business for all tax "relief" to go to a handful of toppaid people?

Whatever the reason, George's outstanding reputation as a conservative makes his suggestion all the more difficult for the Republicans to resist. His influence makes his ideas mean more than similar proposals filed by almost any other senator you could name.

In short, it looks as if Walter F. George, conservative, is about to do the people a favor.

Trouble

The Wall Street Journal says the business dip worries GOP officials more than they are admitting.

Trouble is, they believe the Republican party is the party of depression.

Example Of The 'Big Lie'

Here is the way a "big lie" gets established—in this case the big lie to the effect that the term "McCarthyism" was invented by subversives, Communists and people loosely associated by accusation with subversives or Communists.

The China Lobby character, Alfred Kohlberg, in a magazine article claimed that Owen Lattimore first used the word "McCarthyism" on May 3, 1950, and that the Communist newspaper, the Daily Worker, picked it up next day.

A letter printed in the New York Times on Jan. 21 said that the term was "first provided" by Lattimore on May 3, 1950, and echoed on May 4 by the Daily Worker.

The only things wrong with this tale are: (1) Lattimore's alleged "invention" of the word is meaningless, because Lattimore up to now is simply a scholarly victim of McCarthy and Sen. McCarran, indicted for perjury but convicted of nothing; (2) the dates and alleged facts are wrong.

Max Lerner, a very definite non-Communist, says in the New York Post that he used the term "McCarthyism" on Apr. 5, 1950. The word was used in the Apr. 17, 1950, edition of the New Republic, a non-Communist magazine. I shouldn't be surprised if I myself, along about April of 1950, after McCarthy had revealed his style of operation, wrote something about "McCarthyism." I was thinking it, whether or not I got the word into print.

It will be interesting, in the American struggle with the "big lie" technique, to see how often Kohlberg's phony magazine "facts" and the lying letter to the New York Times are reprinted and quoted as "documented" evidence that nobody but a Communist refers to McCarthyism as a peculiar type of political terrorism including both exaggeration and blackmail.

The State Of The Capital

A Negro named Paul Phillips turned down a high-ranking job in the Eisenhower Administration because he couldn't tolerate the racial discrimination rampant in this enlightened capital of our democracy.

Phillips runs the Urban League in Grand Rapids, Mich. He was offered appointment as special assistant in Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby's Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare. (Mrs. Hobby is a Texan, and it isn't sure how much she has learned in her post, but she offered Phillips the job.)

Phillips courteously refused, citing as one reason "evident progress, though slow" in his Grand Rapids responsibilities. Then he added a "very personal" reason.

In the opinion of his wife and himself, "it would be unfair and unwise to ask my family, and especially our 7-year-old son, to live in and attempt to adjust to the rigid pattern of racial segregation that exists in Washington."

A Fighting Irishman—

O'Connor Challenges McCarthy On Free Speech Fundamentals

By RAY DAVIDSON

(Editor of International Oil Worker, OWIU-CIO official publication.)

WHEN JOE McCARTHY hailed Harvey O'Connor before his Senate investigating committee last summer, he started a fight which may very well wind up with the Senator on the mat.

O'Connor, former publicity director for the CIO Oil Workers and veteran labor writer, refused to answer any of the Senator's questions on the grounds that such questioning by a Congressional committee constituted an abridgment of freedom of the press and speech, as guaranteed by the First Amendment. O'Connor pointedly declined, although invited by McCarthy, to take refuge in the Fifth Amendment.

As a result of his defiance, O'Connor was cited for contempt of Congress by a Senate resolution and later was indicted by a Washington federal grand jury.

O'Connor did not take this lying down. He immediately set out, largely at his own expense, to tell as many people as possible about the dispute between him and McCarthy.

Since being indicted, O'Connor has spoken to scores of college, church, labor, civil liberties and luncheon club meetings.

He Tells His Own Story

For a while he confined these appearances to the East Coast area relatively near his home in Little Compton, R. I. But late in January he started a grueling tour of western states, starting in Chicago and continuing to Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco; Austin, Fort Worth and Dallas, Texas; and Kansas City.

In each city he is speaking before any and every group which will listen—and it is surprising which group sometimes listens! In Denver, for example, he appeared before half a dozen organization meetings, but apparently his most effective speech was at a regular luncheon meeting of the Capital Kiwanis Club.

His remarks there were put on tape and rebroadcast at an early evening hour by one of the city's leading radio stations. Four other radio stations granted him free time for interview programs—and that all happened after Robert E. Lee was confirmed for FCC!

The publisher of The Denver Post, a newspaper with tremenduous influence in several mountain states, listened to O'Connor's talk, conversed with him personally, then went back to his office and told the editor of the Post editorial page to do a job. Next day's Post carried an editorial which unqualifiedly praised O'Connor for his one-man crusade to test the First Amendment.

Fundamental Freedoms

O'Connor bases his entire plea on fundamentals of the Bill of Rights. He declines to argue fine legal points, saying, "That's for the lawyers and the courts to work out. I'm for standing for what I believe and I don't have to ask a lawyer what I should believe."

In a voice sometimes shaking with rage but always dignified, O'Connor asserts again and again that "it's none of Congress' opinion what my political beliefs are." Then he always adds, "But I'm always willing to tell any friendly questioner that I am not, nor have I ever been, a member of the Communist party.

"It's a bit humiliating even to have to say that," he adds wistfully. I've been a writer for 40 years, most of that time writing on subjects involving politics. How in the world could I have concealed my politics in the millions of words I have written?"

FIGHTING for American civil liberties against a Senate contempt citation is Harvey O'Connor (right), former publicity director for the CIO Oil Workers, chatting with OWIU-CIO Executive Council Member M. Phyl Poulson in Salt Lake City on a lecture tour.

O'Connor believes that the greatest threat to American civil freedom today is the behavior, not of the wicked, but of the innocent, and and the fearful.

"The Bible says that the wicked flee where no man pursueth," says O'Connor. "But now we have the strange situation in which the fearful, and the innocent, flee where no man pursueth."

His theme is that more and more everyday citizens should resist the improper and intimidating tactics of congressional investigators.

A Minor Victory Already

"If I'm finally found guilty of contempt," he notes, "my prison sentence will be a minimum of one month or a maximum of 12 months. When was freedom ever bought so cheaply?"

O'Connor believes he already has been instrumental in winning a minor victory against McCarthy. Since he refused to testify on First Amendment grounds, two other witnesses before McCarthy have refused on the same grounds.

Of course the ever-recurring question O'Connor meets in his travel is: "Why were you called before the committee." In answer, O'Connor quotes from the official transcript of the hearing, in which McCarthy says:

"Mr. O'Connor. you have been subpoenaed here today to answer questions in regard to the writings which were purchased by the old Acheson State Dept." McCarthy refers to several books, including an official history of the Oil Workers Intl. Union (CIO) which were found in overseas State Dept. libraries.

So, says O'Connor, his crime is that the State Dept., when Dean Acheson was secretary, chose to buy some of his books. O'Connor had nothing to do with their selection—and they must have been bought second-hand, because all of them except the history have been sold out by the publishers since 1945. The Oil Workers published the history and have checked their files to see if the State Dept. bought any. They have found no record, although there were several sales to book dealers who could have been acting as agents for the State Dept.

"My crime," says O'Connor, "was that the 'Old Acheson State Dept.' bought some of my books. I'm just a pawn in McCarthy's attempts to smear Acheson. But now he's making remarks about the 'Old Dulles State Dept.' and I predict that within a year he will be saying that Eisenhower sold out East Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia to the Red Army in 1945.

"He's destroying the confidence of the American people in the Roosevelt Administration, the Truman Administration and now in the Eisenhower Administration. The Kremlin must be laughing with glee. What better service could be rendered to the Communists than to destroy the confidence of the people in our government—regardless of which political party is in power!"

O'Connor Praised For 'One-Man Stand'

A Denver Post editorial praised Harvey O'Connor's "courageous one-man stand for American civil liberties," taken when he declined to answer Sen. McCarthy's queries on First (free speech and press) Amendment grounds.

"It is an important case that could effect any American citizen," the editorial said.

"O'Connor may lose, and he knows it. But he is ready to serve a jail sentence if he loses, and he figures even so it is worth the fight for a matter of principle.

"You've got to admire a man with such strength of conviction. Not many of us either would or could make such a stand for the sake of what we believe in."

LEGISLATIVE ISSUES were explained to URW-CIO training institute by Rep. Johnson (D. Wisc.), speaking, as (left to right) Pres. Magne Repaal of Eau Claire local, who campaigned for him, and Rep. Hays (D. O.) listen.

PUBLIC POWER giveaway was discussed by Leland Olds, former Federal Power Commission chairman now with Public Affairs Institute, at a luncheon meeting. These sessions of institutes brought 75 URW members to Washington for intensive briefing on national issues by congressmen, senators and CIO staff members.

'GOP Is Still Operating As Opposition,' Holifield Tells URW Legislative Institute

THE REPUBLICANS have not learned in 20 years of opposition how to be a constructive force for the common good, Rep. Holifield (D. Calif.) told a CIO Rubber Workers legislative training institute in Washington last week.

"Instead of proposing a positive program of their own," he said, "they are still the Republican opposition. They are still criticizing the New Deal and the Fair Deal. They are still complaining about the Truman Administration instead of proving that anything can be done in the Eisenhower Administration."

The URW-CIO held three consecutive institutes in the national capital to familiarize members from all parts of the country with major legislation and policy developments. Each drew about 25 members to four-day sessions with programs arranged by URW Sec.-Treas. Desmond Walker and Education Dir. Joe Glazer. The "students" visited, conferred and dined with congressmen.

Don't Be Fooled

Holifield spoke to the second group, which included URW members from 11 states. The workers also met with Sens. Neely (W. Va.), Murray and Mansfield (Mont.), Kennedy (Mass.), Burke (O.) and Kefauver (Tenn.), all Democrats.

The California Democrat warned his URW audience not to be "fooled" by Pres. Eisenhower's messages and statements, because he "is not running the Eisenhower Administration."

"Tom Dewey and Herbert Brownell and a few others are running the show downtown," he declared. "Who is calling the signals for the Republican team on Capitol Hill is anybody's guess, but you can be sure of one thing. It isn't Gen. Eisenhower."

He declared Eisenhower cannot escape responsibility for the smearing of the Democrats by some of the top Administration figures, and asserted "Deweyism is only McCarthyism in spats."

Holifield said that "in greater or lesser degree the whole apparatus of the federal government is being organized for Republican advantage." He urged the "students" to take back to their members "a crusading conviction that will prod them into intelligent political action in the forthcoming elections."

Others heard or visited by the URW delegates included Sens. Lehman and Sparkman (D. Ala.); Reps. Johnson (D. Wisc.), Rogers (D. Colo.), Metcalf (D. Mont.) and Canfield (R. N.J.); Merton Bernstein, administrative assistant to Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.); Esther Murray of the CIO-PAC and H. H. Bookbinder, director of National CIO legislative research.

MUSIC by URW Education Dir. Joe Glazer charms Paul Herbin (left), labor advisor of French Embassy, and Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) during one of the lighter moments that relaxed the hard-working "students."

Confirm Beeson for NLRB

SENATORS IN DISTRICT THREE VOTE AGAINST LABOR 4 TO 2

Senators in the three states covered by District Council Three, UPWA, are four to two against labor.

The proof of that statement it contained in their votes on the appointment of Albert C. Beeson, self-styled "union-wrecker" to the National Labor Relations Board.

Beeson was confirmed by the Senate and the labor movement in America suffered another defeat.

Here's what Senator Fullbright of Arkansas had to say about Beeson:

"I cannot agree that he (Beeson) has displayed the qualifications that should befit a candidate for an office of his public trust . . . I do know that he concealed from the Senate information which was vital to its consideration of his nomination . . .

"Here is a man who said he had resigned when he had not resigned.

"Here is a man who said he had surrendered his pension rights when he had not surrendered his pension rights.

"Here is a man who denied that he had made certain statements when he had made certain statements."

In other words, Beeson is a liar. Beeson lied when he said that he had resigned from the Food Machinery and Chemical Corporation.

He lied when he said he had given up his pension rights.

And he lied when he denied having said these things.

"Not only did Beeson deliberately lie to the Senate Labor and Education Committee, but he admitted that he is a "union-wrecker."

In spite of these facts, the Senate voted (45 to 42) to confirm Beeson's nomination.

Beeson's confirmation now gives the anti-labor forces a four-to-one majority on the National Labor Relations Board. Reactionary Beeson can now team up with Guy Farmer, Ivan H. Peterson, and Philip Ray Rodgers to throttle organized labor in the United States.

In District Council Three, four reactionary senators voted for Beeson's confirmation, thus telling organized labor that they have no respect for its wishes.

Here's how the vote went:

COLORADO:

Milliken voted for Beeson.
Johnson voted against Beeson.

IOWA:

Hickenlooper voted for Beeson.
Gillette voted against Beeson.

NEBRASKA:

Griswold voted for Beeson.
Butler was paired for Beeson.

HARVEY O'CONNOR WILL SPEAK AT DISTRICT CONVENTION

The headline speaker for the 8th annual convention of District Council Three of the United Packinghouse Workers of America will be Harvey O'Connor.

O'Connor, who has been indicted for contempt of the Senate, will speak at the convention banquet on the night of March 11 (Thursday). He will be introduced by President Ralph Helstein.

He'll tell about his appearance before the McCarthy subcommittee which cited him for contempt (see O'Connor's testimony on pages 4 and 5).

O'Connor—a former editor of the Oil Workers International newspaper—deliberately invited McCarthy to cite him for contempt. He forthrightly challenged the right of McCarthy's subcommittee to pry into his private affairs.

As the testimony on pages 4 and 5 shows, O'Connor did not plead the right against self-incrimination. Instead, he told McCarthy that McCarthy had no business asking him the $64 question.

McCarthy told O'Connor that the subcommittee was investigating O'Connor's books which were distributed overseas through the State Department.

After refusing to cooperate with McCarthy's subcommittee, O'Connor went back to Providence, R. I., and said to newspaper reporters: "I am not a communist. I have never been a communist. I am perfectly willing to tell anyone how I stand except on demand from such a legislative group. They have no right to inquire into my politics."

He said that, as a voter, he has a right to know the politics of his inquisitors. "It is they who are running for office. I'm not."

If O'Connor wins in his fight against McCarthy, McCarthy will be considerably hamstrung. If O'Connor loses, however, McCarthy will have received the support of the courts in his fight against freedom.

O'Connor has received considerable labor support in his fight. The CIO's "Latin Affairs Bulletin" featured O'Connor's story prominently with a striking cartoon. Sympathetic stories have been published in the CIO News, The Advance (Amalgamated Clothing Workers newspaper) and The Packinghouse Worker. He has also received the support of his own international union, the Oil Workers.

Who Is O'Connor?

Harvey O'Connor was born on March 29, 1897, in Minneapolis, Minn., and attended schools in St. Paul, Minn., and Tacoma, Wash.

After working in the logging camps of the Pacific Northwest and serving in the U. S. Merchant Marine during World War I, he became labor editor of the Seattle Union Record, the nation's first trade union daily, 1919-1924. He was assistant editor of the Journal of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in Cleveland, O., 1924-1927; eastern bureau manager of Federated Press, the labor news service, 1927-1930; and editor and publicity director of the Oil Workers International Union-CIO, 1945-1948, of which he is still a member.

His books include: Mellon's Millions, John Day, 1933; Steel-Dictator, John Day, 1935; The Guggenheims, Covici-Friede, 1937; The Astors, Knopf, 1941; History of the Oil Workers International Union, 1950.

He lives in Little Compton, R. I., where he is finishing a book on current trends in the oil industry.

In 1930 O'Connor married Jessie Lloyd; they have two children, Stephen, 13, and Kathleen, 11.

While a resident of Chicago, 1937-1945, O'Connor was chairman of the education committee of the City Club and a member of its board of governors; member of the board of the Chicago Civil Liberties Committee (American Civil Liberties Union branch); chairman of the residents' committee, Hull-House; member of the Unitarian Church (Evanston and the Third Church); co-editor of the book, Civil Liberties in Illinois.

In Fort Worth, Texas, where he served as publicity director for the Oil Workers International Union, he was president of the Tarrant County Industrial Union Council-CIO, chairman of the Tarrant County labor legislative council, and a founder of the Fort Worth Unitarian Church.

'No Legitimate Concern'

Here's O'Connor's Testimony

(The actors in this drama are Senator Joseph McCarthy, Roy M. Cohn, who is McCarthy's assistant, and Harvey O'Connor. The drama took place in room 318 of the Senate Office Building on July 14, 1953.)

McCARTHY: Mr. O'Connor, you have been subpoenaed here today to answer questions in regard to the writings which were purchased by the old Acheson State Department. Before we ask you any questions, may I ask:

Mr. Cohn, has it been established and confirmed by the State Department that Mr. O'Connor's writings have been purchased and have been distributed in various information centers throughout the world?

COHN: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

McCARTHY: Then, Mr. O'Connor, we will ask you this question: At the time you wrote the books which were purchased by the old State Department, were you then a member of the Communist Party?

O'CONNOR: Mr. Chairman, may I make a brief statement?

McCARTHY: No. You will answer the question.

O'CONNOR: About my objection to the jurisdiction of this committee?

McCARTHY: Yes; you may make a statement on that.

O'CONNOR: Thank you.

Under the first amendment to the Constitution, my writings, my books and my political opinions are of no legitimate concern to this committee. If I have violated any laws in the writings that I have written, that is a proper concern for the law enforcement agencies and not the proper concern of this committee.

McCARTHY: Will you get nearer to the microphone, Mr. O'Connor, so that we can hear you?

O'CONNOR: My second point would be that this committee has no right to inquire into my writings, under the point of the constitutional limitations on the powers of Congress and its committees. I might say in that regard that I have not known until this moment that my books were in overseas libraries, and most certainly I had nothing whatever to do with their selection there.

In the third place, I would object to the authority of the committee, under the statute by which it was created by Congress, to inquire into my writing or my political views.

McCARTHY: Just for your information, Mr. O'Connor, we are not concerned with any political views of yours. We would not be concerned about your writings. You are entitled to write whatever you care to write. Any American or anyone else is entitled to purchase your books, your writings. You are here this morning because your writings were purchased by the old Acheson State Department, distributed throughout the world, ostensibly for the purpose of fighting communism. Now, when the taxpayers pay for your books, when the royalties of your books, paid by the taxpayer, go into Communist coffers, then this committee is concerned with that. For that reason, I again ask you the question: At the time you wrote the books which were purchased with taxpayers' money and put in our information libraries throughout the world, at that time were you a member of the Communist conspiracy?

O'CONNOR: I object to the question on the three grounds I have already stated.

Before McCarthy Committee

McCARTHY: You can object. Now you will answer, unless you feel that the answer will tend to incriminate you.

O'CONNOR: I do not feel that the answer will tend to incriminate me.

McCARTHY: Then you are ordered to answer.

O'CONNOR: I have already answered.

McCARTHY: I apparently did not hear your answer then.

You are ordered to answer whether or not you were a member of the Communist Party.

O'CONNOR: On the three grounds I have stated, I have declined to answer.

McCARTHY: Let us have the record clear, so that we will know what you have declined to answer. I will repeat the question. At the time you wrote the books which were purchased by the old Acheson State Department and distributed in our information centers, were you a member of the Communist conspiracy?

O'CONNOR: My political affiliations or lack of political affiliations are no legitimate concern of ths committee.

McCARTHY: Do you refuse to answer?

O'CONNOR: Apparently.

McCARTHY: Not "apparently." Do you refuse to answer?

O'CONNOR: I refuse to answer.

McCARTHY: You are not refusing on the ground that the answer might tend to incriminate you?

O'CONNOR: I am not asserting the privilege against self-incrimination.

McCARTHY: You are not asserting the privilege against self-incrimination. All right. You may step down.

Incidentally, I think Senator Mundt wishes that a meeting of the subcommittee be called to have this man immediately cited for contempt. I will call a meeting of the subcommittee at the earliest convenience for that purpose.

Your other witness, Mr. Cohn?

UNION CO-OPS DEFEAT HIGH LIVING COSTS

How does a union improve standards of living for its members?

By fighting for higher wages and better working conditions. That's the first program that any union starts out with to help its members.

But there are other ways, too. One way is to help union members cut down on living costs—through cooperatives.

What's A Cooperative..

A cooperative is a group of people who cooperate. They cooperate in supplying their own needs by setting up an organization to tend to those needs.

Cooperatives—like unions—are people. People organize cooperatives to eliminate excessive profits and to furnish themselves with certain needs at a cheaper cost.

Instead of buying consumer goods from a corporation, some unions have decided to buy these goods from coopeatives—their own organization.

Some Examples

Here are some examples of what local unions and union councils are doing to help their members:

UAW local unions in Anderson, Mich., have a cooperative coal yard where members buy fuel at a reduced cost.

In Detroit, some unions have set up an oil and coal cooperative.

The Motor City Co-op in Detroit sells all kinds of appliances, including such things as lamps and electric devices. This Co-Op even sells candlesticks and fruit bowls.

Low-cost glasses are available at the UAW Health Institute in Detroit for all UAW family members of 16 years of age or more. The glasses are cheaper (and better) than anywhere else in the city.

In Chicago, some local unions have organized a cooperative optical service.

In the Washington, D. C., area, other unions have organized Co-Op pharmacies to help members save money when buying expensive drugs.

Even Funerals

In Detroit, a group of families were surveyed to find out how much it cost them for funerals for family members. The average cost was more than $1,100.

The union that made the survey decided that too much profiteering was being allowed to exist in the funeral business. So they organized a Union Co-op Burial Service.

A survey of 25 consecutive funerals for members of this Co-Op showed that the average cost was $869. Here was a saving of more than $700.

Unions who have investigated the funeral business have found out that funeral costs come to "what the traffic can bear."

The cost of the casket determines the cost of a funeral. Select a bronze casket (which costs the undertaker $400) and you have to pay about $1,800.

Select a $50 casket and the same funeral services will come to somewhere between $400 and $700.

Take Out the Profits

What does all this mean? It means that you can take the excessive profits out of some services, retain the same kind of service and still have savings for your membership.

The way to beat the high cost of living—and dying—is to take out the profits through cooperatives.

Program Notes

WHAT'S GOING ON IN DISTRICT NO. 3

CIVIL RIGHTS:

Progress on the Surf Ballroom appeal case (reported in the last issue in full) is being hurried along. The Iowa Civil Liberties Union is making an appeal to its members for financial support for the case. Other groups cooperating in the case report that funds to fight the appeal are coming in. The Iowa National Association for the advancement of Colored People has agreed to help fight the appeal and has named Archie Greenlee, Des Moines attorney and president of the Des Moines NAACP chapter, as a member of the defense fund committee. The case is expected to come to the court either in May or October of this year.

Locals 7 and 89 in Des Moines have rallied enough community-wide support in favor of an FEPC ordinance to present the ordinance to the Des Moines city council. The community-wide group planned to present the ordinance to the council on March 1st.

Four Omaha locals report progress on the community-wide attempt to get an FEPC ordinance passed in Omaha. The third in a series of community-wide dinners was held February 18 in the Omaha YMCA. The dinner was sponsored by the Omaha Council for Equal Job Opportunities. About 125 persons attended the last dinner.

* * *

The joint A-D committees of three Denver locals sent out a letter to 35 individuals and groups asking their support in fighting for an FEPC ordinance for the city of Denver. The Denver locals are seeking community-wide support in their fight for FEPC.

WOMEN'S ACTIVITIES

Betty Keefe, Women's Activities chairman of Local 46 in Waterloo, and Field Representative Haxell Hull, report that activity on behalf of child day-care centers in Waterloo is beginning to take shape. They were invited to attend a meeting of the heads of all social agencies in Waterloo and explain the need for day-care centers in Waterloo. As a result of that meeting, the social agency heads agreed to take a survey among the women who work at Rath Packing Company about the needs for a day-care center. The company has agreed to cooperate in taking the survey.

FARM-LABOR:

Local 1 leaders in Ottumwa scheduled a meeting of farmers and workers who live in the Ottumwa area. The meeting was scheduled for March 1st. Local leaders asked Duke Norberg, liberal newspaper editor, to lead a discussion on the common problems of farmers and workers. Local 1 leaders hope that this meeting will lead to a joint farmer-worker organization being formed in the area.

* * *

Farm-labor committee members from local unions in Denver are attempting to set up a joint program with the Farmers Union and other farm groups. The program will include the exchange of speakers.

PAC:

UPWA and other CIO local unions in Iowa are about to start the third in their series of classes on PAC. CIO members are volunteering to run for the jobs of precinct committeemen and precinct committeewomen in the political parties in Iowa. Iowa CIO members expect to have a voice in the formation of party policy this year.

HACIENDO HISTORIA DE PUEBLO A PUEBLO

Conferencia Internacional de Sindicatos Mexicanos y Estadounidenses Convocada por O.R.I.T.
Diciembre 14-16, 1953

ESTABLECIENDO un precedente en las relaciones entre el pueblo mexicano y el de los Estados Unidos, se celebró en Ciudad México una conferencia sindical convocada por la ORIT para discutir los problemas de interés común para los trabajadores de ambos países y a la que asistieron delegados del CIO, la FAT y la Unión de Mineros de los Estados Unidos; la Confederación de Trabajadores de México-CTM, el Sindicato Mexicano de Electricistas, el Sindicato de Telefonistas, la Confederación General de Trabajadores, el Sindicato de Trabajadores Ferrocarrileros, la Confederación Nacional Campesina y el Sindicato de Trabajadores Petroleros-CTM, de la República de México.

La conferencia estuvo presidida por el comp. Fidel Velázquez, Secretario General de la CTM y las discusiones fueron divididas en dos temas principales: el problema de los braceros y las relaciones industriales. El comp. O. A. Knight, Presidente de los Trabajadores del Petróleo-CIO, presidió la comisión de relaciones industriales.

En la convocatoria a la conferencia realizada por la O.R.I.T., trabajaron activamente el Comité de Asuntos Latinoamericanos del CIO y el Secretario Ejecutivo comp. Ernst Schwarz.

No obstante la propaganda negativa de comunistas y peronistas en cuanto a que todos los "gringos" son imperialistas y a que no es posible que trabajadores norteamericanos y latinoamericanos puedan discutir sus problemas comunes en un ambiente de camaradería, respeto y cooperación, la conferencia resultó un éxito mucho más rotundo de lo que habíamos anticipado. En un ambiente de armonía perfecta, la ORIT, bajo la direc-

PRESIDENCIA DE LA CONFERENCIA

(De izq. a dere.)

Luis A. Monge, Secretario de ORIT; Fidel Veláquez, Secretario General de la CTM y Presidente de la Conferencia; Alfonso Sánchez Madariaga, de la CTM y Secretario Adjunto de ORIT; Ernst Schwarz, Secretario Adjunto de ORIT y Secretario Ejecutivo del Comité de Asuntos Latinoamericanos del CIO.

ción del Secretario Luís Alberto Monge, logró dar el mayor paso de avance que se haya logrado en la cooperación de los movimientos obreros de ambos países en toda la existencia de los mismos.

La Conferencia abrió la ruta para el trabajo futuro con la creación de una Comisión Mixta Permanente formada por ocho (8) miembros de cada país para que continúen la labor iniciada. En la representación de los EE.UU. el CIO tendrá tres (3) miembros.

De acuerdo con las decisiones de la comisión que estudió el problema de los braceros mexicanos que emigran a los Estados Unidos, una representación de la delegación norteamericana visitó al Sr. Embajador de los EE.UU. en México para demandar que en las próximas negociaciones entre los gobiernos de México y de EE.UU. en el problema de los braceros se permitiese la asistencia de representantes obreros de ambos países como parte interesada directamente en el asunto. El Embajador White rehusó aceptar el punto de vista de los trabajadores, lo que motivó el envío del telegrama siguiente a los presidentes del CIO, de la FAT, de la Unión de Mineros y de la Hermandad de Empleados de Vías y Obras:

Acordamos por unanimidad en la Conferencia de Ciudad México con relación a los trabajadores migratorios que tanto las uniones mexicanas como las de EE.UU. deben estar representadas en las negociaciones futuras para la renovación del convenio de EE.UU. y México que ampara la importación a EE.UU. de trabajadores mexicanos.

Habiendo fracasado las solicitudes anteriores ante el Departamento del Trabajo, un comité de delegados de EE.UU. visitó hoy al Embajador White y de nuevo se les negó representación o consultarlos en las discusiones del convenio.

Urgimos una demanda inmediata por parte de los los jefes de nuestras organizaciones al Departamento de Estado y si fuese necesario al Presidente Eisenhower de que los trabajadores participen en la redacción de un convenio de tan vital importancia para ellos y para el público norteamericano. Existen perspectivas de que la administración mexicana verá con simpatía esta demanda por parte de las organizaciones obreras mexicanas.

John Riffe, Congresso de Organizaciones Industriales
Serafino Romualdi, Federación Americana de Trabajo
Paul K. Reed, Mineros Unidos de America
Frank L. Noakes, Hermandad de Empleados de Vías y Obras.

No queda lugar a dudas de que como paso inicial, la Conferencia de México ha sido un éxito sin precedentes. La comprensión mutua alcanzada por los dirigentes obreros de ambos países tendrá su expresión en el estudio de los problemas comunes y ha quedado testimoniada en los acuerdos tomados con vista a las tareas inmediatas y los cuales publicaremos en nuestro próximo número con información detallada de los puntos abordados y las actividades futuras.

RESOLUCION SOBRE LA AMERICA LATINA

A través de su Comité de Asuntos Latinoamericanos el CIO continuará sus esfuerzos por ayudar los intereses sociales, económicos y políticos de los trabajadores de la América Latina. Nos oponemos incondicionalmente a los regímenes dictatoriales de la Argentina y de otros países en el hemisferio.

El CIO cree firmemente en la política de nuestro gobierno de fortalecer el poderío militar de los estados americanos contra la amenaza de la agresión comunista soviética, pero protestamos que en nuestros programas de ayuda económica extranjera no se sitúen suficientes fondos para fines económicos en las Américas. Tampoco se hace lo suficiente por ayudar a elevar las bajas condiciones sociales y económicas de nuestros compañeros en la América Latina, campo propicio para el crecimiento de las ideas totalitarias.

En un número de países los dictadores peronistas han formado una alianza hereje con los comunistas soviéticos en un ataque conjunto a la democracia y a la libertad. Prometemos nuestro apoyo a las organizaciones obreras libres de la América Latina en su valiente lucha contra todas forma de tiranía. Llamamos a nuestro gobierno para que comprenda que no se puede lograr ningún verdadero fortalecimiento del mundo libre con el apaciguamiento de dichas fuerzas.

En la movilización económica para la defensa que ha asumido nuestra nación, se colocarán muchos pedidos en la América Latina. El CIO estima que en todos los

POR QUE NO CONTESTE A McCARTHY

Por Harvey O'Connor

El compañero O'Connor tiene una larga historia de actividad sindical. Nacido en Minneapolis el 29 de marzo de 1897, fué editor obrero del Seatle Union Record de 1919 a 1924, siende éste el primer periódico diario obrero en los Estados Unidos. Posteriormente fué editor adjunto del periódico de la Hermandad de Maquinistas de 1924 a 1927, director del bureau del Este de la Federated Press de 1927 a 1930 y editor y director de publicidad de la Unión Internacional de Trabajadores del Petróleo de 1945 al 1948.

La carrera literaria de O'Connor ha sido muy prolífera, entre sus obras se encuentran:

"Los Millones de Mellon"—John Day, 1933; "Dictador del Acero", John Day, 1933; "Los Guggenheims", Covici-Friede, 1937; "Los Astors", Knopf, 1941; "Historia de la Unión Internacional de Trabajadores del Petróleo", 1951; y ahora está trabajando en un libro sobre los actuales aspectos de la industria del petróleo en los EE.UU.

Resulta interesante mencionar, que entre los auspiciadores de McCarthy y el "McCarthysmo" se encuentran en primera fila los magnates del petróleo en este país. EL EDITOR.

EN los Estados Unidos existe el viejo principio de que las ideas políticas de un individuo, al igual que su religión, es asunto exclusivamente suyo. Si desea discutir de política con amigos o vecinos, eso es ya otra cosa; pero que un burócrata gubernamental imagine interrogar a un ciudadano sobre sus ideas políticas es una invasión de un principio democrático básico. Los funcionarios gubernamentales — ya sean miembros del Senado o de la Cámara de Representantes — son servidores del pueblo y no sus amos. Cuando se abrogan el poder de atisbar las mentes de los ciudadanos, la libertad está muerta.

HARVEY O'CONNOR

Esta es la controversia entre el Senador Joe McCarthy y yo. Amparado en su falsa cruzada anti-comunista ha asumido el derecho de indagar sobre mis ideas políticas. Le dije en el banquillo de los testigos que eso no era asunto suyo. Como resultado, se me acusó de desacato, fuí procesado y compareceré a juicio el día 11 de enero.

De la trancripción del testimonio por el cual he sido acusado por desacato, cito el siguiente pasaje:

"Ud. está quí hoy porque sus escritos fueron adquiridos por el viejo Departamento de Estado de Acheson y distribuídos a través del mundo ostensiblemente con el propósito de combatir el comunismo. Ahora, cuando el contribuyente paga sus libros, cuando las utilidades de sus libros, pagados por los contribuyentes, van a parar a los cofres comunistas, entonces este comité se preocupa por ello. Por esta razón, de nuevo le hago la pregunta: En la época en que Ud. escribió los libros que fueron comprados con dinero de los contribuyentes y colocados en nuestras bibliotecas de información a través del mundo, en esa época, ¿era Ud. miembro de la conspiración comunista?

La pregunta es capciosa de principio a fin. Expliquemos: El Departamento de Estado de los EE.UU. ha establecido bibliotecas en ultramar para que otros puedan ver por sí mismos lo que es la vida en los Estados Unidos, según es reflejada por los distintos escritores. Estos libros fueron seleccionados por un comité de la Asociación de Bibliotecas Americanas. Yo no tuve nada que ver con la selección de algunos ejemplares de mis libros; biografías de las familias Guggenheim y Astor y la historia de la Unión Internacional de Trabajadores del Petróleo. En realidad, ni sabía que hubiesen sido seleccionados hasta que fuí llevado ante el comité de McCarthy.

Durante años el Senador McCarthy ha mantenido una campaña para estigmatizar al "viejo Departamento de Estado de Acheson" como parte de la "conspiración comunista". Esta acusación pudiera parecer fantástica, pero no más que las idioteces realizadas por Hitler o cualquier otro fascista. Yo sólo fuí un peón en el sucio juego político de McCarthy.

McCarthy justifica su inquisición como dentro de las prerrogativas de su comité, que son supervisar el empleo de los fondos gubernamentales, afirmando que el Departamento de Estado había "comprado" ejemplares de mis libros. Como cuestión de hechos, el Departamento de Estado no compró ninguno de mis libros. La Unión de Trabajadores del Petróleo dió al Departamento ejemplares de la Historia; otros se obtuvieron de las existencias de libros de otras dependencias del gobierno como las mantenidas por las fuerzas armadas durante y después de la Guerra Mundial II. Por consiguiente, yo no recibí ningunas regalías por estas "compras" y en consecuencia, no podía haber contribuído ninguna de las regalías "no existentes" a los "cofres comunistas". El tejido de mentiras se deshace, pero todavía tengo que comparecer a juicio por rehusar contestar a un interrogatorio idiota.

McCarthy dijo que quería saber si yo era miembro de la "conspiración comunista"—cualquier cosa que sea lo que ello significa en sus razonamientos viciosos. ¿Por qué me preguntó a mí? El mantiene íntimas relaciones con J. Edgar Hoover, Jefe del Bureau Federal de Investigaciones (FBI). El FBI dice que tiene los nombres de todos los comunistas de los Estados Unidos. ¿Por qué no llamó por teléfono al Jefe Hoover y obtuvo una respuesta que para él sería autorizada? ¿Para qué interrogar a la víctima?

Por supuesto, la pregunta de McCarthy era capciosa. Sólo le interesaba utilizarme como parte en su lucha contra el "viejo Departamento de Estada de Acheson." Yo rehusé ser parte en este pleito.

El objetivo de McCarthy es estigmatizar al ex-Presidente Franklin D. Roosevelt y al Nuevo Trato como "comunistas". Se propone destruir hasta el último vestigio de liberalismo en los Estados Unidos. Si tiene éxito en esto, los republicanos "centristas" dirigidos por el Presidente Eisenhower, serán su próximo objetivo. Ya está insinuando que estos republicanos no son mejores que los demócratas del Nuevo Trato. Si tiene éxito en barrer toda la oposición política, McCarthy y sus compinches quedarán como los 'fuehrers' sobre las ruinas de la democracia de los Estados Unidos. La libertad estará muerta y habrá un régimen fascista en el poder mediante el terror y la estigmatización.

Como ciudadano, estoy haciendo lo que puedo por detener a McCarthy en su marcha hacia el fascismo. Rehusé contestar sus preguntas de acuerdo con las garantías de la Enmienda I de la Constitución de los Estados Unidos que garantiza la libertad de palabra, de prensa y de consciencia. He desafiado la prerrogativa de su comité de atisbar en las mentes de las gentes.

La cuestión, por primera vez en años, está en manos de las cortes para decidir. Apelaremos al Tribunal Supremo de los EE.UU. si es necesario, para obtener una decisión sobre si un demagogo puede estigmatizar a un ciudadano y diseminar el terror a través del país.

La cuestión es trascendental. Del resultado de éste, y otros casos similares depende el futuro inmediato de la libertad en los Estados Unidos.

INFORME SOBRE AMERICA LATINA

(El informe que transcribimos a continuación fué presentado a la consideración de la Convención Anual del CIO que se celebró recientemente en Cleveland).

América Latina

Durante el año pasado, las fuerzas totalitarias representadas por los peronistas y los comunistas, han tratado de fortalecer su dominio de la opinión pública y han tratado de influenciar a un considerable sector de la población de la América Latina con su anti-americanismo.

Dictaduras militares o totalitarias se mantienen firmes en Argentina, Perú, Venezuela y la República Dominicana. Por otra parte, la democracia se ha mantenido en Uruguay, Costa Rica y México. El único cambio significativo habido — esta vez mejorando — parece haberse efectuado en Colombia, donde un golpe militar desplazó a una semi-dictadura y aparentemente ha allanado el camino hacia un aumento de la libertad. En Cuba, bajo la dictadura de Batista, el movimiento obrero ha permanecido relativamente sin ser molestado.

Actividad del CIO

Durante el año, el Comité de Asuntos Latinoamericanos funcionó bajo la dirección general del Presidente Potofsky. El secretario Ernst Schwarz realizó un extenso viaje entre diciembre de 1952 y enero de 1953 durante el cual visitó al Brasil, Uruguay, Panamá, México, Chile, Bolivia, Perú y Colombia. En todos estos países se reunió con los dirigentes obreros y tuvo la oportunidad de obtener un punto de vista de primera mano sobre las condiciones.

En el mes de julio de 1953, el Comité ayudó en una huelga de trabajadores del CIO de 13 semanas de duración en la gran planta de la American Sugar Refinery Co. en New Orleans. A solicitud del vice-Presidente Ejecutivo Riffe y del Presidente de la United Packinghouse Workers Helstein, el secretario Schwarz se comunicó con lo trabajadores azucareros, marítimos y ferro-viarios de Cuba, así como con la poderosa Confederación de Trabajadores de Cuba, poniéndolos en contacto con los huelguistas. Los compañeros cubanos detuvieron los embarques de azúcar crudo para la planta en huelga, lo que hizo que la compañía decidiera llegar a un acuerdo. Poco después, nuestros propios obreros azucareros, a solicitud de sus colegas cubanos, ayudaron en un conflicto entre los trabajadores y una compañía americana rehusando manipular ciertas marcas de azúcar producidas por dicha empresa y exportadas a los Estados Unidos para refinar.

El Comité siguió el desarrollo de los acontecimientos en Bolivia y mantuvo contacto continuo con las autoridades de los EE.UU. y con los dirigentes obreros bolivianos. En una conversación con John M. Cabot, Secretario de Estado Adjunto para Asuntos Interamericanos de los EE.UU., una delegación encabezada por el Presidente Potofsky pidió enérgicamente un acuerdo a largo plazo con Bolivia para la compra del estaño para permitir a dicho país y a su pueblo a sobrepasar la actual crisis y a obtener un futuro mejor.

Durante el año cooperamos con distintas misiones enviadas por los Trabajadores del Acero del CIO a Jamaica para ayudar a los trabajadores de allí a obtener mejores convenios con Alcoa y su sucursal canadiense Alcan que operan en dicha isla.

El Comité prestó su ayuda a la Federación de Obreros de la Carne del Uruguay en su lucha contra las empresas empacadoras británicas y norteamericanas que habían cerrado sus plantas y después de reabrirlas rehusaban reponer cientos de trabajadores, muchos de los cuales eran dirigentes de la unión.

La Conferencia de "El Paso"

Desde los primeros momentos el Comité cooperó con el Departamento de Organización del CIO en la preparación de la Conferencia de El Paso (Abril 14-15, 1953) entre el CIO y la Confederación de Trabajadores de México (CTM).

Las dos organizaciones establecieron los cimientos para un programa de colaboración de gran trascendencia y a largo plazo sobre los problemas de las áreas fronterizas, así como en cuestiones pertinentes de política general. La delegación mexicana estuvo encabezada por Fidel Velázquez, Secretario General de la CTM; la delegación del CIO estuvo dirigida por R. J. Thomas y la misma incluía a Ernst Schwarz.

Los delegados nombraron un comité fronterizo para resolver las dificultades de carácter más local, por ejemplo; los trabajadores mexicanos contratados, los espaldas mojadas, y la discriminación; y además acordaron iniciar un estudio sobre las corporaciones de los EE.UU. en México, incluyendo una investigación comparativa en ambos países. El propósito final de este estudio será el desarrollo de programas de cooperación entre las Internacionales del CIO y las unidades obreras correspondientes en México para aliviar la descomunal diferenciación en los promedios de salarios y ayudar a los trabajadores mexicanos a elevar sus niveles de vida.

Publicaciones Latinoamericanas

Una de la importantes tareas que realiza actualmente el Comité es la publicación del Botetín del CIO en español. Esta revista se envía a un creciente número de organizaciones obreras latinoamericanas, a bibliotecas, escuelas y periódicos. Además, se envía regularmente a miembros del CIO de habla española y a grupos en los Estados Unidos, Puerto Rico y la Zona del Canal de Panamá. Muchos de sus artículos son radiados o reimpresos en periódicos latinoamericanos.

O.R.I.T.

El CIO es un afiliado activo de la ORIT, la Organización Regional Interamericana de la CIOSL de cuya Junta Ejecutiva son miembros Jacob S. Potofsky y David J. McDonald y Ernst Schwarz es uno de los Secretarios Adjuntos.

LA CONVENCION N

EN el inmenso Auditorium Público de Cleveland se celebró recientemente la Convención Nacional Anual del Congreso de Organizaciones Industriales. La Convención se pronunció en favor del concepto de que "lo que es bueno para la nación es bueno para el CIO", comenzando así un nuevo año de lucha por el mejoramiento de la humanidad tanto aquí como en el extranjero.

Los delegados de las uniones, pequeñas y grandes, prepararon un programa para una "gran cruzada humana, con la intención de adelantar los valores humanos y democráticos básicos que los hombres y las naciones libre aman" en un mundo en paz.

Las resoluciones y otras actividades de la Convención demostraron que el programa y la política del CIO para el año venidero reflejan el principio de que esta organización no es grupo estrecho de presión económica y que sus intereses se sirven mejor cuando sus miembros y funcionarios se dedican al bienestar general.

Armonía y trabajo activo

Esta fué una convención armónica en la que se trabajó activamente, llegando a los acuerdos por unanimidad por lo general, implementando los principios largamente establecidos en el desarrollo de las acciones del CIO.

La Convención reeligió a los funcionarios sin oposición. Además del Presidente Reuther, fueron reelegidos el Vice-Presidente Ejecutivo John V. Riffe, el Secretario Financiero James B. Carey y los ocho vice-presidentes.

Mejorar con la comunidad

La firme convicción de los delegados de que "lo que es bueno para la nación es bueno para el CIO" encontró su expresión tangible en el discurso post-elección de Reuther, que dijo:

"El CIO ha dicho desde sus comienzos que asumimos nuestras responsabilidades no como un estrecho grupo de presión económica, sino en base de que en la medida que trabajemos con hombres de buena voluntad en otros segmentos de nuestra sociedad libre, en esa misma medida podremos encontrar las respuestas a los problemas básicos, y que en realidad sólo podremos progresar si trabajamos por el progreso de toda la comunidad. . . .

"Creemos sinceramente que la lucha por la paz del mundo, la lucha por la libertad, están inseparablemente unidas a la lucha por la justicia social. No se puede creer en la paz, no se puede creer en la libertad, a menos que estemos dispuestos a luchar y a trabajar por la justicia social."

Al renovar la promesa del CIO de diseminar el unionismo, la convención declaró que un movimiento obrero "que merezca ese nombre" no puede ignorar el estado precario de los no organizados y debe responder a sus necesidades de una mejor vida y una mayor seguridad.

Ley Taft-Hartley

La Convención criticó al Presidente Eisenhower y a su administración por violar su promesa de revisar la Ley Taft-Hartley y demandó su derogación a pesar de la súplica del Secretario del Trabajo James Mitchell de que se contentara con enmiendas. No obstante, la convención aplaudió la opinión del Secretario de que algunas secciones son "verdaderamente peligrosas para los trabajadores, verdaderamente parciales y verdaderamente injustas", y de nuevo cuando prometió trabajar por un salario mínimo más elevado.

NACIONAL DEL CIO

Legislación

Se adoptó un programa detallado dirigido o lograr el fortalecimiento social, económico y militar de todo el país. Se acordó la oposición a cualquier impuesto sobre la venta con cualquier nombre que sea presentado porque grava más pesadamente a los que están en peores condiciones de soportarlo, y se demandó de la Administración que redactara un programa agresivo para ampliar la economía y asegurar empleos por la creación de poder adquisitivo adicional para los consumidores.

Acción Política

La Convención aprobó un programa "para integrar al votante familiar" en el programa del CIO de modo que "se asegure un buen gobierno en todos los niveles administrativos" para beneficio de toda la nación. El director del Comité de Acción Política del CIO, Jack Kroll, advirtió que "los viejos peones de los partidos" se esforzarán por ser nominados el año entrante con la esperanza de marchar a los cargos públicos en una ola de liberalismo.

Asuntos Extranjeros

Se adoptó un programa amplio para detener la agresión rusa y asegurar la paz sembrando las semillas de la democracia económica y social en los países "que no tienen", después de la solicitud del Secretario de Estado Dulles de que los trabajadores apoyen la política extranjera bi-partita. Reuther le aseguró que en la política básica "todos somos americanos y todos trabajaremos juntos sobre esa base".

Salario anual garantizado

El salario anual garantizado, descrito por Reuther como uno de los objetivos fundamentales de muchas uniones del CIO, fué aclamado como fuente de una tremenda estabilidad potencial para toda la economía nacional.

Expansión

Se prometió la ampliación de la campaña de CIO para organizar a los no organizados en una resolución que reafirmó promesas anteriores de traer el beneficio de la organización à los trabajadores en el Sur.

Los delegados se pronunciaron después que el Vice-Presidente Ejecutivo John V. Riffe, que es también director de organización y de los consejos, declaró que la mayor salvaguarda que pueden tener los trabajadores es "ingresar y construir uniones poderosas".

Mayor fortaleza y poderío

Riffe dijo que no estaba de acuerdo con los dirigentes de uniones que piensan que un tesoro lleno es la respuesta a sus problemas cuando hay perspectivas de lucha.

"La respuesta a la totalidad de nuestros problemas", dijo, "es organizar a los trabajadores no organizados, sin importar la industria en que trabajan. Esta es una responsabilidad que yo tomo muy seriamente y tengo la intención de trabajar muy estrechamente con todos Uds. para realizar esta tarea".

Pidió a los delegados que ayudasen al trabajo organizativo en todas las industrias, porque ello "da a vuestras uniones más fortaleza y poderío, más seguridad, cada vez que Ud. ayuda a organizar a un nuevo miembro en cualquier unión internacional afiliada al CIO".

LA VIDA EN UN CAMPO DE CONCENTRACION EN VENEZUELA

Impresionante documento humano del horror y la tragedia que viven centenares de venezolanos condenados a muerte, relatados por una de las víctimas del terror nazi en Venezuela.

(Desde la isla inglesa de Trinidad, a pocas millas de la costa oriental de Venezuela, trescientos kilómetros aguas arriba por el río Orinoco, de Ciudad Bolívar; llega a nuestras manos esta dramática narración. Escrita por un condenado a lenta y cruel muerte en las más espantosas condiciones, entre hombres agonizantes, enfermos, hambrientos, desposeídos de todo calor humano, víctimas de indescriptibles torturas y conviviendo en horrorosa promiscuidad. Son los sobrevivientes del INFIERNO VERDE de GUASINA. De allí salieron vivos por un milagro de la naturaleza: el río Orinoco ocupó con sus impetuosas aguas toda la Isla y el CAMPO DE CONCENTRACION hubo de ser trasladado a tierra firme. En las cercanías de Ciudad Bolívar se estableció el nuevo campamento de la muerte.)

En la Cárcel "Nueva" de Ciudad Bolívar, julio de 1953.

A los compañeros de Acción Democrática en Puerto España, Trinidad. Queridos compañeros:

Inesperadamente se nos presenta esta oportunidad de comunicación directa con Uds. Con premura escribo este relato y doy la lista de los que aquí sufrimos cautiverio en las peores condiciones que puedan imaginarse. Dispongo de poco tiempo, de ninguna comodidad y de escasez de papel. Dos compañeros enterados de lo que me propongo están haciendo una "requisa" entre todos los presos de los pedazos de papel que tengan en su poder. Es un artículo de prohibido consumo entre nosotros. ¿Cuál no lo es?

Muchas penalidades estamos padeciendo. No nos hacemos ilusiones, conscientes del terrible fin que nos espera. Pero no es la cobardía o el desaliento el móvil de esta carta. Hace tiempo que no tenemos contacto con el mundo exterior y es necesario que Uds. sepan y denuncien en toda América las tremendas condiciones en que vivimos y el trato que nos dispensa la dictadura de Pérez Jiménez.

Nos sabemos inermes, al arbitrio de la crueldad y el odio, expuestos a bárbaras represalias al conocerse nuestra comunicación con ustedes. Que no se detengan ante este u otro escrúpulo. No duden que las represalias caerán implacables sobre nosotros. ¿Qué cosas peores nos pueden pasar? Denuncien este crimen bárbaro que en nosotros comete la tiranía. Estamos decididos a arrostrarlo todo. Es nuestra contribución de hoy a la lucha por la liberación de Venezuela. Porque ningún suplicio nos hará claudicar.

Todos venimos de Guasina. En diciembre del año pasado la situación allí se hizo insostenible. Vivíamos en el fango. Los carceleros ocupaban la parte más alta del islote. Después se inundó toda la isla. Tuvieron que sacarnos.

El 17 de diciembre de 1952 más de 200 secuestrados fuimos trasladados, en las bodegas del mismo vapor "negrero" que nos trajo, "El Guayana", a Ciudad Bolívar. Llegamos el 18 pero fué en la madrugada del 19 cuando fuimos desembarcados.

La Cárcel Nueva de Ciudad Bolívar está a medio construir; tiene terminados sólo algunos de los pabellones. En uno de éstos, de unos 100 metros de largo por 20 de ancho, estamos concentrados, padeciendo toda clase de privaciones y enfermedades, 195 víctimas del terror conque la dictadura quiere amedrantar al pueblo. Pocos han tenido la suerte de salir vivos. Al Mayor Guillermo Peña Peña lo trasladaron a la Cárcel de San Juan de los Morros; al Doctor Roa González y a Eduardo González a la Modelo de Caracas; igual cosa nos dijeron de Ulpiano Rodríguez, pero éste salió de aquí agonizando. Sufría de una úlcera en el estómago. También hemos sabido que al Tte. Raul Oviedo Rojas lo pusieron en libertad condicional o fué expulsado al exterior.

Esta cárcel es un torturante centro de aislamiento. Está situada fuera de la población. Las mismas rejas del pabellón ocupado por nosotros han sido tapadas de tal manera, que no podemos mirar más allá de los 2,000 metros cuadrados a que estamos condenados a movernos. La comida es pésima, sucia y nauseabunda. La reparten luego de una ración diaria de PLANAZOS que están a cargo de la Guardia Nacional y de unos mercenarios que llaman la Guardia Civil de la Cárcel, integrada por los mismos sanguinarios y crueles carceleros que teníamos en Guasina, a cuya cabeza se encuentra el siniestro JESUS MANUEL PAYARES, ayudado en sus tareas de verdugo, para el insulto y maltrato constante, por ALFREDO MARTINEZ y un sobrino, un fulano BETANCOURT PAYARES quien funge como Alcaide.

No hay médico ni medicinas. Es terrible la situación. A comienzos del confinamiento aquí, que la dictadura quiso explotar como un cambio favorable, un mejor trato, etc., al sacarnos de Guasina; a lo que fué obligada por la inundación total del islote; se nos permitió escribir a nuestras familias unas pocas líneas archicensuradas. Todos pedimos medicinas; vitaminas, penicilina, inyectadores . . . los medios más elementales para defendernos de tantos padecimientos y enfermedades que venimos sufriendo. Sólo nos dejaron dos inyectadoras y dos agujas. DESDE HACE UN AÑO, no tenemos medios de esterilizarlas y conservamos algunos frascos de inyecciones. Pero a consecuencia de que nos vemos obligados a usarlas, más de 40 hombres están a punto de perder brazos o piernas, ya que en seguida se les han formado abscesos, y por la falta de atención médica se han desarrollado peligrosas infecciones. El caso concreto del Dr. Petro Quilarque Quijada, abogado, quien desempeñara la primera Secretaría en la Embajada de Venezuela en Bogotá, tiene un brazo perdido, igual que Gerardo Estaba. El obrero Angel Rivas perdió la pierna derecha. No terminaría si me detengo sólo en este horripilante aspecto que presentan mis cuarenta compañeros. Hacemos lo que podemos para ayudarlos. Muy poco. A nadie sacan al Hospital de la Ciudad cualquiera que sea su estado de gravedad. Casi motines hemos promovido pese a lo que nos cuesta. En medio de los PLANAZOS nos dan la explicación: son órdenes de Caracas.

A pesar de las desventajas que representa la continua situación política y social, ORIT ha fortalecido su posición. Tiene una administración eficiente y actualmente está firmemente establecida en sus nuevas oficinas en Ciudad México en donde recibe el apoyo moral de la poderosa Confederación de Trabajadores de México (CTM) y otras organizaciones obreras libres.

ORIT ha continuado su lucha contra las dictaduras en el hemisferio, particularmente contra Perón en la Argentina y contra sus esfuerzos por infiltrarse en otros países.

El Secretariado de ORIT publica un boletín de investigaciones, "Datos y Cifras", en inglés y en español. La edición inglesa se envía a un número de funcionarios obreros y a trade-unions así como a bibliotecas y establecimientos de instrucción superior en los Estados Unidos y Cánada y ha recibido alabanzas de universidades y del Departamento Hispánico de la Biblioteca del Congreso.

El Secretariado mantiene una colaboración continua con el Departamento de Organización del CIO en los asuntos concernientes a Puerto Rico, la Zona del Canal de Panamá y los trabajadores latinoamericanos en los Estados Unidos.

ZONA DEL CANAL DE PANAMA, PUERTO RICO Y LAS ISLAS VIRGENES

En la Convención del CIO se tomó en consideración a los trabajadores del Caribe en tres resoluciones cuyos puntos destacados son:

Islas Vírgenes

El CIO urgió que mientras no se conceda a las Islas Vírgenes el derecho a elegir su propio gobernador, se continúe la práctica de nombrar un gobernador nativo. El Sec. del Interior McKay anunció su intención de reemplazar al actual gobernador en el futuro cercano.

Zona del Canal

El CIO pidió a todos los trabajadores civiles de la Zona del Canal que se unan a la Local 900 del Comité Organizador de Empleados Públicos y Privados en un esfuerzo por eliminar "las barreras artificiales que se oponen al mejoramiento del nivel de vida.

La resolución se refirió a las prácticas discriminatorias bajo las cuales los trabajadores a promedio local reciben $1.50 menos por hora que los trabajadores a promedio de los EE.UU. realizando tareas similares.

"El CIO urge a todas las agencias de nuestro gobierno que tienen a su cargo la administración de la Zona del Canal que se ajusten a los principios americanos de justicia para que podamos merecer la buena voluntad de la gente libre en todas partes", terminó diciendo la resolución.

Puerto Rico

La Convención encomió el progreso del CIO y sus filiales en Puerto Rico, donde 80,000 trabajadores se han hecho miembros en los últimos cuatro años.

Se le concedió a la isla gobierno autónomo por un pacto con los EE.UU. el año pasado. La resolución felicitó a los puertorriqueños y a sus dirigentes, incluyendo al Gobernador Luís Muñoz Marín, "por sus realizaciones en el terreno de la democracia y gobierno propio".

A la legislatura de Puerto Rico y a su gobernador, se les pidió "que concedan los derechos necesarios para asegurar a los trabajadores puertorriqueños una justa participación en los beneficios del programa de industrialización de la isla.

contratos y convenios firmados con nuestros vecinos del sur, deben haber provisiones que garanticen salarios y condiciones de trabajo adecuados y el estricto cumplimiento de los convenios de trabajo y de la legislación social y laboral existente. Cualquier corporación o empresa industrial de los EE.UU. que no practique una política justa y razonable en la América Latina debe perder el derecho moral a la utilización y ayuda de los servicios y agencias del exterior de nuestro gobierno.

El CIO expresa su total simpatía con los esfuerzos de los pueblos de la América Latina para lograr su completa independencia, tanto política como económica, dentro de un marco de democracia y libertad. Los pueblos latinoamericanos tienen poderosas convicciones conducentes a cambios básicos en la propiedad de la tierra así como a cambios en las condiciones y prácticas de ciertas industrias. Creemos que nuestro gobierno debe ser tolerante de todos esos esfuerzos realizados por medios democráticos.

El CIO dió la bienvenida al establecimiento de la Organización Regional de Organizaciones de Trabajadores (ORIT), la organización regional de la CIOSL para las Américas. Creemos que ORIT se está convirtiendo en una gran fuerza para el adelanto de los intereses de los trabajadores libres y de la democracia a través del hemisferio.

EL SECRETARIO DE O.R.I.T. SE DIRIGE A LA CONVENCION DEL CIO

LUIS Alberto Monge, secretario regional de la Organización Regional Interamericana de Trabajadores de la CIOSL, es nativo de Costa Rica y ha laborado en las organizaciones obreras de su país natal casi desde la niñez. Fué uno de los fundadores de la Confederación de Trabajadores de Costa Rica, una de las mejores, más libres y más democráticas organizaciones de la América Latina. Después ocupó un cargo de responsabilidad en la OIT en Ginebra, lo que le proporcionó una oportunidad para ampliar su experiencia y considerar los problemas obreros sobre una base internacional. En diciembre de 1952 la Convención de ORIT le eligió secretario regional y a pesar de la breve duración de su administración, ha contribuído substancialmente a la consolidación y crecimiento de ORIT. El compañero Monge ha sido congresista en su país, de lo cual se siente justamente orgulloso. Monge trae a su trabajo todo el entusiasmo de sus todavía años mozos y tenemos grandes esperanzas depositadas en su actividad futura.

LUIS A. MONGE

Durante la celebración de la Convención Anual del CIO en la Ciudad de Cleveland el Secretario de ORIT pronunció las siguientes palabras:

Compañeros y amigos: Es para mí un gran honor y un gran placer, y por lo cual le quedo profundamente agradecido al Presidente Reuther, el tener la oportunidad de asistir a esta Convención del poderoso CIO, y dirigir algunas palabras a Uds.

Como Uds. saben, los países y pueblos de la América Latina viven actualmente en un período de gran turbulencia tanto en el campo político como en el económico. Siendo esto así, la solidaridad entre este gran movimiento y nuestra población adquiere una importancia aún mayor de la que tendría en otras circunstancias. Esta solidaridad es una de las armas en nuestra lucha común contra nuestros enemigos, contra los totalitarios y contra aquellos que tratan de dividirnos.

Hay faltaa de comprensión y hay falseamiento intencional entre los pueblos de la América Latina de las intenciones del pueblo norteamericano y esta solidaridad otra vez, es la que ayudará a disipar está incomprensión. Quiero que Uds. sepan que nosotros también comprendemos que lo que es bueno para los millonarios no es bueno para el pueblo norteamericano, y queremos que Uds. comprendan que lo que es bueno para esos señores poderosos casi siempre es igualmente malo para los pueblos de la América Latina.

Ahora tenemos que combatir a la reacción, y tenemos que combatir a estos explotadores hombro con hombro, y esta Convención me proporciona la oportunidad de expresar a nombre de nuestra organización interamericana, que nosotros por nuestra parte, al igual que Uds. por la vuestra, lucharemos por el fortalecimiento de la solidaridad entre las masas trabajadores del Norte y del Sur.

Organización y del Comité de Asuntos Latinomericanos del CIO en buscar una política común con la Confederación de Trabajadores de México (CTM) con respecto al problema de los trabajadores migratorios mexicanos. Cooperaremos plenamente con ORIT en sus esfuerzos por ampliar la política de cooperación cuyo ejemplo ha sido nuestras conferencias con las organizaciones sindicales mexicanas.

La participación del CIO en ORIT es aprobada plenamente por esta Convención, y creemos que mediante la solidaridad de todos los trabajadores en el hemisferio podemos defender la democracia, estimular el crecimiento de organizaciones obreras libres y ayudar a nuestros compañeros en su oposición a las dictaduras que los amenazan.

El CIO cree que a otras naciones se les debe permitir trabajar por su propio mejoramiento de acuerdo con sus propias ideas, pero estamos convencidos que no se pueden lograr mejoras mientras las organizaciones de los trabajadores y otras instituciones libres son suprimidas. Nuestro gobierno debe prestar apoyo y ayuda a las naciones que genuinamente pueden ayudar en la lucha por preservar y ampliar la democracia y la libertad. Sin embargo, los dictadores, por muy violento que sea su anti-comunismo, no constituyen valores en la lucha de la comunidad de naciones libres.

El Congreso de Organizaciones Industriales enfoca el asunto de los problemas internacionales a la luz de estos principios. Apoyamos totalmente la necesidad de fortalecer el poderío militar nuestro y de nuestros aliados de modo que el mundo libre pueda avanzar en paz hacia la tarea de elevar los niveles de vida y de crear y preservar las bendiciones de la democracia y de la libertad.

En un sentido más amplio, la cuestión de la guerra o la paz en la era de la bomba de hidrógeno está por encima de cualquier otra consideración. El armisticio en Corea pudiera ser sólo un respiro antes de que se desate una gran lucha en el mundo. Debe encontrarse alguna forma de eradicar el azote de la guerra de la faz de la tierra. Durante el período que se avecina, el CIO continuará prestando plena atención, en concordancia con las creencias de una sociedad libre, a las formas y medios con los que creemos que la meta fundamental de la paz mundial se pueda lograr.

TOMA DE POSESION DEL PRESIDENTE DE COSTA RICA

En ocasión de la toma de posesión del nuevo Presidente de la República de Costa Rica, Don José Figueres Ferrer, acto que se llevó a efecto recientemente en la Ciudad de San José, capital de dicha república, se cursaron telegramas de salutación entre este Comité y el Hon. Señor Presidente de Costa Rica.

He aquí el texto de los mencionados telegramas:

La toma de posesión del Presidente Figueres, elegido por el voto mayoritario del pueblo de Costa Rica libremente expresado en elecciones democráticas, abre un nuevo capítulo en la marcha de esta nación por la senda de la libertad y el progreso.

En estos trágicos instantes en que la libertad y la democracia están siendo escarnecidas en muchos países del hemisferio, el ejemplo de Costa Rica es un estímulo para la democracia continental.

Al testimoniar nuestra más sincera felicitación al pueblo de Costa Rica por su gran demostración de madurez política, aprovechamos la oportunidad para hacer nuestros más fervientes votos por el éxito del nuevo gobierno y porque el mismo se traduzca en bienestar y felicidad para los trabajadores y para todo el pueblo costarricense.

WHY I WOULD NOT COOPERATE WITH JOE M'CARTHY
By HARVEY O'CONNOR

A person who said he was Roy Cohn of the Senate investigating subcommittee phoned me June 30 from New York to announce that inasmuch as my books had been found in the State Dept.'s overseas libraries, the committee wanted to question me. He said this was equivalent to a subpena.

Late the next day I received Western Union telegrams by telephone, purporting to be signed by one Joe McCarthy, "confirming telephonic directions."

Being a citizen, Class I, of the United States, I ignored both the telephone call and the telegrams. This method of summoning witnesses is unique with the McCarthy committee, but it just isn't good enough for me.

Later I received another telegram announcing that my hearing had been postponed to "Tuesday, July 9," a rather unlikely date for 1953. This, so far as I was concerned, was also one for the birds.

"Tuesday, July 9" passed, and Joe was reported to have said that I was already in contempt of his committee. Later he decided to issue a subpena in valid form. This was for July 14.

Room 367 in the Senate Office Bldg. is a big gloomy chamber. There, at one end of a long table, are Joe and his boys. At the other end sit the witness and his lawyer. The session is private with no spectators allowed. Here is where they find out whether you are "cooperative."

The public hearing is held a half hour later in a much bigger room, with TV, radio, photographers, half a hundred newspapermen and a few hundred spectators. It is more human. The questions are the same.

I stated in both hearings that I declined to enter into a political discussion with Joe. The contents of my books, and my political beliefs, I said, were not proper subjects for congressional inquisitors. Under the first amendment to the Constitution, guaranteeing freedom of the press, Congress may not pass any law regulating the contents of books or the politics of their writers. Therefore these matters are outside the jurisdiction of a congressional committee, whose sole purpose is to study and prepare legislation.

Meddling with authors is also outside the powers granted Congress by the Constitution itself; in addition the McCarthy committee is strictly limited by the statute of Congress which created it. I also pointed out that if I had violated any law in my writings, I was subject to appropriate action by the proper law enforcement agencies, and Congress is not a law-enforcing agency.

I further explained that it was all news to me that copies of my books had been placed in overseas libraries. As I had nothing to do with their selection, obviously there was nothing I could testify to in that regard.

When I refused to answer Joe's $64 question on the grounds stated above, it was announced I would be cited for contempt. The Senate later voted to cite me for contempt of Congress.

The issue I presented is quite simple. It is this. Joe's politics is everybody's business. He runs for office. I happen to be a private citizen. I am not running for office. My politics is my own business. If anybody asks me politely, I am quite willing to state my political beliefs. But when governmental bureaucrats presume to force citizens to state their political beliefs, freedom is dead. As for my books, they are none of Joe's business. If he doesn't like them, he doesn't have to read them.

If the courts uphold the Senate citation, then I will go to jail for "contempt." But the first amendment will be in the doghouse with me. I will be in good company.

EDITORIAL PAGE SO THE PEOPLE MAY KNOW

THE DENVER POST

First Amendment Tester

HARVEY O'CONNOR, who is in Denver this week on his tour of a number of western cities, is making a courageous one-man stand for American civil liberties. He has been indicted for contempt of congress because he refused, on First Amendment grounds (NOT Fifth Amendment), to answer Senator McCarthy's question as to whether or not he was a Communist when he wrote certain books McCarthy's sleuths turned up in an overseas library of the state department. The first amendment, of course, is the one that guarantees free speech and freedom of the press.

O'Connor makes no bones about denying he is or ever was a Communist. But, in effect, he told the investigating senator that it was none of congress's business whether he was or not. He is not a government employe, received no return from the sale of his books to the government, and is not interested in any attempt of McCarthy's to get something on the state department under the Acheson secretaryship. Nor are the contents of his books or their effect at issue.

O'Connor is neither trying to win support for his case nor otherwise to benefit from his speaking tour before it goes to trial. He merely is steamed up over the issue and wants to discuss it with people and let them think about it for themselves. The courts must decide whether he was right or wrong in refusing to answer McCarthy, or whether the senator himself was out of line. And O'Connor hopes his test of the first amendment in such circumstances will go to the supreme court for the first time.

It is an important case that could affect any American citizen. O'Connor may lose, and he knows it. But he is ready to serve a jail sentence if he loses, and he figures even so it is worth the fight for a matter of principle.

You've got to admire a man with such strength of conviction. Not many of us either would or could make such a stand for the sake of what we believe in.

ON THE AIR

Trans-Atlantic Fizz

LESS than three hours after the Liberal Party's ruinously inept handling of its Party Political Broadcast, the television service threw in an extra item imported from the United States, a telefilm of Ed Murrow's dramatic attack on Senator McCarthy. The juxtaposition of these items was startling. On the one hand we had a tedious, amateurish platform hotch-potch of faded clichés: on the other, a brilliant and purposeful television "column" in which every line exhibited professional efficiency.

Senator Joseph R. McCarthy reviews the troops

The Liberals had nothing to say and employed five people to say it. A still photograph of Gladstone would have been more eloquent and stimulating than the five seated figures each repeating parrot-fashion a speech mugged up from the party's "Guide to Candidates." With a carafe of water, a green baize tablecloth and the Union Jack as props, this programme would have been indistinguishable from any Liberal meeting held in the suburbs of some Tory or Socialist stronghold. I expected the ordeal to close with a collection to cover an expected loss of deposits.

As a liberal (small L) I found the programme terribly disappointing. The party believes in Free Trade and Beveridge and might have won the approval of viewers (and listeners: the programme was heard also on the Home Service) with simple factual restatements of the basic principles involved. But no. In twenty minutes we were introduced to so many people that none could do more than identify himself, catch his breath and sign off. No speaker was before the cameras long enough to become more than a cipher or to say anything of interest. There is no safety in numbers, and the Liberals with their dismal record in recent elections should know this by now.

Worse still was the fact that the speakers appeared to have learned their lines by heart—as far as possible. One member of the panel had to be prompted: others raced through their material as if pursued by the foul fiend: and for the viewer the proceedings were as embarrassing as a music-hall failure begging for laughter.

I cannot understand the Liberal Party's or the B.B.C.'s objection to scripted television. Night after night we are confronted by people who recite their lines nervously, awkwardly and fearfully after taking great pains to master them. If the lines were themselves truly memorable there might be some excuse for this method of delivery, but they are seldom more than adequate journalese and it seems presumptuous in the extreme, to me, to put them over in the form of a Shakespearean soliloquy or a recital of the Gettysburg speech. The time and nervous energy consumed in learning these lines could be employed much more profitably in polishing them. Our interest in a radio talk is not marred by the knowledge that it is being read. After-dinner speeches are read, sermons and lectures are read: and I see no reason why television talkers should be expected to deny themselves the assistance of the printed word.

Ed Murrow's programme was entirely scripted. He read from a sheaf of papers, his head lowered over the text, his fingers leading his eye from left to right. Occasionally, near the end of a sentence, he looked up into the camera—and that was enough. Here, as in most talks, commentaries and discussions, we were dealing in ideas, and the speaker's looks were of no importance whatever. Nothing should be allowed to come between the delivered word and the viewer's reception of it, and the Americans seem to appreciate this.

But the success of this C.B.S. programme lay in its careful preparation rather than its easy, matter-of-fact presentation. Murrow's commentary was supported by numerous filmed insertions, chronicling stages in the McCarthy story. They were all short and crisp, cut to the bone, and every item spoke volumes. How fair a comment on McCarthy this was I am in no position to say; but caricature or portrait the impact on the viewer was devastating. McCarthy sneering, McCarthy ranting, McCarthy brow-beating . . . if this was McCarthy then McCarthy must be infinitely more detestable than we had supposed. The facts concern us only indirectly . . . but what admirable television!

My dear Ed.

You will have received so many letters in connection with your talk on the Wisconsin Senator that I rather hesitate to send you the enclosed.

On the other hand, you may like this small reminder of the immense interest we over here must feel in this whole affair. I also did a broadcast the other day in the Home Service of the B.B.C. along very similar lines.

Dear Reader.

3rd March, 1954.

First, a few brief comments on the Berlin Conference of Foreign Ministers. For some time I was one of those who supported the idea that Germany should be pledged to permanent neutrality. So did a good many Germans—they would not have to pay out millions on armaments and they might not become a battlefield in another war.

Mr. Molotov likes the idea. He wants both Germany and Austria to be neutral. But he made it very plain at Berlin that, to ensure German neutrality, foreign troops must be withdrawn from Germany, whereas, to ensure Austrian neutrality, they must be kept in Austria. I wonder why. Could it be because there is already an East German Communist army of over 140,000 men in the Russian Zone of Germany and there is no such army, or even the prospect of one, in the Russian Zone of Austria ? It could.

The idea of German neutrality was attractive when the Germans themselves wanted to be neutral. It seemed tragic, premature, absurd, at that time for Americans or Russians to encourage them to get into uniform again. But that was many months ago. Last year's general elections showed how very definitely Western Germany belongs to the West, and any suggestion of enforced neutrality would have been interpreted by the vast majority of Western Germans as an abominable betrayal.

Nothing at Berlin was more illuminating than Mr. Molotov's embarrassment when the Western ministers offered to accept every one of his demands on Austria in return for his agreement to withdraw all troops from that country. He once again said "no," and thereby strengthened their belief (which I expressed in the very first of these Letters) that the soldiers are now in control in Moscow. If the Austrian treaty were signed, there would no longer be a legal excuse to keep troops in Hungary and Rumania—in theory they are there only to defend Soviet lines of communication to Austria. Clearly the Russian generals have no intention of losing military control of Eastern Germany or Austria.

The best comment I have seen on the German neutrality issue was in Mr. Eden's speech at the end of last week's foreign affairs debate. "Was Germany to be neutral and disarmed? If so, who would keep her disarmed? Was Germany to be neutral and armed? If so, who would keep Germany neutral?"

The best we can now hope for is that the two systems will be able to exist in relative amity side by side. Such a solution could not be permanent, for Germany will not remain divided indefinitely. But it may last for some years, during which time the development of East-West trade may lessen suspicion sufficiently for German unity to be restored without war.

Meanwhile, I make one small forecast. The flow of refugees from Eastern Germany through Berlin has dropped from a peak figure of 3,000 a day to 200. Within a month the East to West migration will rise again in a way most unflattering to the Russians and their puppet government.

Nazism in Washington. For the moment the most disquieting city in the world is not Berlin, but Washington. There is nothing to choose between the methods once employed by Hitler and those employed today by Senator McCarthy. And public opinion polls all confirm that this ruthless, ambitious and iniquitous man has the support of a large section of American public opinion.

The verbatim report in the "Herald Tribune" of his cross-examination of General Zwicker and the T.V. display of his manners towards a less important victim were shocking and sickening, and they explain the dangerous reluctance of many people in this country, and far more in France and Italy, to vote for the rearmament of Germany under United States auspices. This is no longer a matter for the Americans alone; it is a threat to every citizen in the NATO countries.

I am told that the President is so disgusted by politics that he spends the least possible time at his desk. But the American people expected something very different when they sent him to the White House. In too many respects there is a similarity between Hindenburg and Eisenhower, as between their two Nazi leaders. And President Eisenhower has not the excuse of senility.

Nazism, we are told, is acceptable only to people long unaccustomed to think for themselves. The readiness of the Germans to obey orders without reasoning why has long been notorious; at first glance the Americans, so proud of their free enterprise, would seem to be in a very different category. But for nearly twenty years I have watched American methods of mass suggestion with growing disquiet. I don't believe that people who listen day after day to broadcasters telling them, in the same tone of voice and with the same appearance of sincerity, about the problems of under-developed countries and of over-developed stomachs can possibly retain that sense of proportion without which a democrat becomes victim of a demagogue.

For the moment—and one prays that the moment may be momentary—the Nazi movement in the United States is so strong that even the Army is not safe. Americans who condemn McCarthyism need courage, and that quality is being shown by many of their newspapers in very high degree. I should like to be sure that the British press would be equally courageous in similar circumstances.

Fresh Chance in Egypt. General Neguib's sensational return to power is a godsend to the British government, but I'm not sure how good they are at recognising these gifts of fortune. No other Egyptian leader has enjoyed such genuine and widespread public support for at least twenty-five years. Although the revolutionary council has lost much prestige in Egypt and the Sudan in the last two weeks, I believe it is still true that an Anglo-Egyptian agreement bearing Neguib's signature would be respected even by succeeding governments, and British military as well as political advisers have long insisted that an agreement is necessary.

Forgive me if I quote a sentence or two from my Letter of October 28th. "It really isn't good enough if the army which protects the Base against attack from outside Egypt needs a still larger army to protect it against guerrilla attack by the Egyptians themselves . . . There will be no improvement in Egypt's economic situation until after the signature of the Anglo-Egyptian agreement. Without an economic improvement no Egyptian government will be secure. It is to our interest to strengthen the position of the men who will sign the agreement. These three obvious facts lead to an obvious conclusion—that we cannot afford to discuss indefinitely whether our technicians who are to remain at the Base wear mufti or uniform . . . We should surely have learnt by now that the spirit in which a treaty is signed is even more important than its wording."

We gave Neguib nothing with which to quieten the more impatient members of the Revolutionary Council. So they turned him out. Fortunately, public opinion and part of the Army have been strong enough to bring him back again. Shall we now learn the lesson that we should strengthen Neguib, as our best possible defender against men much more extreme than he?

An agreement would have been signed weeks ago if some of the Tories had not revolted against it. Having thus contributed to Neguib's temporary overthrow, they now argue that this event proves they were right, and that you cannot do a deal with so unstable a regime. Since General Zahedi has been brought to heel in Persia, they want to adopt the same policy of waiting and seeing in Egypt. But Mossadik had the wrong kind of support in Persia; Negiub and the rather brash young officers who made him their leader have the right kind of support in Egypt.

Meanwhile, because we have neither the courage to make an agreement nor the desire to become involved in a very expensive guerrilla war with the Egyptians, we submit to a lot of minor persecutions with a patience that gravely lessens our prestige in the Middle East. Merchant ships passing through the Canal are subjected to scandalous interferences with their lawful trade. The Egyptian authorities try to prevent officers of the Royal Navy from visiting other British ships at Port Said without some Egyptian pass. The existing tension between Great Britain and Egypt is a menace to the whole Middle East, and it is quite time that we took steps to end it.

Capricorn Concord. Let me end this Letter on a more cheerful note. The Capricorn Africa Society—President, Colonel David Stirling of Special Air Service fame—has at last issued its first appeal for membership. And its supporters include some of the most influential men of all races in Central and East Africa. These men pledge themselves to work for a common citizenship and absolute equality of treatment between those who acquire this citizenship. Only thus, they argue, will it be possible to develop peacefully the territories between the Limpopo River and the Abyssinian border.

Here is something that is not imposed by the British government or sponsored by well-meaning and woolly-minded people with no personal responsibility for making it work. Tshekedi Khama, ex-Regent of the Bamangwato; Lord Portsmouth, President of the Kenya Electors' Union; the leaders of the Hindu and the Ismaili communities; the leader of the Africans in the Tanganyikan Legislative Council; the President of the Southern Rhodesia African Farmers' Union; the President of the Tanganyika European Council—such are the men who have realised that there must be racial partnership.

This Capricorn Africa Society is something that has grown out of the soil of Africa. It is perhaps the most encouraging development in East or Central Africa since the end of the war. For that reason, although I don't normally urge you to support any particular organisation, I let you know that its London address is: 9 Upper Grosvenor Street, W.1, and that the minimum subscription is £1.1.0 a year.

Dear Reader.

17th March, 1954

In my last Letter I drew your attention to the increasing similarity between the methods used by Hitler and those used by McCarthy. Let me now draw it to the remarkable change for the better that has taken place within the last ten days.

I am proud that an old friend and colleague, Ed Murrow, should have done so much to bring that change about. In my praise of American journalists who have stood out against American Nazism, I omitted those of them who speak rather than write. A grave omission, for there are at least half-a-dozen radio commentators in the United States who are head and shoulders above anybody in this country—and that, of course, is the other side of this business of sponsored broadcasting which I claimed, and still claim, is one of the principal causes for American cynicism and consequential predisposition to totalitarianism. When I first met Ed Murrow nineteen years ago, he was the shy and quiet-spoken secretary of the Institute of International Education; now, thanks mainly to the microphone, he is the deserving recipient of one of the highest salaries in the United States.

As star commentator of the Columbia Broadcasting System, he devoted an entire television programme to a devastating demonstration of McCarthy's methods of investigation. To put itself right with the law, the Columbia Broadcasting System offered McCarthy a chance to reply, but he preferred to answer back in the form of an interview with a supporter on the smallest of the three American networks. Ed Murrow has contributed more, perhaps, than any foreign minister to sound and sane international relations; he has never made a better contribution than this one programme, even though it was designed primarily for an American audience.

Other blows are raining on McCarthy's head. The Republican Party's choice of Vice-President Nixon to reply to Mr. Adlai Stevenson's critcisms was a nasty knock to McCarthy's hopes of free radio time in which to produce one of his swashbuckling replies. The new recommendations for Congressional enquiries proposed by Republican Senate leaders should do something to restore those enquiries to their former valuable and demoncratic status.

He is in trouble for seeking special treatment by the Army for his two ineffable assistants, Messrs. Cohn and Shine—and even McCarthy might have had some doubts had he been with me in Munich just after their visit there last year, and had heard the remarks of the Germans about them. Lastly, several important Republican Senators have followed the example of Senator Flanders in attacking McCarthy for splitting the party.

The Senator for Wisconsin is tough and clever, and he has a large following. But the people of the United States are notoriously volatile. Dare one begin to hope that McCarthy will fade out, as Father Coughlin and other demagogues have done before him ? The answer, I believe, is in the affirmative.

Advance in Kenya. Mr. Oliver Lyttelton is no longer a very good Aunt Sally for members of the Labour Party. It is a very remarkable achievement to have produced, in Kenya of all places, the first multi-racial government in Africa south of the Sahara. The invitation to African and Indian ministers to become, in effect, Cabinet Ministers is an acceptance of the principle of partnership which would have led the Europeans to kidnap the Governor less than a decade ago. They still might do so, of course, for many of the White Highlanders are furious with Lyttleton, Erskine, Baring, old Uncle Michael Blundell and all.

At the time of writing, it is very doubtful whether the Africans can be induced to accept. Theoretically, they have good reason to claim that their participation should not be limited to one minister and two Under-Secretaries in a country where they out-number the Europeans by 150 to 1. But in the long view, their gain is the greatest. The late Dean Inge once remarked that "democracy is only an experiment in government, and it has the obvious disadvantage of merely counting votes instead of weighing them." And those of us who most detest racial discrimination of the Mem Sahib type must nevertheless agree that the weight of African votes (if they had them) would still be very light indeed. The Africans would be most unwise to refuse to pass through this first genuine gap in Kenya's colour barrier.

The Europeans are offered two consolation prizes. One, their new Ministers will be in charge of Departments, and the influence of the Colonial Office (which to them is only a shade better than the hated Fabian Society) will thus be diminished. Two, they will have a member in the temporary War Council, the only other members of which are the Governor, the Deputy Governor and the Commander-in-Chief. This meets a claim which the Europeans have been making with increasing intensity for many months. Even so, the fact that the majority of their elected members should have accepted the whole plan is a tremendous tribute to the ability of Michael Blundell.

His success is all the more startling when you remember the anger with which the Europeans learnt that "General China" was not to be executed, but was being used to get his colleagues to surrender. Half that angry outburst would have been avoided if the facts of life had been explained to Michael Blundell by General Erskine and Sir Evelyn Baring. He would not then have been taken by surprise, and have felt, as his fellow-Kenyans felt, that their anxieties, hardships and dangers were being overlooked in the interests of expediency. He would probably have come to the conclusion that there was no other way in which the Emergency could possibly come to an end.

And I'm sure that there isn't. Kenya faces the same problem as Malaya—it is fighting a war without uniforms. A policeman, and still less a soldier, cannot tell whether a peasant coming along a jungle path is carrying on his lawful business or is planning to cut him down the moment his back is turned. And one cannot destroy the whole tribe of Kikuyus in order to be on the safe side—there could be no surer way of spreading the doctrines of Mau Mau to other tribes. Therefore the risk must be taken sooner or later of returning to normal relations with the Kikuyu, even though many of them may have taken at least one of their beastly oaths. The more and the sooner their leaders can be persuaded to surrender, and the ordinary tribesman can be brought back into ordinary work, the smaller the risk will be.

Had Michael Blundell been faced with such arguments before the "General China" experiment, he and almost all his colleagues would doubtless have agreed to it. But it was a shocking piece of bad management to undertake it without any kind of consultation with the Europeans, who must pay the heaviest price if it fails.

Victory for Vietminh? "The Times" recently surprised me with a headline. "Forging Viet Nam Independence," it ran. The verb was changed, in later editions, to "framing," so I gather the sub-editor was placing himself rather in the shoes of a blacksmith than in those of a banker. But the headline was painful in its accuracy, for the relations between France and Viet-Nam are counterfeit. Now that independence is being granted to Bao Dai, the French themselves recognise that they are granting it to a man who is almost certainly took weak to retain it.

Could the French have made a genuine settlement with Ho Chi-minh shortly after the war? Could we have kept Burma in the Commonwealth? Could the Dutch have reached a partnership in Indonesia? Such discussions are futile for nobody knows the answers. But the devastating fact now is that, if Viet Nam fails, the French have nothing much to offer to Viet Minh, or to Communist China who supplies Viet Minh with most of its arms.

Diplomatic recognition of the Peking government? This would be a small bribe to the Chinese when they see some prospect that a war in Indo-China, which Viet Minh cannot win on their behalf, may be won by political victories in Saigon and Paris. The Chinese know as well as anybody that a Communist victory in Indo-China would have tremendous repercussions in Siam, Malaya, Burma and even in India and Indonesia.

Only the American government could pay a price which would make it worth the Peking government's while to seek a settlement in Indo-China. Next month's Geneva Conference will therefore be the greatest test yet made of the readiness of the United States to assume world leadership. Hitherto demands by her allies have mostly been for cash or goods, and the Americans have made financial sacrifices to meet these demands with a generosity we are often very slow to recognise. But to save South-East Asia they may be called upon to sacrifice their deepest-rooted prejudices. There may be no other way of saving South-East Asia, one of the richest areas of the world. Also there may be no other way of winning French ratification of the European Defence Community treaty. Even so, I fear that the French are under-estimating the depth of those prejudices in Congress.

Berlin Echo. One reader reproaches me, I think rightly, because I have not written more about the Berlin Conference. He claims, I think wrongly, that events in Berlin were "more important than any war in the East." But in one respect the Western Powers hesitated—to their own very great disadvantage—to test Mr. Molotov's good-faith. In my last Letter I pointed out how embarassed the Soviet Foreign Minister had become when they accepted all his demands on Austria on condition that he would agree to the withdrawal of all foreign troops from that country.

Why did they not make an analogous offer in the case of Germany? The "Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung," a well-known right-of-centre paper, made this comment: "Many people wonder why Dulles, Eden and Bidault refrained from asking: 'Would you agree to free elections in Germany if we were to abandon E.D.C.?' If Molotov had refused to answer, it would then have been clear that the Russians do not want a free Germany."

To most of us it seems clear enough as it is, but it was a blunder not to make it still clearer to the people of the two Germanies, who are now expected to wait patiently, for months, years or decades, until the rest of the world realises that they are determined sooner or later to be reunited.

Yours,

Vernon Bartlett.

Dear Ed:

It isn't often that anybody can get a chuckle out of "fussin' and feudin'" these days, but read what George Dixon has written as a part of his column on the Washington scene, which appeared in the new Washington Post - Times Herald this morning.

have a kind of diplomatic panacea which is equally good for Korea, Formosa, Indo-China, Iran and Guatemala, must lead to confusion.

Just as the courts prefer to decide no more than they have to decide in a specific case before them, indulging not to often in the pleasures of the obiter dicta, so it should be in the conduct of foreign policy. Be empirical and specific about the problem that has to be dealt with, not general and universal for all problems that might in some way resemble it.

We have had one Truman Doctrine, which worked very well in Greece and Turkey, and did nothing but raise totally false expectations in China. Let us not now add still another installment to the unending story of verbal diplomacy by saying that we now have a Dulles Doctrine.

The long experience and high competence of the Secretary of State do not need, and can only be cluttered up by, an overproduction of words.

GRIN AND BEAR IT — By Lichty

"Progressive education has gone too far, Mr. Sneedby, when I have to raise MY hand if I want to say anything to the class! . . ."

Washington Scene . . . . . By George Dixon

I TRIED to rise and Schine the other morning but I was so confused by the McCarthy hullabaloo I didn't know whether I was coming or Cohn.

At this debilitated point, I received a phone call from a fellow who said Senator Joe would do well to let up n the Defense Department for nonce and turn his sleuthing eyes upon the Department of Agriculture.

"It's specializing in infiltration," the caller intoned hollowly.

I said I did not think that such a solid American as Secretary Ezra Taft Benson would countenance infiltration. The fellow told me to look at page 435 of the new Congressional Directory.

I did, and found this listing: "Infiltration Specialist—George W. Musgrave, 4205 Four Mile Run Drive, Arlington, Va."

I became so upset that I forgot I am no longer permitted to talk uncouthly. "My goodness, livings, mercy me!" I cursed luridly, "who'd have ever thought such a thing of old Ez? He not only permits infiltration; he pays an agent to do it."

WELL, I couldn't spring G. David Schine from the Army to handle the investigations, so I had to do it myself. Donning a Cossack costume and making up my voice to sound like an MVD agent (McCarthy Vasn't Dere), I telephoned the Agriculture Department and asked for the infiltration specialist.

They located him in the Soil Conservation Service. "Aha!" I cried. "He's conserving soil so he'll have enough to go underground!"

The infiltration specialist turned out to have a pleasant voice, but this didn't lull me. My bride sounds sweetest when she is being most poisonous.

Very cagily I asked the infiltration specialist about his background. He said he was a Cornell graduate and had been with the Agriculture Department since November, 1929. I asked him how long he'd been working on infiltration and he said ever since he got the job.

"But they just gave me the title this year," he added.

THIS WILL probably make Roy Cohn feel frustrated, but the infiltration specialist said he is not specializing in infiltrating Government with Communists, but in making water sink into the earth.

"One of this country's greatest agricultural problems," he explained, "is to get more water to infiltrate the land. This can be done in numerous ways—by slowing down the movement of water on hillsides so more of it will get a chance to sink in; by crop rotation; by denser vegetation, and by covering plowed fields with straw mulch."

"Thank you very mulch," I said, and hung up bitterly disappointed.

I tried hard to distract attention from the Army. I'll bet Secretary Stevens isn't even grateful.

THE REV. Frederick Brown Harris, chaplain of the Senate, receives hundreds of invitations to open this and that event with prayer. Some of the invitations require the services of an interpreter.

The other day Dr. Harris received a bid which made him wonder if his friend, Sen. Burnet R. Maybank of South Carolina, was an apparition or real.

The invitation asked the Senate chaplain to pray at services commemorating Col. Michael Novats, a cavalry drillmaster in Washington's Army. It closed with this paragraph:

"Having died in the defense of Charleston, S. C., Senator Maybank has kindly consented to speak."

REP. OAKLEY HUNTER of California dug up this one:

"A House investigating committee found a warehouse filled with Spanish-American War saddles, water troughs and harnesses for horse-drawn ambulances, dating from 1879. It has taken up valuable storage space for the last half century at the Jeffersonville, Ind., Quartermaster Depot."

AN ACT OF FAITH

MANY people call it an act of courage, but I prefer to think of it as an act of faith.

I refer to what Edward R. Murrow did on television the other night to help the American people to understand the evil of McCarthyism.

There was a relaxed determination, a quiet confidence about this act of courage that made it an act of faith.

Murrow has been learning firsthand about the faith of the American people for a long time. As the conductor of the "This I Believe" series on radio he has delved deeply into the moral quality of the individuals who are America. He knew that all Americans, whatever their race or their religion, aspire to honesty and truth. What he did against the charlatan and the demagogue, against the Texas money-changers crowding our Temple of Democracy, he did because of his own faith and the faith of and in the American people he knows.

The word humility has been lately defiled in the market place of television. But real humility is easily recognized; it is revealed by our own intuition.

Murrow humbly performed his act on television that night as though his spiritual life depended upon it. Here was no know-it-all, no wise guy making a political speech, no ambitious, brash young politician trying to win power with the help of an advertising agency and a makeup man. "There are no tricks in plain and simple faith."
